"Kansas City has been a warm, generous host, and we thank its citizens and businesses for 68 years of support," Larry D. Case, national FFA adviser and chairman of the national FFA board of directors, said in a statement.

"However, the convention has outgrown its current facilities, and attendance keeps rising."

The FFA, formerly the Future Farmers of America, has convened annually in Kansas City since 1928 and will meet there through 1998. FFA and Louisville signed a seven-year agreement. The FFA estimates it will attract 50,000 people and that its business will be worth $20 million a year.

The Alexandria, Va.-based organization also will move its headquarters, the National FFA Center, to Indianapolis, FFA spokesperson Jennifer Conway said.

The announcement at a news conference Thursday capped an intensive effort by Louisville officials to attract the convention. In June, four FFA officials strode into the Kentucky Fair & Exposition Center to inspect the premises. Three hundred civic and agribusiness leaders from across Kentucky welcomed them with a standing ovation, and a bugler from Churchill Downs heralded them with a call.

When other FFA representatives returned last month, local officials — knowing the keen interest of FFA members in forestry — flew them in helicopters over Bernheim Forest and Jefferson Memorial Forest.

A couple of days later, the FFA's entourage was entertained during the PGA Championship in a chalet near Valhalla Golf Club's 17th hole. It was able to see how Louisville handled a big event involving shuttling tens of thousands of people.

Ron Scott, Louisville's convention bureau president, suggested the reason for Louisville's selection was that the fairgrounds have more than 1 million square feet of air-conditioned space under one roof.

Pageant offers financial assistance

The Miss Manhattan/K-State Scholarship Pageant is more than just a chance for contestants to go to a bigger pageant.

It is also an opportunity to earn money for college.

"Scholarship money is a big factor," said Susie Stanfield, co-executive director of the pageant. "Some girls enter because they want to be Miss America. For every one girl who wants to be Miss America, there are three others who are in it for the scholarship money."

The winner of the pageant will not only be on her way to the Miss Kansas Pageant, but she will also receive $500 in scholarship money. The runner-up will get $100.

"The more attendance we have, the more money we have for scholarships," Stanfield said. "We had two sponsors drop out this year due to complications. The ticket money goes to support the cost of the pageant and to the scholarship fund. If we get a larger audience than expected, we can add more money to that fund."

The contestants take on a lot of work for the pageant and are in it for more than just recognition and scholarship money. Friendships and building self-confidence are also major benefits of the competition, contestant Deana Teske said.

"I am very excited," she said. "I have been here three years, and I am really looking forward to it again. People don't realize what goes on here. It is not a cut-throat competition. We are making friendships, and we are supporting each other. It has done so much for my confidence and career."

The pageant, which is set for 3:30 p.m. Sunday at the Wareham Opera House, costs $7 for adults, $5 for children 6 to 12, and children under 5 get in free.

"It's a good show. It's a good family event," Stanfield said. "There's no bad music and no bad language. It's the wholesome image you think of when you think of the Miss America Pageant."

U.S. Defense Secretary William Perry, in Washington, called Aziz's comments rash and totally unacceptable.

"U.S. military forces do not pose a threat to Iraq," he said.

But, noting that American forces moved into the area in force only after Iraq invaded Kuwait in 1990, Perry said, "If there is any challenge to those forces, we have the responsibility to protect them. The United States will take all necessary and appropriate actions."

Aziz, in a rambling commentary run by the official Iraqi News Agency, likened the recent turmoil to the period six years ago, just before Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. He said Kuwait's rulers were in evil collaboration with America in conspiring against Iraq's people.

He did not say if Iraq would take any military action to counter the Kuwaiti move.

The past two weeks have seen Saddam undertake his biggest military venture since the end of the 1991 Persian Gulf War, sending troops Aug. 31 into the north to help Kurdish allies rout a rival Iranian-backed Kurdish group.

With that victory, Saddam effectively wiped out the Kurdish safe haven the United States and its allies established at the end of the war, giving him control of the north for the first time in five years.

In response, the Americans showered cruise missiles on Iraqi air-defense sites in southern Iraq last week and expanded a southern no-fly zone set up to protect Shiite Muslims.

The expanded zone makes it even more difficult for Saddam to move his troops around the region without attracting notice from the U.S.-led air forces, which fly scores of sorties every day.

Cats hope to upset Wolverines

"They're tough to beat, but we're going to try to give them a run."

• TERRY DRAKE
CROSS COUNTRY COACH

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

With a little bit of luck, the K-State men's cross country team has a chance to win the Jayhawk Invitational Saturday in Lawrence.

At least Coach Terry Drake said he believes they do.

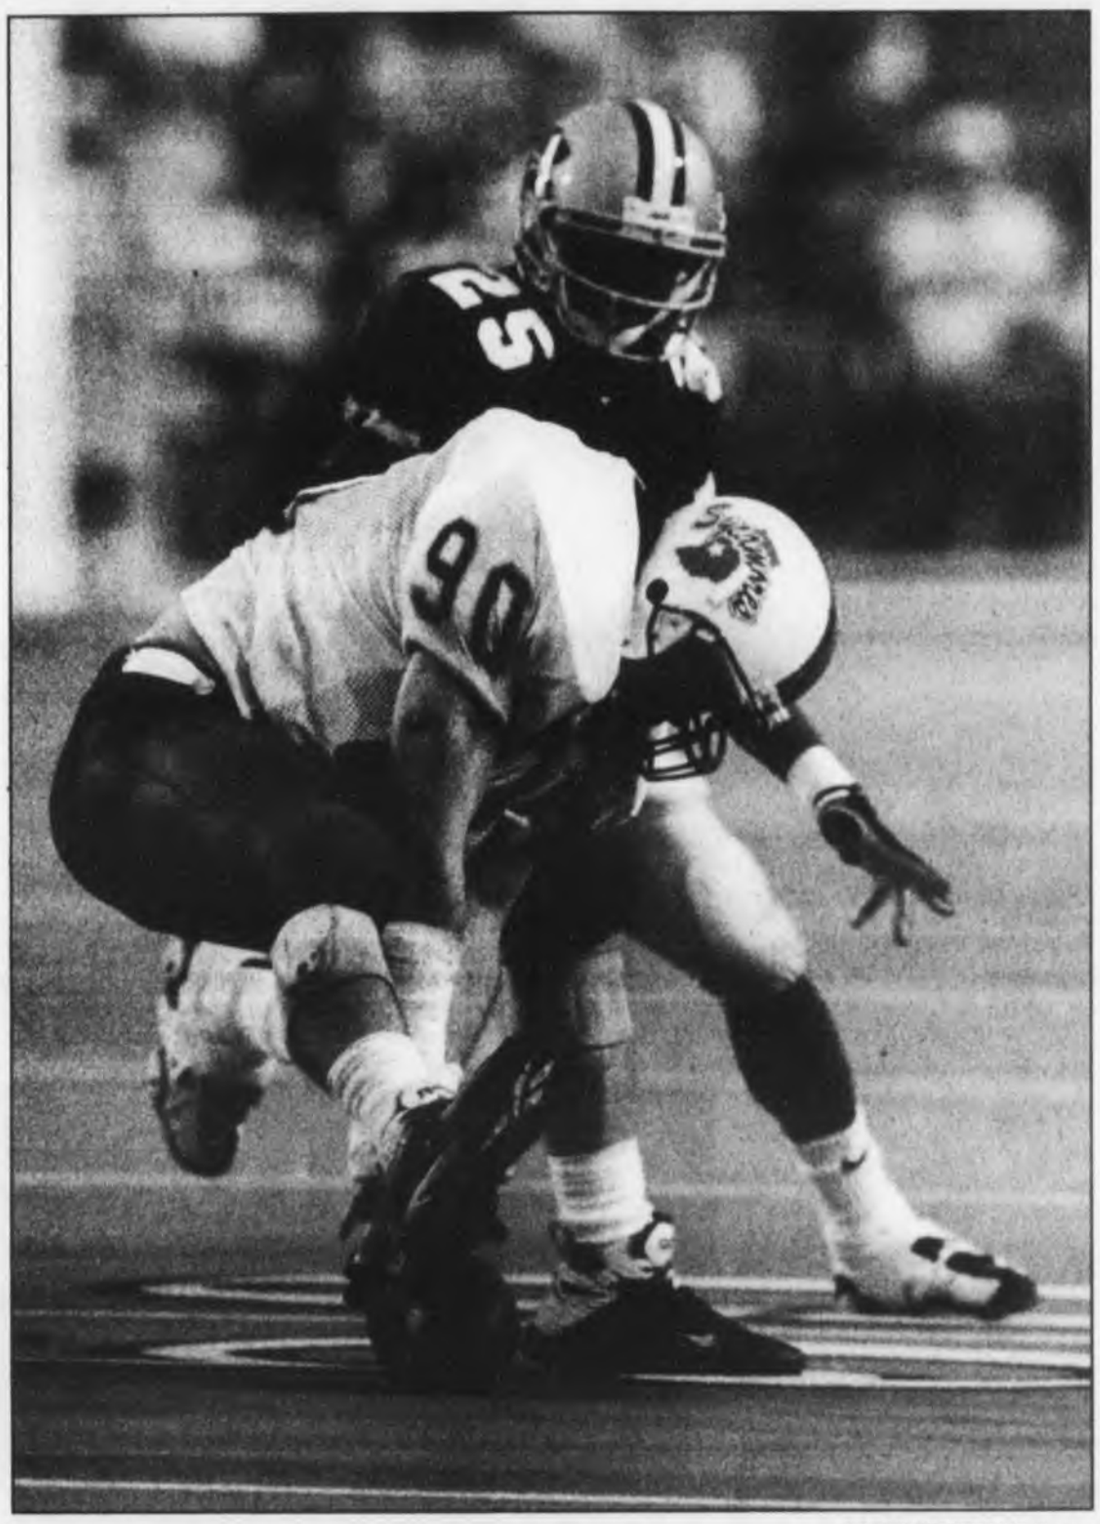
On the men's side, K-State will face Michigan, a top-five team; Kansas; nationally-ranked Southern Illinois; and Navy. But Michigan is the team Drake said he's worried about.

"They're tough to beat," he said, "but we're going to try to give them a run. Out of their top three runners from last year, they've only got one back."

Michigan will also be the Wildcats' toughest opponent on the women's side Saturday, Drake said.

Three Wolverines earned all-American status last season, and all three have returned.

Missing from the women's team will be freshman Kathryn Wolfram, who is out because of a strained hamstring.



On the men's side, Chris May might have a tougher race than usual. He has been battling a bout of food poisoning this week and took Thursday off from practice to regain some of his energy. But Drake said it's hard to tell how that day off might affect May's race.

"He could come in and have a great race because he has so much energy," Drake said. "You never know."

The Wildcats will have an advantage over their Wolverine opponents — the course. The course is the same site that is used every year for the state high school meet. With so many runners on the team from Kansas, and most of them who competed at the state meet, Drake said knowing the course helps.

"They're pretty excited," he said. "So many of them have run that course, and that always helps. They usually run better."

An additional incentive to run well at the Jayhawk Invitational is that it will be the site of the national championships in two years, Drake said.

ANDRE ANDERSON, K-State wide receiver, rushes upon Indiana State's Chris Libaire after a fumble by Wildcat Mike Lawrence during Saturday's game at KSU Stadium.

Cincinnati comes to town with confidence

TODD STEWART
sports writer

Quarterback Brian Kavanagh has no illusions.

"They're going to come in here very confident, and after last year, who wouldn't?" Kavanagh said.

Last year's game saw Cincinnati blow a 14-point lead and cause six K-State turnovers, and the Wildcats come from behind to beat the Bearcats on a 22-yard touchdown reception by Kevin Lockett on the final play from scrimmage. Final score: K-State 23, Cincinnati 21.

Coach Bill Snyder said the Cats might have underestimated Cincinnati the first time around, but do not look for it to happen again.

"They've got skilled, skilled athletes," Snyder said. "Each game they play, they'll get better and better."

K-State stands at 2-0 after a 21-14 win against Texas Tech and a 59-3 win last Saturday against NCAA I-AA Indiana State.

Cat players said the team has seen much improvement since its sluggish season-opening win.

"The first week, I don't think we jelled together," cornerback Chris Canty said.

"We just got to go out and turn it up every week."

Helping in that department was the Cats' ability to play reserves substantial minutes last week, all of which, Canty said, improves the entire team.

"Our second team came out and played a good game, and that was our focus," Canty said. "You can give them all the reps in the world in practice, but they need experience."

And experience is just what true-freshman quarterback, and now second-string quarterback, Jonathan Beasley got.

Beasley saw his first action in a Wildcat uniform and added to that a 57-yard touchdown pass to reserve receiver Troy Hackney.

CAT

▶ Don't miss it! The kick off for the K-State vs. Cincinnati football game has been changed from 6:30 p.m. 11:30 a.m. The game will be regionally televised live on Fox Sports Network.

With the Cats facing a third-and-7 early in the fourth quarter, Beasley took the snap and rolled left, before a rush forced him back right.

Then he unleashed the bomb to a wide-open Hackney.

Beasley said the choice to throw the ball Hackney's way was an easy one.

"I saw him smiling. I saw his arms waving up and down," Beasley said.

"I had no choice but to throw him the ball."

Beasley said getting playing time in the game against Indiana State will help him if he is forced into action again this week against Cincinnati.

"It gets all the pre-game nerves out," Beasley said.

But for now he's just the back-up, and the rest of the job goes to Kavanagh, who said the Cats will be ready for the Bearcats.

"We've got a lot to prove to them."

No more sound in some commercials for Texas' JumboTron

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUSTIN, Texas — Loud, booming commercials from the University of Texas' JumboTron video screen have been silenced after complaints from football fans.

The university announced Wednesday that three of eight video-board sponsors — Taco Bell, Coca Cola and the University Federal Credit Union — have agreed to dump the sound from their commercials.

The five other advertisers had not been contacted, the school said.

Fans at the Longhorns' first two games, against Missouri and New Mexico State, booed the commercials as they drowned out the sound from the UT band and blared over the crowds at Darrell K. Royal-Memorial Stadium.

The $3.5-million video screen in the south end zone shows game replays and commercials. Game Day Sports Programming Network of Tulsa, Okla., gives the school free use of the screen in return for all the advertising revenues generated by the commercials.

Fans have said they are pleased with the replays but said they can do without the loud commercials.

"The fact that the JumboTron is even up is an amazing feat," said Chris Plonsky, Texas' associated athletic director.

Plonsky said the biggest problems came during the victory over Missouri, the first time the screen was used during a game.

"It was literally like walking into a play without a script. I hate to use a game as a guinea pig, but we just needed to get the first week out of the way."

Plonsky said by the New Mexico State game, video-screen operators were more in sync with the UT band.

Even so, Bill Little, a men's athletics spokesman, said Taco Bell first approached the school about changing its ads after hearing the fans' booing during the New Mexico State game.

Cats to face UMKC in home opener

"You have no idea how important a good fan following really is. It's just like the football team. It's nice when the fans are there.

• JIM MOORE
VOLLEYBALL COACH

JOHN BERGGREN

The K-State volleyball team will make its first appearance at home this weekend in the Commerce Bank Wildcat Classic.

The Cats open play today at noon with the University of Missouri-Kansas City and South Carolina at 7 p.m. Saturday. They will wrap-up action with Eastern Michigan at noon and Boise State at 7 p.m.

The volleyball team is treating this weekend no differently than any other.

"I think it is the most overrated thing in college athletics to treat home games more important than away games," Coach Jim Moore said.

"You have to win on the road as much as winning at home."

The team is hoping for good fan turnout in the home tournament.

"We're always happy to play at home," Moore said. "We had a great fan following last year. We hope to have even better this year.

"You have no idea how important a good fan following really is. It's just like the football team. It's nice when the fans are there. They make you feel important."

The competition won't be anything for the Wildcats to look past this weekend.

"Eastern Michigan beat Georgia, which is a real nationally known school," Moore said.

"Boise State went five games before losing to Oregon, and South Carolina was in the NCAA Tournament last year."

VOLLEYBALL COACH Jim Moore signals an attack to his team during a match against Nebraska last season in Ahearn Field House. The Cats begin their home campaign today at noon when they face UMKC. They will also play South Carolina at 7 tonight before finishing up with Eastern Michigan at noon and Boise State at 7 pm. Saturday.

Chiefs' fans can expect dark clouds thanks to lack of offense

Everything seems to be going right for the Kansas City Chiefs and their fans.

Yes, the Chiefs have opened the season with a perfect 2-0 record. Yes, Derrick Thomas and the defense have been dominating. And yes, the kicking game has greatly improved with the addition of Pete Stoyanovich.

But there is trouble. Yes, my friends I'm telling you there's trouble, right in Kansas City. Lots and lots of trouble with a capital T, and that rhymes with 00.... OK, enough of the show-tune lyrics.

Shane
MCCORMICK

But there is a cloud overlooking the Chiefs right now.

That cloud is a lack of offense.

The Chiefs' defense has been carrying this team so far this season. Pretty soon, Derrick Thomas and Neil Smith's back are going to get tired.

After two weeks of the regular season, the Chiefs ranked next to last in team offense, averaging only 247 yards a game.

Now for a really scary thought. The Seattle Seahawks, the Baltimore Ravens and the New York Jets are all ranked ahead of the Chiefs in total offense. The New York Jets!

The first problem for the Chiefs is the quarterback situation.

Yes, Steve Bono has looked good at times, but he has also looked bad . We all remember Bono's awful performance in the playoffs last year, when he completed 11 of 25 attempts with three interceptions.

In the Chiefs' first game, Bono's performance was much better. He completed 21 of 37 attempts and two touchdowns.

In their second game, Bono completed 11 of 19 attempts with just one touchdown — a step down but still an average performance.

The problem is that in each game, Bono never went more than 200 yards. In each game, he completed only two passes over 25 yards. The Chiefs have got to go to the long ball more. They have to open up their offense.

"Someone needs to knock Marty Schottenheimer over the head and wake him up. Leave Marcus Allen on the bench, and let Greg Hill run the ball."

But to do that, they need to establish a solid running game. That leads me to the Chiefs' second problem.

In two games, the Chiefs haven't had a rusher rush for more than 50 yards.

There's an easy solution to this problem. Someone needs to knock Marty Schottenheimer over the head and wake him up. Leave Marcus Allen on the bench, and let Greg Hill run the ball.

When I say let him run the ball, I don't mean give him six or seven rushing attempts a game.

Against the Houston Oilers, Hill rushed six times for nine yards. Against the Raiders, Hill rushed seven times for 50 yards, averaging 7.1 yards a carry.

Greg Hill should be the man for the Chiefs. They should be giving him the ball 20-25 times a game. If given that chance, Hill would produce. He would give the Chiefs a much-needed 100-yard rusher.

I would bet the Chiefs would win just about every game they produced a 100-yard rusher. A better rushing attack would open up the passing game, producing more yards and points for the Chiefs.

But once that passing game is opened up, the Chiefs will need someone to catch those long balls thrown.

This brings me to the third area of concern for the Chiefs.

They need a playmaker on the offensive side. They need someone who can consistently come up with the big catches and the big plays.

I think they have one in Tamarick Vanover. The question is "Can he do it consistently?" One thing the Chiefs need to do with Vanover is pull him off punt-returning duties.

They need to do this to lessen the risk of injury to Vanover. Returning punts is a easy way to suffer a big injury. The Chiefs need Vanover's services more at the wide-receiver position than they do returning punts.

Vanover is a big receiver who can go across the middle, catch the ball and take the big hit. He also possesses surprising speed, which allows him to get by defenders for the long pass.

The question isn't whether Vanover can do the job. It is whether he can do it on a consistent basis. If he can, and if the Chiefs can open up their offense, it will be a very productive season.

And there might not be any trouble with a capital T, right in Kansas City.

SGA turns its focus to safer housing

BREE BISNETTE
staff reporter

Ensuring that rental housing in Manhattan meets safety standards will be the goal of the Student Governing Association's Safer Housing Week, which is scheduled to be Sept. 23 to 27.

There are measures that can be taken against housing hazards, which threaten the health, safety and welfare of the occupants, according to a Student Senate resolution read by Student Body Vice President Aaron Otto.

Information in the form of brochures and speakers will be available on campus during the designated week.

Although the purpose of Safer Housing Week is to assist all residents who rent in Manhattan, it is geared toward students, said Otto, who was one of the three students who, along with the Cabinet members, proposed the awareness week.

It will assist students in learning the specific requirements for rental housing.

"The students are the ones who usually rent the basement apartments," Otto said. "What people don't realize is that there's certain laws that say you have to have so many inches on basement windows for fire safety and so on."

Some students may not confront their landlords on safety issues for fear of conflict, but students should not be concerned with this, said Otto.

"Landlords usually cooperate with these inspections," he said. "Think about it. If you were a landlord and somebody died in your basement because they couldn't get out of your window, you'd be looking at a multi-million-dollar wrongful-death lawsuit."

The proposal to have Safer Housing Week will be voted on at the subsequent Senate meeting next Thursday.

Measures are also being taken by SGA to receive input from the student body about its concerns involving the University.

SGA's web page will be updated by mid-October to include a site for students to provide comments on SGA or other issues relevant to the association.

Pages will also be added featuring every SGA committee, committee members and e-mail addresses to provide students with a means of communication with SGA constituents.

we used as back-up, blew up," Pierce said. "It was the same exact problem. We haven't been able to isolate the exact problem, and right now we don't know if they are related."

Parts to repair the equipment had to be shipped from Illinois.

Because of the size of the parts, they had to be shipped on commercial airlines.

They were due to arrive in Manhattan late Thursday night.

"Hopefully, we'll be back on the air by midnight. That's the best-case scenario," Pierce said. "We're hoping that it's just isolated that, as luck would have it, both parts decided to go."

Pierce said the phones at K-Rock had been ringing all day with people calling in to find out what happened.

He said today was a bad day to be off the air, because the Dave Matthews Band rescheduled its Friday night concert in Kansas Ciy, Kan., and K-Rock was not able to inform its listeners of this event.

"I've been with this station since we came on the air in October of '90, and we've never been off the air for this amount of time. I think maybe the longest is three hours that we've actually been off-line," Pierce said.

City, K-State plan for more bike paths

ANDREA COREY
staff reporter

Preliminary plans have been made to develop more bicycle lanes in Manhattan, including the area surrounding the K-State campus.

The KSU/City Bicycle Master Plan, which is intended to help bicyclists get around town faster and safer, was presented Thursday night.

According to the plan, some traffic lanes would be altered or expanded to allow for bicycle lanes.

Proposals also include paths between residential areas and commercial areas.

Terri Musser of Bicycles &, which is based near Chicago, and Mark Moore of Landplan Engineering in Kansas City, Mo., were consultants on the plan.

Musser said the team hadn't determined the cost of the proposed plan.

"That's something we haven't done, won't do and don't want to do," she said, citing numerous reasons why the team doesn't make estimates on the plans.

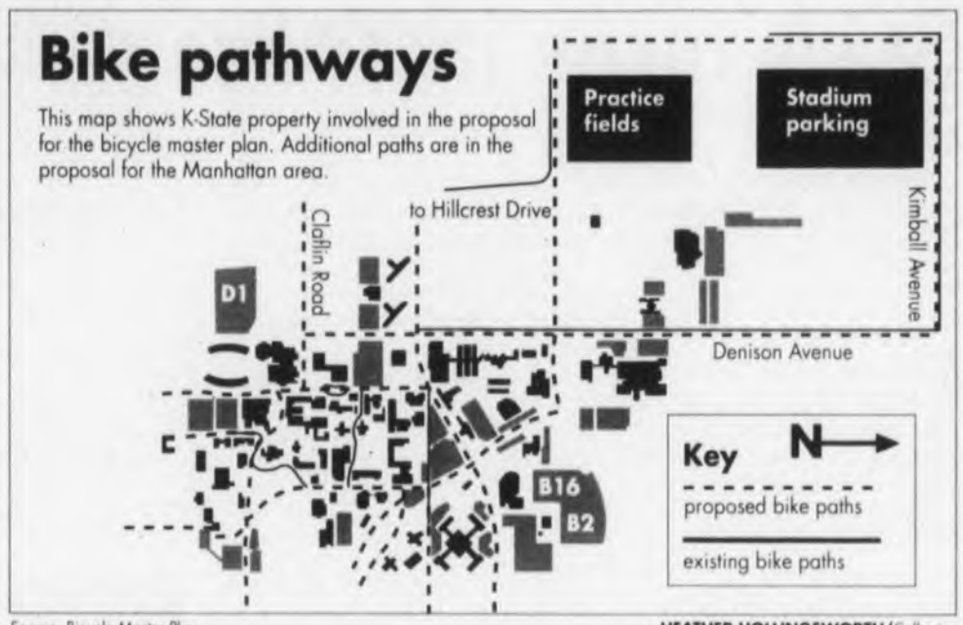
She said the most difficult thing about estimating the cost of projects is there are too many variables in constructing.

So far the money to hire the consultants, $26,000, came from city/University sales-tax funds. These are taxes K-State pays Manhattan because K-State is now part of the city of Manhattan.

Other funding for the new paths can come from parking services or from a federal program, Intermodal Surface Transportant Efficiency Act, which was started in 1991.

ISTEA helps fund bicycle-use promoting plans, and is up for re-approval by Congress in 1997. If ISTEA is re-approved, there will be funding for projects like Manhattan's.

Ron Fehr, assistant city manager, said he thinks the plan won't happen overnight but is still a priority.



"I think there are a lot of these subtle-type changes we can implement," he said.

Musser said she thinks this plan will work for Manhattan, mainly because it is a university town.

"With limited parking, it's just easier and faster to get around on bikes," she said.

University Landscape Architect Mark Taussig said the best benefit of the plan is that it means less cars on campus. A parking space for a bicycle costs $200 to make and maintain, while a parking space for a car costs $3,000, he said.

Changes include getting rid of small, hidden parking racks and replacing them with larger areas where bicyclists can park.

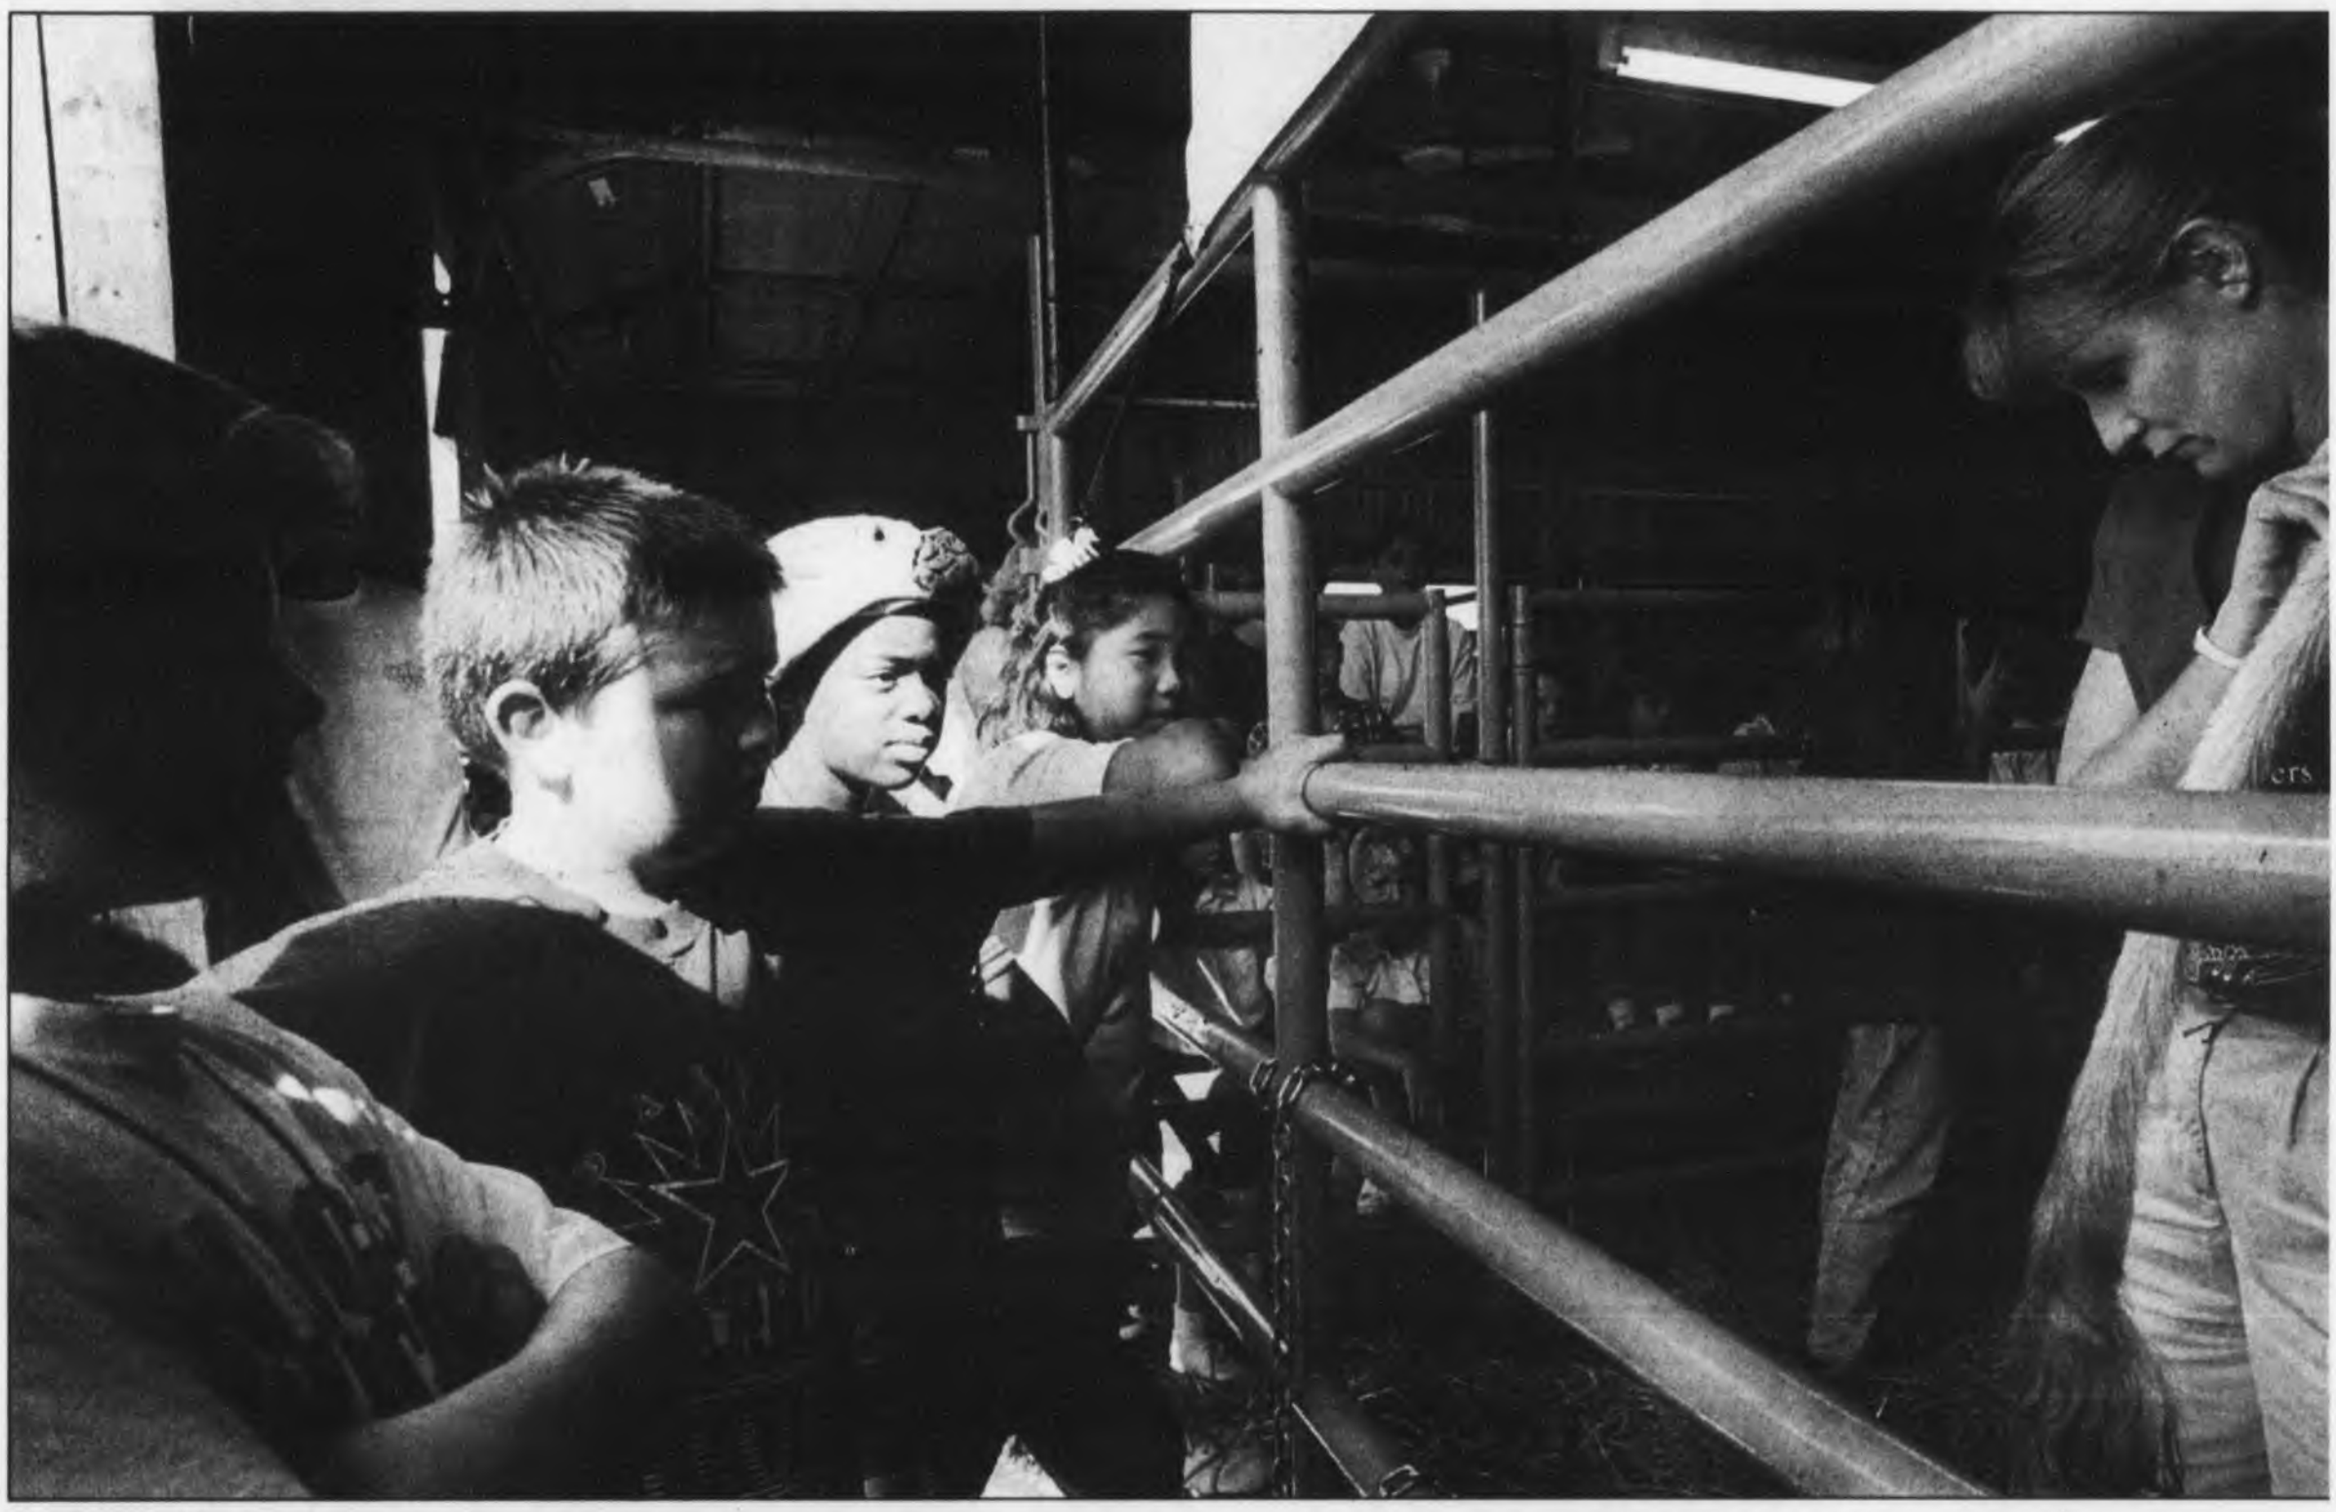
STATEFAIR



THE KANSAS Veterinary Medical Association Exhibit at the Kansas State Fair was host to the K-State Veterinary birthing unit.

The birthing experience

K-State exhibit offers a chance to see life enter the world, drawing a crowd at the Kansas State Fair

Story by Debbie Wood Photos by Cary Conover

AS CHILDREN WATCH, Dr. Dawn Bush palpates a heifer to feel the position of the calf inside. The children had mixed responses to what they were seeing. "That's why you wear a glove," Bush told them.

The smell of peanuts, popcorn and cotton candy linger in the air. Cows bellow in the background. Piglets grunt with satisfaction after a full meal. Children scramble to be the first on the rides, and sweethearts win prizes for their sweeties.

Every year, this scene plays back in Hutchinson as the Kansas State Fair comes into town. Like an old habit, the usual exhibits draw crowds of people from all over Kansas. One of these exhibits is the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine birthing unit. The exhibit has been a favorite at the fair for about seven years.

This year, Rodney Christmas, assistant professor and food animal coordinator, helped monitor the activities. The birthing unit brings pregnant animals in for the public to see, and maybe if they're lucky, to watch one give birth.

"One of our goals is to educate the public as far as farm animals go. As times have changed over the years, people are getting more removed from the farm. A lot of kids have never seen the birthing process or been around animals period.

"The other thing is, we do quite a bit of education for the veterinary students as far as dealing with the public and answering questions," Christmas said.

The unit has eight sows, one rabbit, three ewes and 10 cows. The cows belong to farms in the Hutchinson area, and once they give birth, they are returned. The sows and ewes were purchased from the K-State Department of Animal Sciences and Industry, and the rabbit belongs to a woman at the fair.

Christmas said there is a constant flow of people.

UNDER THE WARMTH of a heating lamp, a 2-day-old piglet sleeps.

"Usually, when we deliver a calf, there is about 350 to 400 people in there at one time. About 300,000 people come to the fair, and I bet every one of them comes through the birthing unit at least twice," Christmas said.

A variety of spectators come to the birthing unit, and many of them are retired farmers who miss being around animals.

Some people have been brought up on farms, but their children haven't, and then there are the city folk who may not have much of a farm background.

While the unit stays open until the fair is over, the senior veterinary students care for them. The students are responsible for assisting during the birthing process, general upkeep of the animals and answering any questions people might have.

Jill Krzycki, senior in veterinary medicine at K-State, said her favorite part in helping out at the birthing unit is farrowing, when a mother pig gives birth to her babies.

At 10 a.m., a sow started giving birth to nine piglets. The whole process took about three hours, with a piglet coming about every 25 minutes.

"Well, I had never seen a farrowing before, so that was great, and also working with the children and people," Krzycki said.

A question was raised as to whether there was too much stress on the animals having so many people around while they are trying to give birth.

"Most of the animals have farrowed or calved before, but any birthing process is a big deal. You always have to be prepared if something goes wrong. That's why there are so many of us here," Krzycki said.

ABOVE. JEFFREY DANIELS and Jill Krzycki, both seniors in veterinary medicine, share a moment of laughter as Dr. Bush determines the dialation of the heifer's cervix.

LEFT. BY LOOKING at the teeth, Bush is able to tell the heifer's age. She determined it was about 5 years old.

Couple charged with perjury for trying to protect teenager

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SYRACUSE, Kan. — The parents of a teen-ager convicted of killing a convenience-store clerk were charged with trying to cover up the crime to protect their son.

Jason Maune, now 16, pleaded no contest July 23 to felony murder in the October 1995 death of Jon Mayers, who was shot while working at Love's convenience store in Syracuse in western Kansas.

Maune is serving at least five years at the state youth center in Topeka.

The boy's parents, Matt Maune, 39, and Becky Maune, 41, were charged in Hamilton County with two counts each of perjury and one count each of obstruction of official duty. They appeared in court Wednesday and were released on $15,000 bond each.

Hamilton County authorities said the Maunes lied to Sheriff Dan Levens and Mike Keller of the Kansas Bureau of Investigation about the whereabouts of the murder weapon, a .25-caliber handgun, when they were questioned last December and again in March.

The charges accuse the Maunes of somehow getting the gun to a family friend from Colorado in order to hide it. Matt Maune later retrieved the gun, according to the charges.

The gun eventually ended up in the hands of a Liberal attorney representing the parents and was turned over to Keller about a month before the boy's conviction, Hamilton County Attorney Moran Tomson said.

Perjury and obstruction each carry sentences of five to seven months in prison.

Postal worker prevents injury, treats canines to biscuit feast

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian

JOHN GRIESHABER, a U.S. postal employee, takes a break from his routine to give a little attention to Kylee, a Brittany collie. Kylee belongs to Scott Rhodes of Manhattan.

CECILY RODRIGUEZ
staff reporter

John Grieshaber is no stranger to the startling bark of a neighborhood watchdog after being in the postal service for 13-1/2 years.

Grieshaber, a U.S. postal carrier in Manhattan, found a solution to get him past the furry, four-legged obstacles in one piece: He gives them dog biscuits.

The postal service provides its mail carriers with pepper spray as protection against vicious dogs, but some carriers prefer alternative methods.

"I actually got the idea from Wayne Bratton, who used to deliver mail to my house," Grieshaber said. "One day I saw him carrying dog biscuits and, well..."

Grieshaber has been doing the same ever since.

Although he and the other carriers pay for the dog biscuits out of their own pockets, it's a small price to pay to keep the neighborhood pooches peaceful.

"I figure if he's chewing on a bone, he won't be chewing on me," he said.

So far, Grieshaber hasn't had any objections from owners.

"I think the owners are a lot more appreciative of the way I do it. In fact, some owners even approach me to get a biscuit for their dog. Of course, not all the dogs take them. Some don't like the brand I have," he said.

Grieshaber keeps the box of treats in his truck, filling his pocket before he starts his route.

"There's one dog who gets excited as soon as he hears the door to my truck slide open," he said.

Marshall Hawkinson, a former resident on Grieshaber's route, said, "I didn't even know he did it until one day my girlfriend and I were walking our dog and as we passed him, he handed our dog a biscuit. I thought it was great. My dog definitely agreed."

When Grieshaber runs out of biscuits he has some dissatisfied customers.

"I have regular customers who actually go into anxiety attacks if I don't have them," he said.

Grieshaber's philosophy is simple.

"The idea of life is to be creating communities wherever you go and, well, now I can't get through north Manhattan without someone always greeting me," he said.

Habitat for Humanity to sponsor rock concert

DANA LEHNER
staff reporter

The final brick will be laid Sunday as part of Manhattan's Habitat for Humanity International's Building on Faith Week, which ends Sunday.

The international organization's Celebration of Praise and Prayer will be at 4 p.m. Sunday at the Douglass Community Center, 901 Yuma St.

"It is simply an attempt for people who are interested in what we are doing to come out and celebrate," Harris Waltner, chairman of the church-relations committee, said.

Not only will the program include a look back at the Manhattan Habitat's 1996 accomplishments, but it will also take a look ahead into its plans.

The plans will be outlined by the president of the Manhattan chapter, Marcia Schuley.

"We really feel this will be a sense of camaraderie in that we have moved two families into homes this year," Schuley said. "We want to do that for two families every year."

Habitat for Humanity receives donations and volunteer work to build houses for needy families.

Two homes have already been built in 1996, and originally this event was to be the ground breaking for a third.

"We were hoping to have a ground-breaking for our third house," Waltner said.

"However, it didn't work out and we had some complications. Instead we decided we would have an informal get-together to look back on the accomplishments this year."

Adding to the celebration will be contemporary Christian singer Joseph Mills, folk artist Ann Zimmerman and the Pilgrim Baptist Men's Choir.

Mills, who records for Urgent Records of Austin, Texas, has been asked to perform along with the other artists from the Manhattan area at the program. Mills had a recent release, "If You Could See What I See," rise to No. 21 on the Christian music charts and just released his latest song last month.

"I am really excited to be a part of the celebration," Mills said.

"Habitat for Humanity is a growing organization, and people are really becoming aware of it. It is great to be a part of Habitat as well known as it is."

Zimmerman has performed all across the nation including New York City, Boston, Alaska and the Midwest, and her music has a mix of original, traditional folk and popular songs of the 1930s and 1940s.

"Zimmerman is an interesting talent," Schuley said. "She is really great, and she has made a CD as well. We also have the Pilgrim Baptist Choir who is really good. We have a real mix of talent."

Contemporary folk and acoustic music is also part of Zimmerman's show.

Zimmerman has also made appearances in coffee houses, on television and has performed on the radio across the country.

Manhattan's Pilgrim Baptist Choir will be performing traditional gospel music at the program.

The program is free, and the public is invited to take part in the celebration.

"We're hoping in October we can have another ground-breaking," Waltner said.

"Since we weren't able to get one right now we are just going to celebrate what we have done this year."

Professor's collage exhibit on display

▶ The Columbian Theatre exhibit will be on display until Sept. 17. Hours for showings are Monday - Saturday, 9 a.m. - 5 p.m., and Sunday, 1 - 4 p.m. For more information, call (913) 456-2029.

DEBBIE WOOD
staff reporter

Many artists speak from the heart when composing artwork.

Lynda Andrus, assistant professor of art, has an exhibit featured at the Columbian Theatre in Wamego.

The exhibit, "Designed for Today," uses indoor scenes as the focus for the pictures.

"I am most influenced by interior environments that are a direct representation of those who reside in these dwellings," Andrus said.

These collages use a technique called photo printing. The artist takes a picture, prints it and then draws on the print with colored pencils. The effect plays tricks on the eyes because the mind believes it's a photo, but the colored markings lead the viewer to think it's a drawing.

The pictures are also filled with texturized fabric and Chinese patterns.

"Textures and colors dominate my art, much like the Impressionists. I use fabrics and pieces that have already been worn and that people have used before, and then reassemble them into my pictures," Andrus said.

Andrus also uses images from her home in her work. Two of them feature her son and daughter asleep in their beds surrounded by a collage of fabric and photo prints. It's as if Andrus has nestled them in bed by creating a cozy fabric collage surrounding them in the middle.

In another collage was a closet full of men's clothes and a close-up photo of a brown pair of shoes. Andrus said the viewer sees a portrait of her husband through his closet.

In "Solitude Wanting Relaxation," paisley fabric surrounds a photo print of a bathtub in the left-hand corner. The serenity and use of cool-toned blue colors could lead the viewer to believe the artist longed for a little rest and relaxation.

Andrus also uses specific colors in her artwork that blend with the actual objects in the pictures. Dark green, mauve, pink and blue are the most common.

Center seeks recruits to teach reading

CECILY RODRIGUEZ
staff reporter

The Adult and Family Learning Center is trying to recruit volunteers to help illiterate adults. September is National Literacy month.

This is one of the two times a year volunteers are recruited and training workshops are conducted.

The center is currently accepting registration for volunteers.

Beginning Sept. 25, volunteers will attend the first of six training workshops. They will learn how to teach adults to read, write, improve math skills and speak English as a second language.

Candie White, tutor training coordinator, said, "I teach them how to work specifically with adults, because it's different than working with children or young people."

Joyce Scritchfield, a first-year tutor, was paired with a 73-year-old student and said the progress has been slow but worth it.

"Seeing Trudy come out of her shell and really become part of society has been so wonderful," she said.

> "Seeing Trudy come out of her shell and really become part of society has been so wonderful."
> • JOYCE SCRITCHFIELD, FIRST-YEAR TUTOR

The center provides services that go beyond the three Rs. It offers computer classes, GED preparation classes and English-as-a-second-language classes. And the students aren't the only ones who leave the center with valuable lessons.

"I first realized what I was doing was making a difference when a man I was tutoring came to me and was so excited because he could read stories to his grandchildren — something he wasn't able to do for his own children," said Jacque Staats, a six-year tutor at the center.

White said more than 100 students attend the center every year and although the classes are free, they are not open to just anyone.

"Our services are for under-educated adults who have no other avenues, not college students," White said. "K-State is a great place to recruit volunteers."

The Adult and Family Learning Center, at 801 Poyntz Ave., is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday and from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday.

Eight of the 20 volunteer spots remain open for the workshop beginning Sept. 25.

Students interested in volunteering can call White at 587-2820.

"The workshop is really rewarding for anyone to take," Scritchfield said.

"No matter where you go later in life, you can always make a contribution," she said.

Students eager to jump online for conversations, blind date experiences

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

Computer chatting is common at universities across the world. K-State is no exception.

The computer labs are filled daily with students who are eager to get online. Some students will spend more than five hours a day talking to people they have never met.

Ralph Wasmer, consulting manager of Computing and Network Services, explained the difference between chat rooms and e-mail.

"Chat rooms are for more than one person," he said. "Whereas e-mail conversations are one-on-one."

Wasmer said he would be surprised if many people actually begin dating after meeting on the computer, especially if they live in different cities.

"Dating is a social thing," he said. "You can't go to the movies through the Internet."

Wasmer finds more people get into trouble than anything else.

"When you don't know who it is you're talking to, you can get pretty hot," he said. "Sometimes people get more than they can handle."

Patrick Wheeler, junior in social work, said he spends approximately three hours a day on the Internet. He said he has a lot of fun meeting new people.

"You can find people that have the same interests as you," he said. "They don't know who you are, and you don't know who they are, but you can talk about what you have in common. It's really cool."

Wheeler met a girl from Southern Illinois University with whom he keeps in touch. They originally met in a chat room on the World Wide Web, but eventually began talking in one of the private rooms.

"We seemed to have a lot of similar interests, so we just kept writing to each other," he said.

Amy Betz, junior in business marketing, mainly talks to people she already knows. She said it gives her a chance to talk to people she might not have seen during the day. However, there is one person she has met on the computer and really enjoys talking to.

"There's a guy from Australia that I keep in touch with," she said. "But it's not a lover thing or anything."

Betz said she was just checking her mail one day, and he had left her a message. She explained that she doesn't mind writing to him, because it's like a free long-distance phone call.

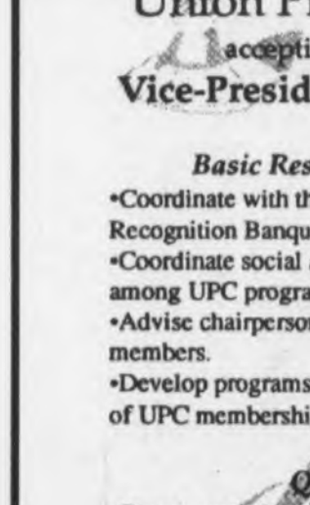
Garé Davis, senior in theater, said he also enjoys talking on the computer.

"Personally, I would rather meet someone in person first, though," he said. "However, you can say whatever you want on the computer. If someone doesn't like what you say, it doesn't really matter."

Davis believes it's pretty rare for people to actually start dating someone they have met online. However, he also said most people feel it is much easier to flirt with someone on the computer than in person.

"You don't run as big a risk of sounding like an idiot," he said. "If you do, they don't know who you are anyway. Over the computer you can be who you want to be."

Wasmer agreed meeting new people can be fun, but you should always exercise caution.



The Men of ΣN would like to wish the ladies of ΣΣΣ good luck on their recolonization.

K-State Student Union Room #207
3:30 p.m.

1996 mccain 1997

Reduced Shakespeare Company
The Bible: The Complete Word of God (abridged)
In spoofing the book they call "the greatest story ever accepted as fact," the RSC combines shtick, sight gags, and audience participation to put the "fun" back into "fundamentalist." Is it offensive? In answer to this question, the trio always replies, "Yes. Anything featuring the three of us in nothing but fig leaves is definitely offensive."
You've been warned.
Friday, Sept. 27, 8 p.m.

Call 532-6428 or come to the McCain box office.
Box office hours: noon to 5 p.m. weekdays. VISA and MC accepted. Tickets also available at the usual outlets.

Fee issue boils down to cold, hard cash

HEATHER HOLLINGSWORTH

This is the last in a series of five articles.

Stacks of charts and graphs, which explain the reasoning behind the change to linear fees, matter little to most students.

The true test requires only a cursory glance at post-fee payment checkbook balances.

It was late in the game before Jeff Loetel, senior in physical science and Missouri resident, discovered how personally linear fees would affect him.

"My buddy told me how it was actually going to take place after he paid fees the first day," Loetel said. "I knew it was going to happen, but I thought everything after 12 hours was going to be a flat rate, and everything before 12 hours was going to be per credit hour."

The change was a shock for Loetel. As an out-of-state student, his tuition had amounted to $3,742 in spring 1996. In three short months, the tuition portion of his bill had increased to $4,505.

What do you do?

"You swallow the pill no matter how big it is," he said. "Tuition always increases. It never decreases. What are they going to say? 'Oops! We made a mistake. Here, we'll refund your money.'"

Although Loetel originally paid for 17 hours, he was forced to drop two hours because of the expense.

Dropping two hours saved Loetel $530 in tuition costs. Loetel said he plans to make up those hours by taking 18 hours in the spring when he will have time to budget for the increase.

"I thought I was going to have X amount of money after financial aid," he said. "At this point, it's like crying over spilt milk."

Although Minh Tran, sophomore in computer engineering, had scholarships, which covered the cost of his education, he still had reservations about the new system.

Tran said administration could have done a better job informing students of the new system. He suggested they could have mailed out information on linear fee payment.

Tran also had reservations about the effect the linear system would have on students' schedules.

"There are people who can't add another credit hour because they couldn't afford to buy books," he said.

Richard Gannon, freshman undecided, was originally taking 11 hours but dropped down to eight.

Gannon said linear fees played a role in his decision to drop a course.

"The old way I would have been more likely to stick out the class or add another class," he said.

Although Gannon paid $379 less with the new system, he said he still preferred the old system.

"For me, it's fine now," he said, "but the next couple semesters it won't be."

Coming from a community college background Jessica Bigger, junior in secondary education, was familiar with the linear fee payment system.

"It's better," she said. "It's more equal."

Although she liked the system, Bigger did not like the way students were informed of the change.

"I think they should have put out a schedule of fees last semester, like in the line schedule," she said. "People weren't really informed."

K-State flour mill reaps profit for graduates in grain science

HEATHER HJETLAND
staff reporter

K-State is the the only school that offers a bachelor of science degree in flour milling, feed milling and baking science in the same department.

Dale Eustace, professor of grain science, said although there are trade schools in other parts of the world, K-State is the only one offering four-year degrees with its own flour mill.

Nearly 200 undergraduate students study in Shellenberger Hall to learn about the processing of grains into food for people and animals.

Students are able to get hands-on experience in a commercial flour mill, pilot bakery, extrusion research center and a commercial feed manufacturing plant. They also have laboratories for dough testing, pasta making, grain grading and cereal chemistry.

The mill makes part of Shellenberger look like a factory. The air is filled with the operational hum of large equipment, called roller mills, that are connected by spouts.

Although it doesn't run every day, when in production the mill can make 240 to 300 100-pound bags of flour per day. The mill, built in 1951, will be replaced in 1998 and moved north of campus to Kimball Avenue.

The mill is used for teaching and research in many ways. Eustace said it is used to evaluate grains from around the globe. The mill produces flour for Manhattan-Ogden USD 383. Also, the mill will process wheat for companies working on secret projects.

Grain science graduates' starting salaries are among the highest for K-State, the average being $28,000 to $32,000. According to a 1995 Career and Employment Services report, it is the highest when compared to other starting salaries for College of Agriculture graduates. Job placement is also high.

"We get more calls than we have students to fill the positions," Fred Fairchild, associate professor of grain science, said.

Shawn Teagarden, junior in milling science and management, said he changed his major from agribusiness because of the job opportunities.

"I had multiple job offers, and it's because this is the only place to get a grain science degree," Troy Smith, a 1995 milling science and management graduate, said.

A grain science graduate has a variety of career opportunities.

"Jobs are not just in production, they are also in marketing, managing and supervising," Eustace said.

Other jobs entail research and product development, quality control, sales and purchasing.

"These provide good job security," Eustace said. "This is steady work with no layoffs unlike car plants. Every time you buy a hot dog or hamburger, there's a bun around it. People will miss a car payment before food."

A few of the employers for graduates are General Mills, Quaker Oats, Cargill, Ralston-Purina and Interstate Baking, Eustace said.

Many students take internships or summer jobs related to the grain science industry. Cory Lare, senior in milling science and management, interned for Gilroy Foods in California last summer and worked on a project to design a new onion mill that will produce seasonings.

"It gave me a good real-world experience," he said.

Currently, there are about 55 grain science graduate students who come from all over the world to study at K-State. Students have come from India, Japan, South America, China, Europe, Mexico, Africa and Asia, Eustace said.

"The grain science department is known in Mexico and around the world for the quality of professors, and because it's a unique school," said Conrado Campos, a graduate student in grain science and cereal chemistry from Mexico.

Twenty-five faculty with industry experience teach the three different areas of study. Fairchild said before coming to K-State, he worked for 30 years in the design, construction and operations of several grain processing facilities.

Smith said the college is small enough that students receive personal attention, which is a definite plus.

Baking science students learn the skills necessary to produce baked goods. The milling science and management curriculum teaches the processing of grains into human food.

Students can also minor in each of these areas. Eustace said students who major in grain science need to be strong in math and science areas.

"It is an interesting area, because people don't know much about it," Eustace said. "Students get scared the first few weeks until they learn the terminology."

Your guide to K-State football weekends in Manhattan

(HTTP://COLLEGIAN.KSU.EDU/) SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1996 VOL. 1, NO. 3

The Big 12 RUNDOWN

(News & notes from the Conference)

• COACH GLEN MASON wasn't counting on much from senior quarterback Ben Rutz early this season because of a knee injury. Rutz recovered to play in the opener against Ball State, and he even threw a touchdown pass.

Starter Matt Johner did well, too, completing 14 of 20 passes for 147 yards, including a 32-yard touchdown pass in a 35-10 victory.

"Our quarterback position is very healthy," Mason said. "I'll make a decision based on who I think will give us the best chance to win. Kansas (1-0, 0-0), 9 tonight, vs. Texas Christian

• COACH RICK NEUHEISEL said this weekend's game is the type that make the season special.

"The nation's attention will be here in Boulder," he said. "This is the game that when we talk to recruits, we told them this is a good place to come."

Neuheisel said he knows much of the pre-game hype will be revisiting the last-second Hail Mary pass from Kordell Stewart to Michael Westbrook to beat the Wolverines two years ago.

Colorado (2-0, 0-0), 3:30 today, vs. Michigan

• THIS SEASON'S INSTALLMENT of the annual grudge match between Iowa State and Iowa will be a personal one for Cyclones coach Dan McCarney, who spent 19 years as a player and coach for the Hawkeyes.

"It's a lot of fun to be back and be a part of it," said McCarney, who missed the rivalry for five years as an assistant coach at Wisconsin until returning last season. "The people in Iowa take it very seriously."

Iowa State (0-1, 0-0), 3:30 today, vs. Iowa at Iowa

• AGGIES COACH R.C. SLOCUM is tired of waking up on Saturdays and not having a game to play. A&M hasn't played since its Aug. 24 loss to BYU in the Pigskin Classic.

"We're eager to play someone," Slocum said. "Three weeks without a game is something I've never done before. It's been very frustrating. I told people I'm going to come back as a basketball or baseball coach, so when you lose, you can come back right away."

Texas A&M (0-1; 0-0), 8 tonight, at Southwestern Louisiana

• BAYLOR BEARS COACH CHUCK REEDY said his staff is doing all it can to make sure freshman quarterback Odell James, one of the nation's hottest recruits last spring, is properly treating his injured knee.

"We've done about everything we can do," Reedy said. "We sent him to a guy in Dallas who is supposed to be one of the two or three best in the country. He concurred with the other opinions. Everyone says he needs to get strength up in the leg, and he won't have any recurring problems." Baylor (1-0, 0-0), 2 today, vs. Louisville

• NOT GOING TO THE FOOTBALL GAME? Need something to do after the football game? Check out the volleyball team in its first home action of the season. The Wildcats play at the KSU Invitational this weekend at Ahearn Field House.

The Cats began play yesterday against the University of Missouri-Kansas City and South Carolina.

They wrap up the Invitational today at noon against Eastern Michigan and at 7 p.m. against Boise State.

• NEXT ISSUE: OCT. 5, 1996.

GAME 3. K-STATE VS. CINCINNATI

RICK DRUSE/Collegian

THE K-STATE DEFENSE was too much for Indiana State's offense. Indiana State's quarterback Kevin Cox is sacked during last Saturday's game.

R-E-S-P-E-C-T

Cats want attention this time around

story by Shana Newell

Forgive the K-State football team if it takes today's game against Cincinnati personally.

After all, it was K-State who crawled out of Nippert Stadium in Cincinnati last year with a 23-21 come-from-behind victory.

But Coach Bill Snyder said he doesn't take last year's loss personally.

"I know that they felt that they should have won the game," he said of the Bearcats. "I can't say that I disagree."

The Wildcats gave up a 67-yard scoring pass on the second play from scrimmage and then fell behind 14-0 while managing only two first downs in the first half last year.

But they clawed themselves out of a hole, led by quarterback Matt Miller. With 44 seconds remaining in the game, and down 21-17, the Wildcats regained possession of the ball at their own 41-yard line.

Miller scrambled for eight yards on the first play and five more on the second for a first down at the Cincinnati 46.

After an incomplete pass and a delay of game penalty and another incomplete pass, K-State faced third and 15 at its own 49-yard line.

Miller then connected with wide receiver Tyson Schwieger for a 20-yard pass and a first down at the Cincinnati 31-yard line. Another completed pass, this time to Mitch Running, gave the Cats nine more yards. With three seconds left and 22-yards to go until the end zone, Miller rolled left and threw to the right where Kevin Lockett caught the ball at the goal line and dove in as time ran out.

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

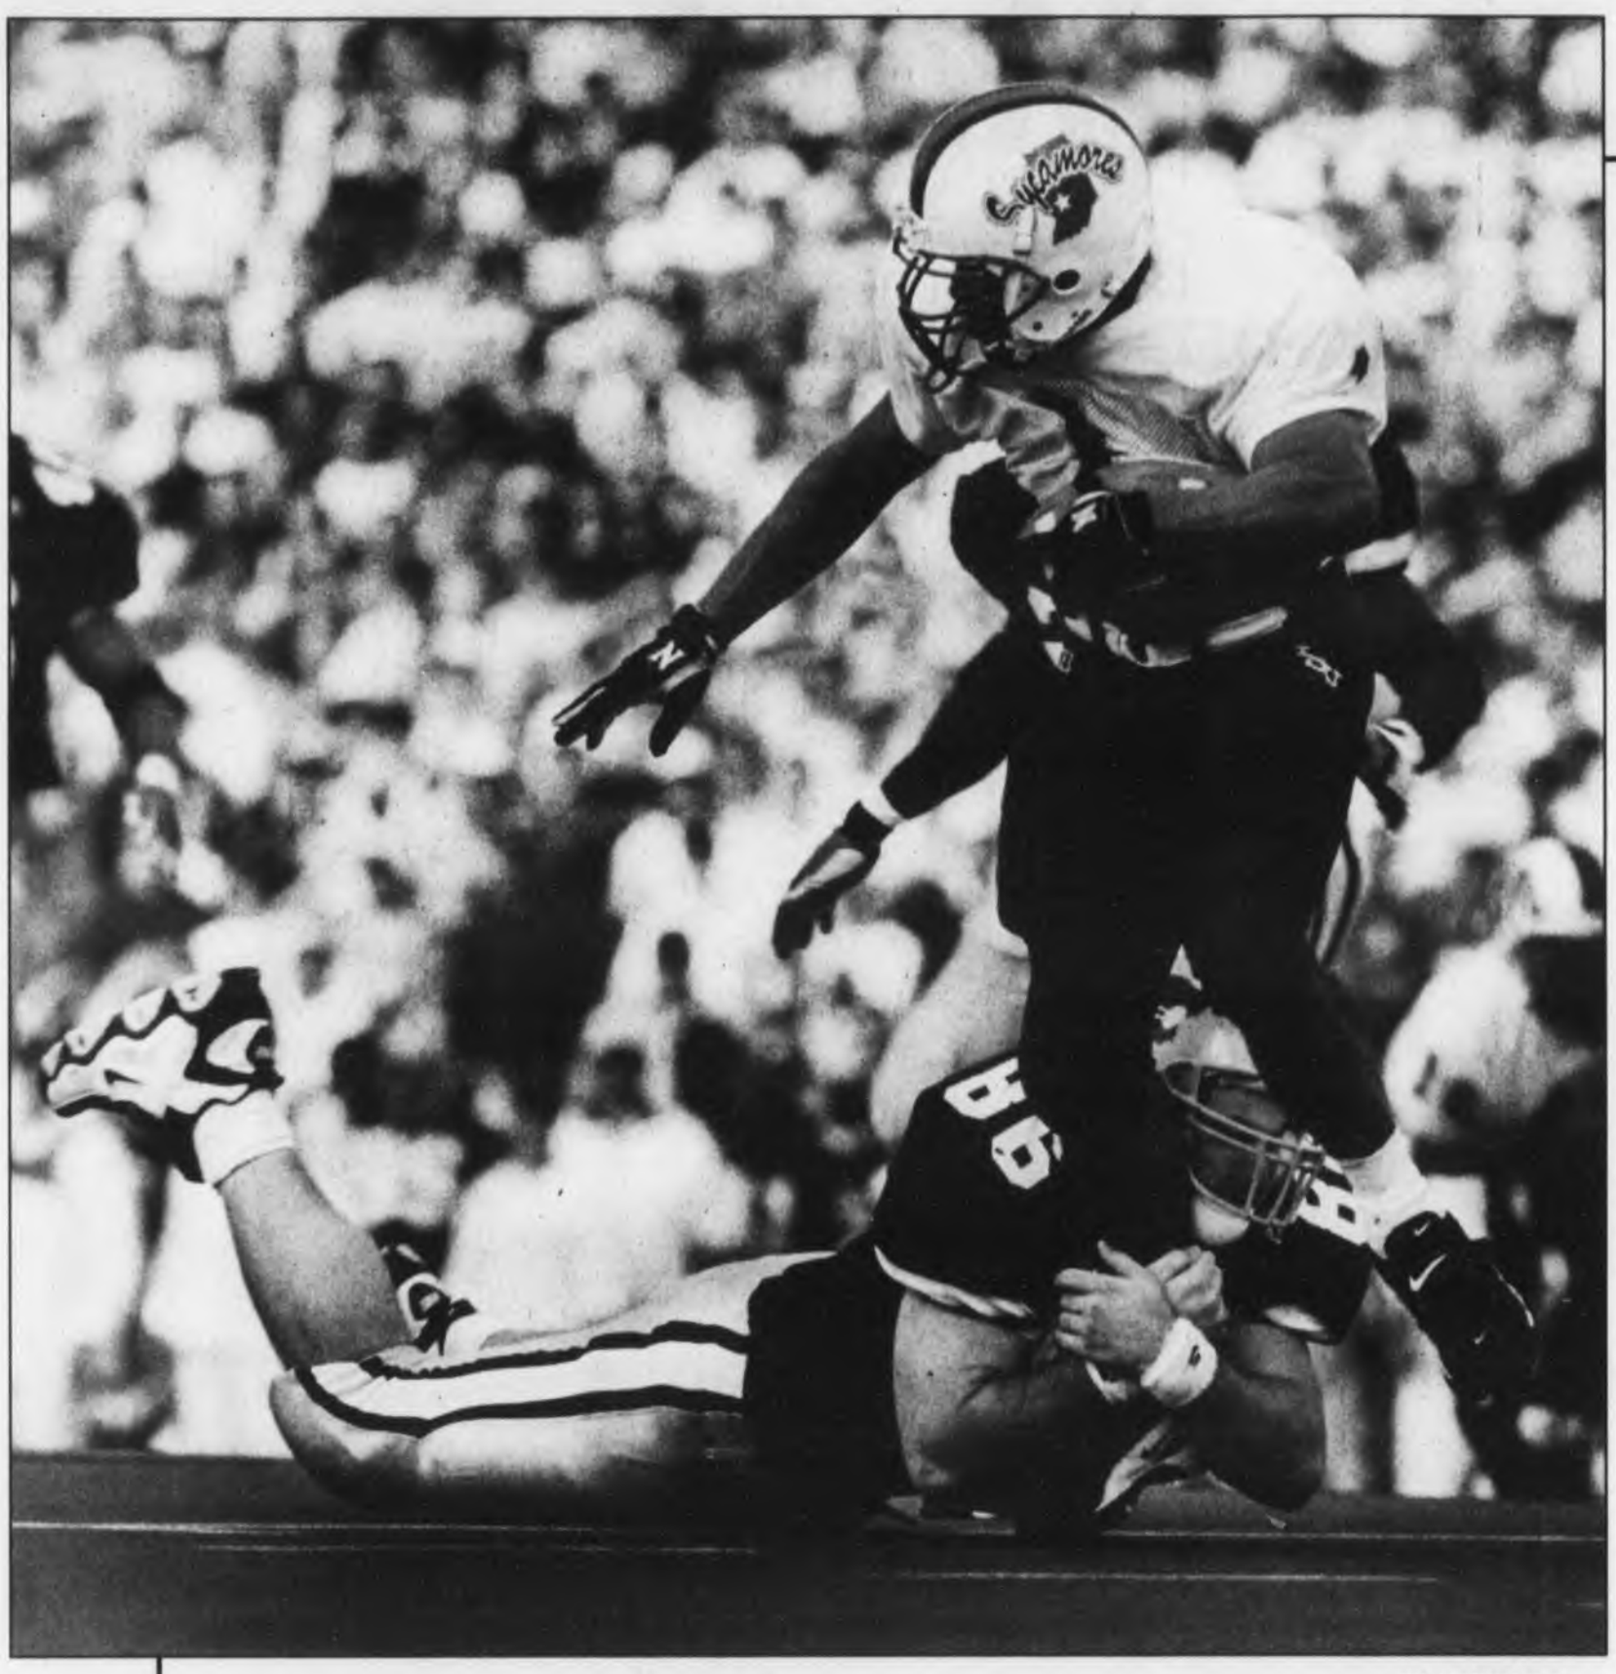
RUNNING BACK Marlon Charles is forced out of bounds by Indiana State's Dre' Knox. A facemask penalty followed the play.

That touchdown pass gave the Cats the win and set the tone for an intensity level Saturday comparable to that of a K-State vs. Nebraska level.

"This is real personal," K-State defensive back Chris Canty said. "After the game last year, they said we weren't so good. I think after you beat someone you should get some respect. They didn't show us any respect."

Quarterback Brian Kavanagh agreed.

"After that game, I couldn't blame Cincinnati for being upset," he said. "They're going to come in here with all the confidence in the world."



Snyder said that although Cincinnati started the season slowly with a 34-14 loss to Tulane, the Bearcats improved themselves for last week's game against Kentucky, a 24-3 victory. He said there was no reason to think they wouldn't be even more improved when they come to Manhattan.

"Defensively, I think they tackled better. They're more sound. I think there was improvement in terms of science. They made mental mistakes against Tulane," Snyder said.

Snyder even went so far to say the Bearcats are similar to Texas Tech in many ways. The quarterback position is just one of those ways.

"They can spread their offense out, causing your defense to spread out," he said. "And they're pretty good on special teams. They're good, good athletes."

TIGHT END Justin Swift tackles Indiana State punt returner Larry Scally in last week's 59-3 rout of the Sycamores. Swift has two receptions for 39 yards this season. Last season, Swift was the back-up tight end behind Bobby Latiolais and Brian Lojka. This season Swift will share time with Jarrett Grosdidier at the position.

Despite KU ties, K-State tight end's allegiance lies with Cats

staff writer

It's hard for Carol Swift not to be proud.

Her son, Justin Swift, a sophomore and the Wildcats' starting tight end, caught a pass in each of the season's first two games — double his total from his freshman season.

"I'm so glad to be a part of K-State," Carol Swift said.

But it's not because her son is the center of attention. On the contrary, it's his struggle in relative anonymity that makes watching him play that much more exciting.

Swift

"The tight end job is pretty low-key," she said. "He just really likes being part of the team and doing his part, whatever it takes."

And it can take a lot. Tight ends aren't on the field for every offensive snap like some other receivers, but they pay their dues in other ways. When Justin Swift isn't catching the ball, more likely than not he's blocking some hulking defensive lineman.

"It's almost like being on the offensive line," he said. "You make a catch every now and then, but a lot of the time you really aren't doing the things that get you recognized.

"That's fine, though," he quickly adds. "What's important is the team."

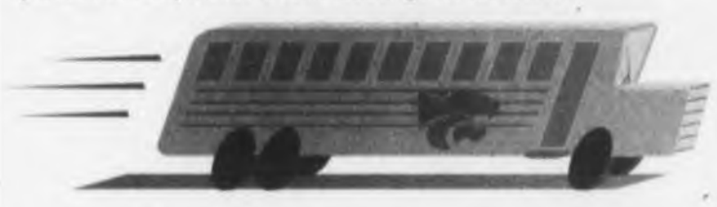
Justin Swift is the first to acknowledge his teammates can help make his job easier as well.

"It seems like the secondary is usually paying attention to Kevin (Lockett) and Jimmy (Dean), especially when there's a lot of open field. That means the tight end is more likely to be open."

It's not all about team for him. He feels the thrill of catching the ball as much as anyone else and has personal goals in addition to team goals.

But the team somehow manages to make its way to the forefront.

"Before I'm done, I'd like to get some kind of recognition from the Big 12, even just honorable mention," Justin Swift said. "But as long as the team is doing well, I am glad just to play my role."



Considering his genealogy, recognition in the Big 12 should not be a problem. In fact, some Kansas fans might recognize his forefathers in their coaching staff.

But let there be no doubt where the Swift family allegiances lie on game day when the Cats and Jayhawks do battle. Carol Swift can speak to that.

"Everybody is going to be sitting on the K-State side."

Women finish 1st; men take 2nd

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

If it had been a surprise party, K-State cross country coach Terry Drake would have been — surprised.

As it was, there was no surprise party, only a coming-out party for the more inexperienced members of the Wildcats' cross country teams as the women's team took first place and the men's side second last Saturday at Baker University's Wildcat Invitational.

> "I think we've seen that we've got three solid runners competing for the third or fourth spots on the team."
> • TERRY DRAKE
> CROSS COUNTRY COACH

Led by junior Anita Hallauer and freshman Kelly Andra, the Wildcat women had five runners finish in the top nine of the meet.

"Anita Hallauer was a big surprise," Drake said. "I think we've seen that we've got three solid runners competing for the third or fourth spots on the team."

Hallauer and Andra finished first and second respectively for the Cats, while senior Ann Golubski finished fourth, freshman Emily Diederich finished sixth and junior Lisa Kaul finished ninth.

"I was pleasantly surprised by Emily Diederich, considering that she's usually an 800-meter runner," Drake said. "I think that was definitely a positive. Lisa Kaul did rather well, especially when you consider it was only the second race in her career at K-State."

On the men's side, sophomores Zach Davies and Brent Stover led the pack, with Davies finishing third and Stover ninth. Sophomores Reid Bauersfeld and David Barland and senior Ryan Johnson also finished in the top 20.

Drake said while he was happy with the Cats' performance, he believes the team could do better.

"The men's side wasn't quite as good (as the women's)," Drake said. "I think maybe I would have liked to have seen them run a little faster."

But experience is the key, Drake said, and that was the purpose of the meet — to give the runners experience. He said he thinks it might have paid off with Davies, who ran a 15:44 time.

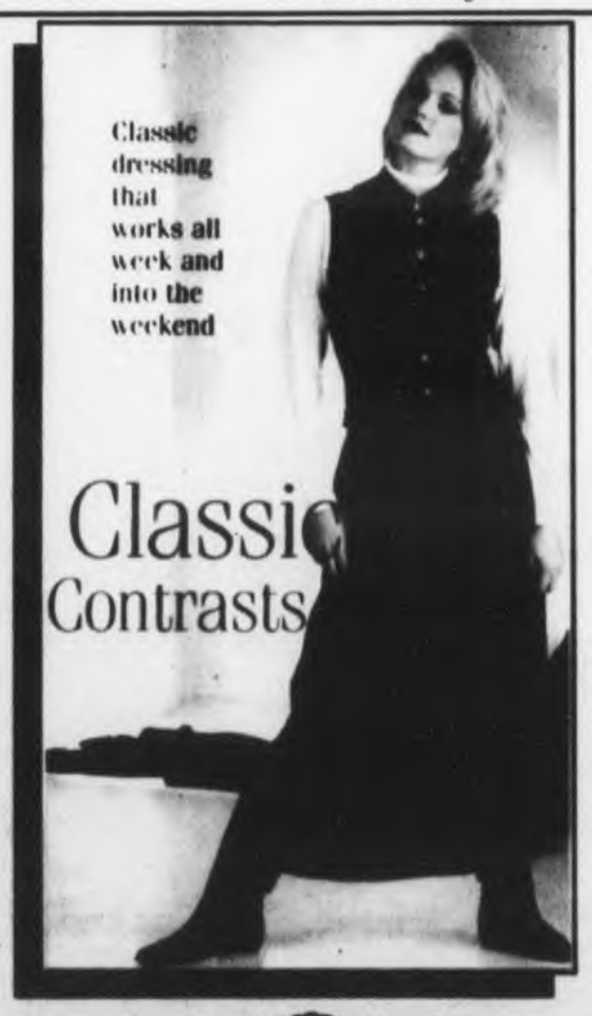
"Zach probably could have run a little faster, but he got a little behind late in the race," Drake said. "He needs to learn how to read the other runners. It was his inexperience."

The men's side also had its share of surprises. Drake said he hadn't expected Bauersfeld to run as well as he did.

"He'll be a good No. 7 runner," he said.

Also surprising Drake were Stover and Barland, two athletes who have been battling injuries. Stover dealt with a case of tendonitis over the summer, and Barland had a stress fracture.

"Barland had a nice, steady little race," Drake said. "It was surprising to see those two come in and run well."



The Cats will compete today at the Jayhawk Invitational in Lawrence.

Drake said with the exception of freshman Kathryn Wolfram, he expects to send his best runners.

"She's got a strained hamstring, and I'd like to be cautious with her," Drake said. "She's too good."

▶ OFFENSE

Offense improves from poor beginning

Dan Lewerenz
staff writer

Things couldn't have been much worse for the K-State offense after the Wildcats' 21-14 victory over Texas Tech.

"It has to get better than this," senior quarterback Brian Kavanagh said.

"I played horrible, and we just made too many mistakes as a team. On the whole, the offense was off from the start," he said.

The numbers bore out Kavanagh's criticism — Kavanagh was just 12 of 29 passing, the Cats finished with minus 12 yards rushing, and the game-winning touchdown was scored by the defense when safety Mario Smith recovered an errant snap in the end zone.

The Red Raiders dominated every statistical category except the one that really counted — the score.

"It's got to get better," Kavanagh said. "We're not going to win if we keep playing like this — there were just too many mistakes. We're going to go back and look at the film, break it down, and this won't happen again."

It did get better.

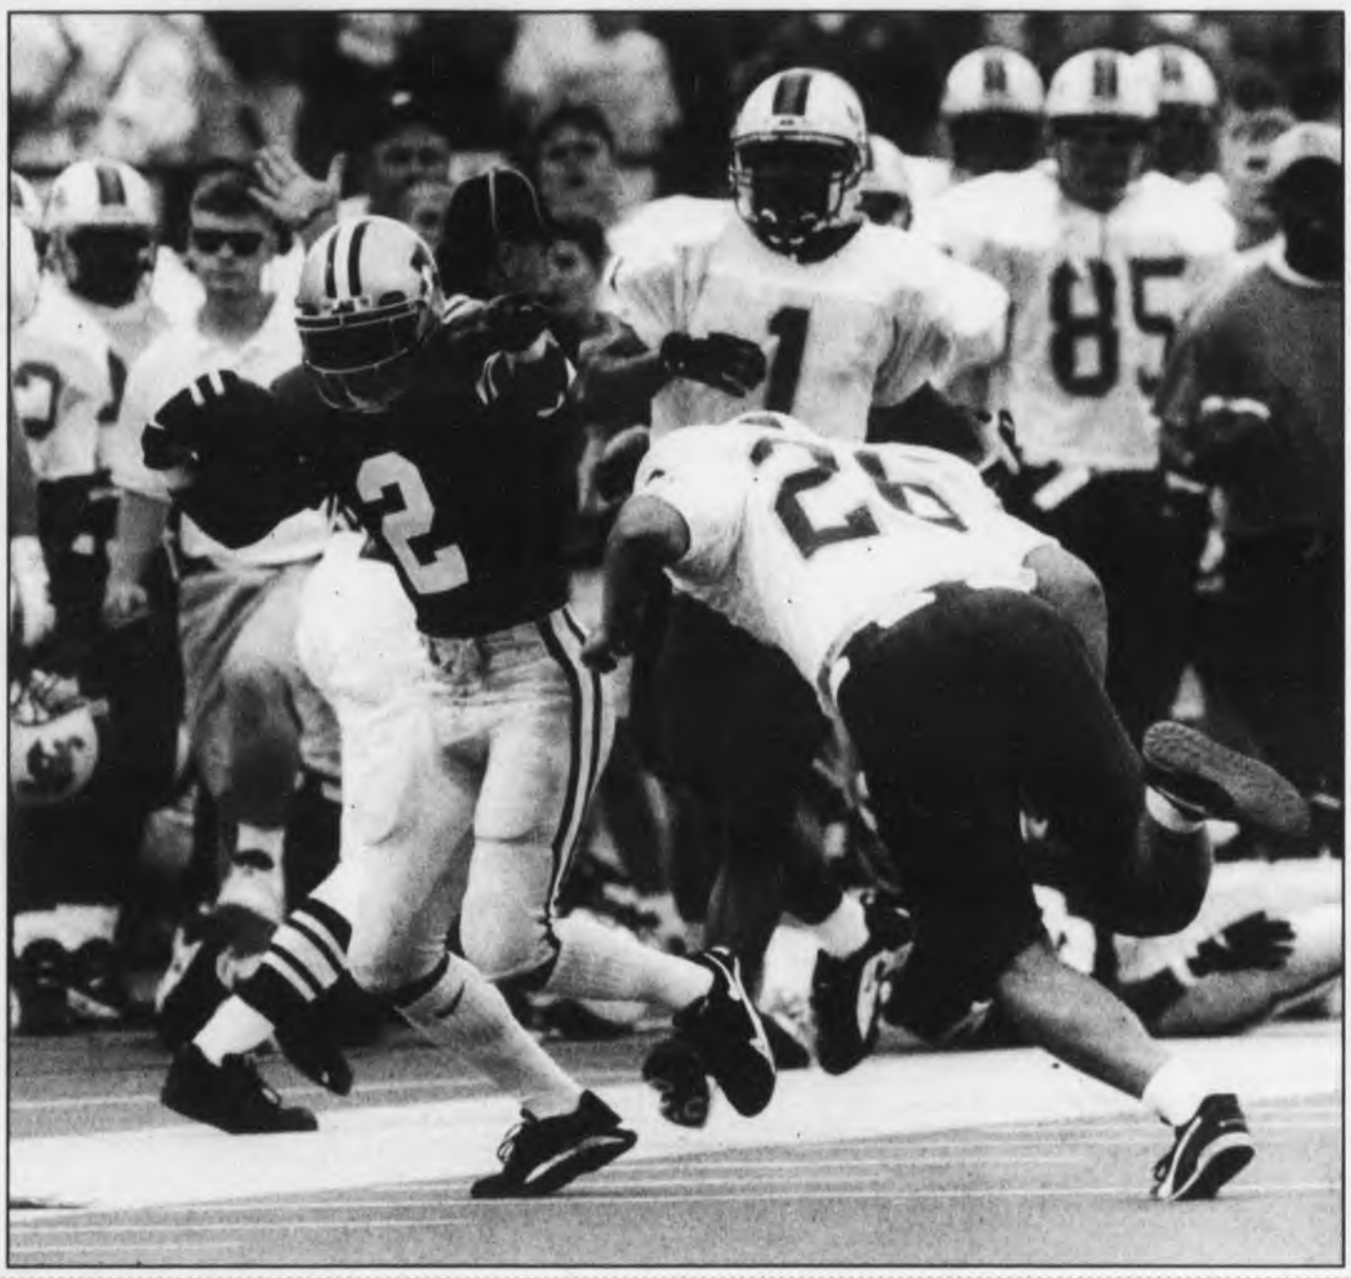
The Wildcat offense rolled over Indiana State last weekend, accumulating 565 yards on the way to a 59-3 win.

The running game, bolstered by the breakthrough performance of sophomore tailback Marlon Charles (195 yards on 33 carries) put up 268 yards, and Kavanagh and reserve Jonathan Beasley, a true freshman playing in his first collegiate game, added 297 yards in the air.

"They're too big. They're too strong. They're too fast," Indiana State coach Dennis Raetz said of the Cats. "We could play them from now until Christmas, and we still wouldn't beat them."

K-State coach Bill Snyder agreed with Raetz's analysis.

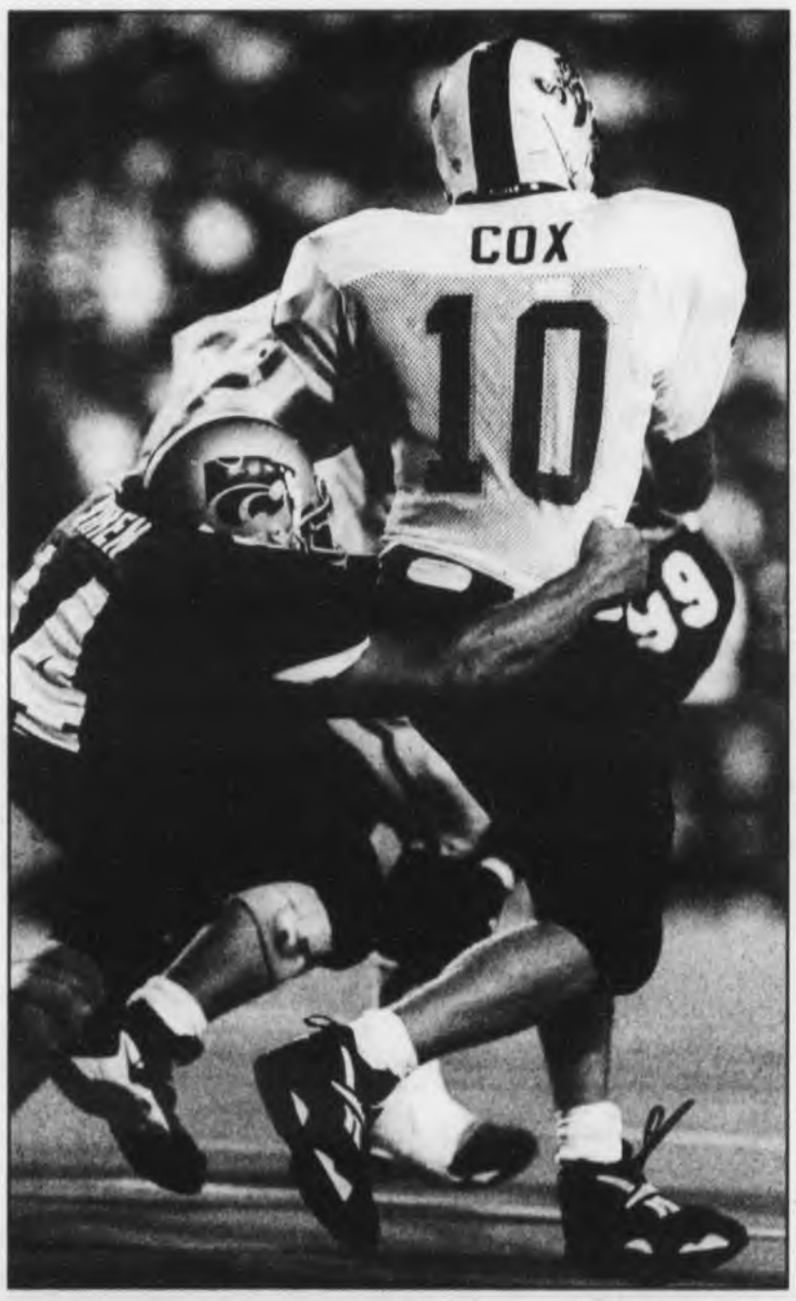
"We're just a more physical football team, so whether we really made that kind of improvement — I think we did. It's hard to say for sure," Snyder said.



As a team, the Wildcats were undeniably better. But the real difference was in individual performances.

Charles' 195 yards was the fourth-best performance in school history, and wide receiver Kevin Lockett caught seven passes for 140 yards. Kavanagh completed 19 of 22 passes.

Three Cats recorded significant firsts, with Beasley throwing his first touchdown pass to Troy Hackney, giving Hackney his first career reception and his first touchdown. Tight end Jarrett Grosdidier also caught his first two collegiate passes, each for a touchdown.



This bodes well for fans beyond the 1996 season. Beasley looks to be Kavanagh's replacement next year, and Charles will have two more seasons.

"Jonathan did all right," Snyder said. "It was unfortunate that Jonathan couldn't do all the things we'd like to see him do. After he threw that long touchdown pass, it would not have been appropriate to let him throw passes a lot."

▶ DEFENSE

Cats' defensive power increases in preparation for each opponent

Shana Newell
sports editor

Against Texas Tech, the K-State defense allowed 27 first downs on 103 plays. One week later, it held the Indiana State offense to only nine first downs on 52 plays.

What happened?

It's hard to say. Indiana State didn't really give K-State the competition it needed to test its defense.

"A lot of the things we needed to make some improvement on, there was no opportunity to see if we did," Coach Bill Snyder said.

Even so, there were some bright spots.

Indiana State's longest rush came courtesy of backup quarterback Matt Gajewski, a 15-yard scramble after a play-action fake was read perfectly by the K-State defense.

Although tailback Tracey Pendleton led the Sycamores in carries with 11, he netted only 21 yards, averaging less than two yards per carry.

Most of the Sycamores' yardage came via the passing game. Indiana State's quarterbacks combined for 112 yards passing, but there were seven different receivers in the boxscore following the game. Only flanker Courtland Tubbs had multiple receptions with two, a 13-yarder and another for five yards.

K-State's secondary held the Sycamores to eight completed passes in 21 attempts.

Both had 14 opportunities to convert on third down. While K-State's offense had 10 conversions, Indiana State saw one.

On its first drive of the second quarter, facing third and eight at its own 22-yard line, quarterback Kevin Cox connected with Micah Reid on a screen play. The completion resulted in an 11-yard play and a first down.

But two plays later, Chris Canty would intercept another Cox pass. K-State would score on its next possession, increasing its lead to 38-0.

Perhaps the most important statistic by the Wildcats' defense was the one that most people knew immediately following the game, the final score. K-State's defense held Indiana State to only three points, a 22-yard field goal by Nate Davis late in the fourth quarter.

K-State knew it needed to continue working on improving itself, especially with Cincinnati coming to KSU Stadium.

"We didn't get tested in some areas," Snyder said following the Indiana State game. "We need to work on communicating some things on defense. We didn't really get to see how well we defended on different plays, like draws, options, the scramble and the bootleg."

But in other ways, the defense did get tested. Second- and third-stringers like Casey and Shelby Wehrman, Derek King, Lance Grace and Bill Molitor received some playing time.

"Derek King stuck out most in my mind," Snyder said. "He made some really nice plays."

With first and goal at K-State's six-yard line, Sycamore running back Sha' Caldwell received the handoff, but was stopped by King for no gain. On second and goal, King broke up a pass from Gajewski to fullback Mike Barwick, forcing third and goal. Barwick tried to gain yardage again, this time on the ground.

With an assist from Grace, King brought down Barwick for a 1-yard gain. The Sycamores settled for a field goal.

Did the defense improve on its mistakes from the week before? Maybe not, but Snyder said he thinks it got better.

"I thought our two's and some of our three's did very good," he said. "There were definitely some bright spots."

WILDCAT FLASHBACK

Cats chop apart Sycamore attempts

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

It could have been Arkansas State. But because of scheduling conflicts, it remained Indiana State. The Sycamores were overpowered.

Because Indiana State was a Division I-AA school, K-State coach Bill Snyder tried to have the game switched to prevent the Wildcats from failing to qualify for a bowl game because of the I-AA game.

> "I think Kansas State is a better football team than we are. Period. They're better than we are, and they'll beat us if we play them 10 more times."
> • DENNIS RAETZ
> INDIANA STATE COACH

Snyder didn't succeed, and Sycamore coach Dennis Raetz brought his team to Manhattan to struggle through a 59-3 loss. Things could have been worse — it could have been a shutout. Indiana State scored its only points of the game on a field goal allowed by mostly a second- and third-string defense.

"I think Kansas State is a better football team than we are. Period. They've got stronger players. They've got faster players. They've got more players," he said. "They're better than we are, and they'll beat us if we play them 10 more times."

The Wildcats were led offensively by running back Marlon Charles, who rushed for 195 yards on 33 carries, scoring three touchdowns. His yardage was the fourth-best rushing total by a Wildcat running back in school history.

K-State began its scoring on a 15-yard touchdown run by fullback Brian Goolsby midway into the first quarter.

True freshman place-kicker Jamie Rheem scored his first-ever field goal as a Wildcat to put the Cats ahead 10-0.

After the K-State defense forced the Sycamores to punt, the Cats took over at the 36-yard line, and quarterback Brian Kavanagh connected with wide receiver Kevin Lockett in the end zone for a 36-yard touchdown pass and a 17-0 lead.

Midway through the third quarter, Snyder began shuffling his second- and third-string players onto the field as fast as he could shuffle a deck of cards. They impressed everyone, including Snyder.

"I thought our twos and some of our threes did very good tonight. There were definitely some bright spots," Snyder said.

Topping the list of relievers was true freshman quarterback Jonathan Beasley. The highly touted recruit saw his first action as a Wildcat against the Sycamores.

Beasley relieved Kavanagh in the third quarter, leading K-State on two scoring drives.

The second drive was highlighted by a 57-yard touchdown pass to back-up receiver Troy Hackney.

"Jonathan put that ball in the only place he could to get it to me," Hackney said. "It was thrown perfectly."

Asbury stays at K-State

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian
MEN'S BASKETBALL COACH Tom Asbury speaks to reporters Friday afternoon at Bramlage Coliseum. Asbury announced he would not be leaving K-State.

▪ Men's basketball coach withdraws from consideration.

DAN LEWERENZ
staff writer

No more waiting for word from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics. No more calling friends in the San Francisco Bay Area. No more speculation about who will be the interim head coach.

Men's basketball coach Tom Asbury will remain at K-State.

"He's staying," President Jon Wefald said Friday afternoon. "Tom loves it here at K-State, and he'll be here for a long time."

Asbury confirmed Wefald's statement at a late-afternoon press conference, saying he withdrew his name from consideration before waiting to hear if he would be offered the job.

"I spent the majority of yesterday analyzing the situation and all the particulars," Asbury said. "Got back to the hotel about midnight, got up at 4, got on a plane at 6, landed in Denver about 8:30 this morning, and called the University of California and withdrew from consideration.

"I did not wait to be offered the job in the event that it was to be offered, and I have no feel for that," he said.

"Obviously, I was one of the top candidates, but where is of little relevance."

Asbury, who met with University of California-Berkeley officials Thursday, was one of three finalists to interview for the head coaching job at Cal. Eastern Michigan head coach Ben Braun accepted the position Sunday morning; head coach Sherm Dillard of Indiana State also interviewed at Cal earlier in the week.

Sources at Cal say Braun was well received by both administrators and players. Some players, though, were not as impressed with Asbury.

"By the way Asbury was talking, you would have thought he

Basketball enthusiasts share mixed opinions about coach

TARA WRAY

The uncertainty regarding whether Tom Asbury would remain K-State men's head basketball coach has been settled.

He's staying, and some fans could not be happier.

"He is a good coach, and I think we should give him more support," said Doug Smith, senior in secondary education.

Despite signing a six-year contract with K-State during the summer, Asbury interviewed for the head coaching position at California last week.

Some fans were not sold on the idea of Asbury staying as head coach at K-State.

"I think if Tom wants to go back to California, that's his choice," Judy Ahrens, Manhattan resident, said. "Personally, he hasn't made that great of an impression on me."

In his two-year reign at K-State, Asbury has coached the Wildcats to a 29-27 record and a trip to the NCAA Tournament.

Despite yielding a mark barely more than .500, some fans were glad to hear he was staying.

"He puts Dana Altman to shame," Zach Mosier, senior in animal science, said. "I'm glad he's back."

Student wins local pageant, advances

DANA LEHNER
staff reporter

After Overland Park native Tara Dawn Holland was named Miss America on Saturday night, the excitement level at the 40th annual Miss Manhattan/K-State Scholarship Pageant rose a little bit Sunday.

Deana Teske, senior in broadcast journalism and public relations, was crowned Miss Manhattan/K-State and will represent the area at the annual Miss Kansas Pageant in June.

However, this is nothing new for Teske, who has competed in the pageant twice before. Teske even competed last year in the Miss Kansas Pageant with the newly crowned Miss America.

After winning the Miss Kansas City title two years ago and Miss Topeka last year, Teske still wasn't sure about her chances in this pageant.

"You can never tell," Teske said. "You can't guess what the judges are thinking. You can't get wrapped up in the whole competition thing."

Teske has been involved with the Miss America program for four years and has won three local pageants out of the 23 in Kansas.

"It feels great," she said. "I have tried this so many times. Each year, it got a little bit better, and this is the final goal. I'm looking forward to representing the people of Manhattan and K-State."

Teske impressed the judges and won the personal-interview section of the competition, which was worth 40 percent of competitors' scores.

Pageant contestants also competed in three other categories. The swimsuit portion was first and was worth 15 percent, followed by the talent section, which was worth 30 percent. The final section was the eveningwear competition, which was worth 15 percent.

In addition, contestants were required to choose a critical issue in the community to be aware of and to

Funds being raised to construct new K-State feed mill

HEATHER HJETLAND

Funds are being raised to build a new K-State feed mill.

With an estimated cost of $5 million, the mill is being funded by private support from individuals and companies within the grain science industry. It should open in the fall of 1998 north of campus on Kimball Avenue.

The new mill will replace one of the animal science mills on the corner of Denison and Kimball avenues and the feed mill in Shellenberger Hall.

"We are working closely with the industry to make this project reality, and they have responded very well," said Betty Johnson, development officer for the College of Agriculture. "There have been no state or federal dollars given."

Industry support is strong because K-State is the only school in the world to have a four-year curriculum in feed science and management, Fred Fairchild, associate professor of grain science, said.

"K-State is well-known for milling and animal science, and I think it's only appropriate to have a world-class milling facility," said Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance.

> "We are working closely with the industry to make this project reality and they have responded very well.
> • BETTY JOHNSON
> DEVELOPMENT OFFICER

The new mill is being built because the existing mills are about 50 years old and in need of renovation, Johnson said.

Fairchild said plans are indefinite for these mills.

"The new mill will provide world-class teaching, research and testing facilities with production capabilities to serve the animal science farms," Fairchild said.

It will also allow students more hands-on experience for running and managing a mill, he said.

The Foundation Center has actively been raising money for the past four months. In October, a contractor will be chosen. Design and cost will be finalized in December.

All funds should be raised by May, when K-State faculty and administrators will meet with the industry at the American Feed Industry Association Convention and Show in St. Louis. At this time, they will celebrate with a ground-breaking ceremony and donor recognition.

The new mill will be home to the American Feed Industry Association/Kansas State University Feed Manufacturing Hall of Fame. This will contain plaques and memorabilia from those elected to the hall of fame that have made a contribution to the industry, Fairchild said.

The hall of fame, housed in Shellenberger Hall, was established a year ago with the idea that it would be incorporated into the new facility.

The mill will also have a 60-seat classroom in which short courses and feed-related classes will be taught.

The mill will be significantly bigger than the current mills, Fairchild said. Two new features will be multiple lines of feed-processing equipment and a small production lab for batching and testing small batches of feed.

"It will be a very attractive building with concrete and masonry construction," Fairchild said.

Donor names are not being released at this time, and the facility has not been named.

Miss Kansas fulfills dream, wins national pageant

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

Miss Kansas, Tara Dawn Holland, received a new title and fulfilled a childhood dream when she was crowned Miss America on Saturday night.

"They asked me to share my feelings with you, and I don't know that I really have any right now, because I'm just kind of numb," Holland said.

Holland, 23, a 1994 music education graduate of Florida State University, is a graduate student at the University of Missouri-Kansas City. She hopes to teach music.

Miss Greater Kansas City, Marilyn Hetzel, graduate student in secondary education, said Holland deserves the honor because of determination.

"She will represent the state of Kansas very well to all the young women striving for a higher education," Hetzel said.

Holland

In 1989, the Miss America Pageant started requiring contestants to have a platform on which they spoke. This was added to change the pageant from a beauty to scholarship pageant.

During her reign as Miss America, Holland will speak at illiteracy-prevention appearances, traveling more than 20,000 miles a month.

She said existing programs reach less than 5 percent of the illiterate population.

The public also liked Holland. The 75-year-old pageant included audience opinion for the first time in history.

Viewers could call 900 numbers to cast their favorite among the 10 semifinalists. The final decision was made by the seven pageant judges.

Holland, of Overland Park, tried three times to capture the Miss Florida title before winning her first try as Miss Kansas.

Holland is the third Miss Kansas to win the crown.

The Miss America Organization makes more than $29 million in scholarship grants at the local, state and national levels. Past Miss Americas have earned more than $250,000.

Miss Oregon, Patricia Leines, was second runner-up; Miss Alabama, Alison McCreary, was third runner-up; and Miss Missouri, Kimberly Massaro, was fourth runner-up.

Increase in careless driving raises concerns

MIRANDA KENNEDY
staff reporter

Karen McCulloh started to cross the intersection of Amherst Avenue and Seth Child Road when a cement truck ran a red light.

"It could have just creamed me," she said.

McCulloh, a county commissioner, is concerned about driving safety.

There were five traffic-related fatalities in the first six months of 1996, compared to none in the first six months of 1995, said Lt. Gary Grubbs, who coordinates traffic activities for the Riley County Police Department.

However, Grubbs said, the number of accidents, injuries, DUIs and traffic violations was lower in the first six months of 1996 than it was in the first six months of 1995.

He said the No. 1 cause of the fatalities is inattention.

"It's people not paying attention to their driving and other people's driving. What I mean by that is defensive driving," he said.

Riley County Attorney Bill Kennedy said the increase in fatalities has changed the way he prosecutes traffic cases.

"We're not making any kind of deals with speeding in construction zones and so on. And we're talking with the police department about more enforcement," Kennedy said.

Grubbs said the RCPD is always planning how to interact with drivers.

It already uses selective enforcement in areas where accidents have increased, and it will emphasize this more.

• BOMBING TRIAL. Attorneys for Oklahoma City bombing suspect Terry Nichols are accusing federal prosecutors of punishing the defense by withholding important statements from witnesses.

Conspicuous among the missing statements, attorneys said, was grand jury testimony by Lori Fortier, who reportedly told how co-defendant Timothy McVeigh arranged cans of soup on the kitchen floor to show how barrels of explosives could be arranged to create a bomb of mass destruction. Attorney Reid Neureiter accused prosecutors in a letter of punishing Nichols because of recalcitrance by McVeigh's attorneys.

• SURGERY PLANNED FOR POPE. The Vatican announced Saturday that John Paul II was suffering from an inflamed appendix and would have surgery later this year. The 76-year-old pope's condition is not urgent, Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro-Valls, said. John Paul will go ahead next week with a hectic four-day trip to France.

• QUICKER HIV TEST. A 10-minute test accurately shows whether a person has HIV, much quicker than the standard four hours, and researchers hope it will help get more people who test positive into counseling.

Faster test results would lead to almost immediate counseling for patients found to have HIV, the AIDS-causing virus. Typically, many patients who get tested never return to learn their test results, let alone get counseling.

• SHAKUR DEAD FROM GUNSHOT WOUNDS. Tupac Shakur ended his short, violent life a victim of the gangsta rap culture he glorified in his lyrics, after once bragging that his brushes with death would never catch up to him.

After undergoing two surgeries and losing his right lung, Shakur died Friday of wounds he suffered a week ago in a drive-by shooting after a Las Vegas boxing match. He was 25. The death of one of the most successful and notorious rappers prompted many in the industry to question their fascination with violence.

CITY STATE

• RAPE ON INTERSTATE 35. A man was charged in the sexual assault of a woman on Interstate 35. James Patrick Allred, 32, of Kansas City, Kan., a paroled sex offender, appeared Friday in Johnson County District Court and was being held in the county jail on $200,000 bond.

Allred is accused of driving alongside another vehicle on I-35 in lunch-hour traffic Monday and signalling its driver, a 39-year-old woman, that there was something wrong with her car. The woman pulled over and got out. She was choked, thrown to the ground and sexually attacked.

• PARENTS SLAIN IN GODDARD. An 8-year-old girl awoke to find her parents shot to death Friday morning and ran to a neighbor's house to call 911.

Sedgwick County authorities were not releasing the names of the victims late Friday night. But neighbors, co-workers and relatives told The Wichita Eagle the couple were Douglas and Elizabeth Brittain, both 35. The couple also had a 6-year-old boy and a 4-year-old girl. No arrests had been made late Friday, and sheriff's officials refused to speculate about a motive.

SPORTS

• ORIOLES SET NEW HOME-RUN RECORD. The Baltimore Orioles set baseball's season home-run record Sunday with three homers in the first three innings in Detroit, including Mark Parent's record breaking shot in the third. The homers give the Orioles 241 this season, one more than the total of the 1961 New York Yankees.

Book names K-State among top-100 buys

CHRIS DEAN
staff reporter

The football team will not be the only K-State program receiving national recognition this fall.

"The Student Guide to America's 100 Best College Buys: 1997-98,"which will be released to bookstores in October, is featuring K-State, along with 99 other schools, based on its affordability, high academic standards and freshman test scores.

"I had a real positive reaction to this news because, for all three of these factors, K-State works very hard," said Carla Jones, associate dean of student life and director of the Office of Student Life.

When looking at schools, the publishers of the new book, John Culler & Sons of South Carolina, looked first to schools where costs for the 1996-97 academic year were below the national average of $13,300 for out-of-state students. Cost is not the only factor, however. Overall academic success was important when choosing the schools.

Since 1984, K-State has had more students named as Truman, Rhodes, Marshall and Goldwater scholars than any other university.

"I think the value for your money here is very good, but I'm biased because I have two degrees from here and my children graduated from K-State," said Dick Elkins, director of admissions.

Although Elkins said his children made the decision to attend K-State, the low cost made a difference to them.

"They looked at other schools across the country, but they came here because of the quality of education you get for the money," Elkins said.

Research sent into space

ANDREA COREY
staff reporter

Five experiments from BioServe Space Technologies, housed in Ackert Hall, will be sent up to the Russian space station MIR.

Space Shuttle Atlantis, which at press time was scheduled to launch today at 4:54 a.m. EDT, will carry the experiments.

The experiments cover varying types of science, including microbiology, water purification and plant growth.

Although some of the experiments last a shorter time, two of the experiments going up will stay active on MIR for four months.

Margie Juergensmeyer, graduate student in microbiology, studies the effects of microgravity on bacteria being more resistant to antibiotics.

She said not very much microbiology has been done in space. In fact, most of the studies Juergensmeyer used for the basis of her research is from the 1970s and '80s.

"They mostly send up rats and humans," she said.

Juergensmeyer's study involves two kinds of bacteria — Escherichia coli (the kind found in human intestines) and Bacillus subtilis.

She is looking for patterns of resistance to antibiotics in those samples.

Juergensmeyer said many people don't know the amount of research NASA has done and the effects research can have.

"The spinoffs are incredible," she said.

One example is a type of heart monitor NASA developed that is now being used in hospitals.

James Urban, associate professor of biology, is sending research to MIR to study magnetic bacteria.

Urban said these particular bacteria, usually found in deep sediments in the ocean, align themselves, somewhat like a compass does, to the north. The bacteria also respond to gravity, like everything else on the planet, but overwhelmingly tend to respond to the forces of magnetism.

On Earth, if the bacteria are placed in a petri dish with a magnet, the bacteria will, after a period of days, align themselves to that magnet and move toward it.

Urban said the reason he is studying these bacteria in space is to find out whether the bacteria respond to magnetism in the same way in the absence of gravity. He said so far there has not been enough time on the shuttles for the experiments to be in space long enough to show more dramatic results.

Urban said he is hoping the three to four months on MIR will show results that will be more dramatic and therefore more measurable.

He said the possible applications of his research later might be to manipulate the organism to perform functions based on how it responds to magnetism.

Urban said he didn't know what to expect from the study.

"The fundamental question is 'How does this work?" he said.

The space shuttle is scheduled to arrive at MIR space station before midnight on Wednesday.

While at MIR, the shuttle will pick up astronaut Shannon Lucid, who now holds the record for the longest space flight of all U.S. astronauts. The crew will drop off astronaut John Blaha, who will spend more than four months on MIR. The experiments will also be dropped off at MIR.

The experiments will come back to Earth for study in January.

The space shuttle docking with MIR is the fourth of nine planned missions from 1995 to 1998.

New director appointed to Center for the Arts

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

The Manhattan Center for the Arts has changed leadership for the first time in its short history.

Terrie McCants, who had been coordinating the Center's capital-funds campaign since last March, was appointed executive director Thursday.

The Center's board of directors voted Wednesday after a review and interview process, but the announcement was not made until Thursday.

McCants, who has lived in Manhattan for two years, said she has no plans for changes at the Center except to continue to consolidate the various organizations that function under the umbrella of the Center.

On July 1, the Manhattan Arts Center, the Manhattan Civic Theatre and the Manhattan Arts Council were combined into the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

"The merged organizations allow us to be more comprehensive with what what we offer the community," McCants said. "It's important we reach the community with our classes, theater, pottery and arts shows."

McCants said she wants the Center to collaborate more with other local arts agencies.

"It's important to enhance K-State's own programming by providing outlets for local and regional talent," she said. "Partnerships are important."

McCants is assuming the role created by John Biggs, who founded the Center and is credited with the July 1 merger.

"You cannot be compared to someone who has created and fostered a community program," McCants said. "It's extremely difficult to fill someone's shoes."

Offer expires October 11, 1996. No payment of interest or principal will be required for 90 days. Interest accruing during this 90-day period will be added to the principal and will bear interest, which will be included in the repayment schedule. For example, the month of May 1996 had an interest rate of 12.15% with an Annual Percentage Rate (APR) of 13.93%. A monthly payment of $50.23 for the Power Mac 7200/120 system is an estimate based on a total loan amount of $2,925.53, which includes a sample purchase price of $2,707 and a 6% loan origination fee. Interest is variable based on the Prime Rate as reported on the 5th business day of the month in The Wall Street Journal, plus a spread of 3.9%. Monthly payment and APR shown assumes deferment of principal and does not include state or local sales tax. The Apple Computer Loan has an 8-year loan term with no prepayment penalty and is subject to credit approval. OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Career Fair can make getting a job easier

The collegiate experience is known to provide students many opportunities in both social and academic areas.

On Tuesday, K-State students, from freshmen to seniors of all curricula, have the chance to develop their skills in both these areas at the annual All-University Career Fair.

WHY WE CARE

The All-University Career Fair is a valuable chance for all K-State students to job hunt, find out about internships and network.

The fair provides a student the basic opportunities of searching for a job or an internship.

Instead of spending hours on the Internet scanning companies' histories, a student can walk from table to table and speak to a representative personally.

To have such an extensive group of possible employers present at one time and place gives the average student an advantage, something that is necessary in today's flooded, competitive job market.

On the social side, the fair gives students the chance to develop social and professional speaking skills.

By honing conversational skills early, one can impress possible employers in future interviews.

Additionally, even if some employers might not be interested in a person's skills, they might know someone from a different vocation who would be.

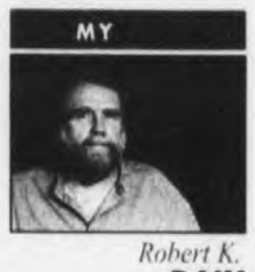
In today's world, networking is everything.

For every representative who is at the fair, there may be three companies that person knows of who could offer employment.

Finally, it offers the chance to dress up and look professional.

Image is important, and formal clothing tends to lend the wearer a more professional frame of mind than jeans and a T-shirt.

Besides the Career Fair, there is the option of applying to volunteer at the Opportunity Fair, which in and of itself serves a dual purpose by developing skills while building a résumé.



This year, take some time to attend the Career Fair.

It will run from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday, so everyone has time between classes to scout out the professional marketplace.

Work on those résumés, run to the copiers for duplicates and press those clothes: the opportunity at hand may prove to be that of a lifetime.

Teaching democracy in Slovenia brings language, attendance problems

MY

Robert K. DALY

The answer to the first question of "How was it teaching in a war zone?" was easy. The second question — "What were the students like?" — takes a bit more time and explanation.

In my five months of teaching in Ljubljana, Slovenia, the northwest tip of the former Yugoslavia, my only battle was getting on overcrowded buses and fighting for beers at student pubs.

While Ljubljana, the capital, is only 60 miles from Zagreb in Croatia, the Slovenian involvement in the Yugoslavian war lasted only 12 days in 1991. The country has been peaceful since.

As a Fulbright lecturer at the University of Ljubljana's Department of Journalism, I had 100 second-level students. That meant reading, correcting and editing 100 news stories, features, opinion pieces or columns a week.

That demand ate up almost all the weekends and a few of the other days, but it gave me a great insight into students. A bonus of teaching, of course, is how much you learn from students.

I was given carte blanche on what and how to teach, but was requested to speak on investigative reporting. This is the only area my students did not write on because of their inexperience with freedom of the press and my lack of time to work with so many of them.

Overall, the students were much more comfortable and better at writing features and opinion pieces because, as with most eastern or central Europeans, they had not had the exposure or history of our rough and tumble reporting, especially in political and governmental reporting, the main reason for newspapers' existence.

The same problem of explaining the rights American reporters have in access to governmental files, people and meetings was an issue I never successfully sold or explained to reporters and students while on a sabbatical in the Czech Republic and Slovakia two years ago.

In writing news and other reporting assignments, the Slovene students, compared with K-State students, were much more shy in getting information, much more willing to be one-sided and were much more willing to slip in or just add their opinion (very similar to sports writers here who mostly talk about themselves rather than the event).

I knew going in I would not be able to turn out aggressive American-type reporters or be able to have them rummaging through reports or government documents to get public affairs stories, so I focused on the basics of gathering news, interviewing techniques and writing news as done in this country.

I taught in English with only a few stabs at using Slovene, which always resulted in guffaws to outright roars. The students wrote in English.

Most students were polyglots with English their second, third or fourth language. Depending on where they lived in Slovenia, most students were fluent in Italian, Hungarian, Serbo-Croatian or German. Other languages they knew included Russian, French, Polish, Spanish, and a surprising number knew Latin.

After reading thousands of pages of their writing, I came to the conclusion that 80 to 90 percent of my Slovene students used English better, with more care and understanding and versatility than students at K-State. Their vocabulary was quite extensive and impressive.

Of course, their writing was not without problems, but most had to do with our overly abundant usage of idioms (I used "You bet!" and was greeted with confused looks); the perplexing use of the indefinite articles, or when an article is not used; the mind-bashing spelling rules or the mind-numbing nine pronunciations of the "ough" sound (cough, ought, tough, thorough, through, drought, etc.)

I did not spend most of my time correcting spelling, misused words or bad syntax as I do here, but in doing clean-up work in expressing ideas. Because Slovene has seven cases, it doesn't use prepositions as English does, so their writing often had odd, poor or no prepositions when needed. That was easy to fix.

I was consistently impressed with the students' willingness to learn and use correct English. They wanted to learn American English, not the English they had learned for at least eight years starting in grammar schools. If I corrected an error on a paper, rarely did it ever appear on another paper; they are serious students.

I don't want to paint the Slovene students as saints. One annoying habit they have is to maybe or maybe not attend weekly lectures or labs. Attendance after the first few lectures fell. This annoyed me because I had spent eight to 10 hours getting my lectures organized for students not familiar with our system, rights or laws.

The way I remedied this was to continue to give the main lecture to 50 or 60 students but in the labs, where they knew they were to get a must-do assignment, recap the important stuff.

Information for K-State faculty: Our colleagues at Ljubljana and Maribor universities work incredibly hard. They must produce books and articles in English. They have two or three classes, often with a hundred or more students. They are also considered intellectual property by the federal government, so they spend a lot of time on committee work, writing or drafting laws and policies and other governmental work. Their loads are heavy. But compared to our salaries at K-State — notoriously low — they enjoy better remunerations.

Learning to be Paranoid

BILL KRAAI/Collegian

Damn it! Someone out there is a knuckle-dragging, Spam-molesting thief.

Thursday morning I turned on my car and wasn't greeted by the sound of Shanda and Arwin welcoming me to the Edge.

I thought, "Whoa, it's awfully quiet." I reached down to turn up the stereo and my hand went into the dash.

Some butt-sniffing, beet-feeler stole the stereo out of my car.

I drive a piece of crap on wheels.

My 1985 blue Ford Mustang is a hunk of manure and I know it. Being a college student, I don't expect to have nice things. The only luxury I had in my pathetic life was a Kenwood stereo and speakers.

You don't understand; I had an emotional bond with this piece of electronics.

This stereo was a gift to me from a friend, a close friend, an intimate friend. This stereo was originally bought for the 1978 BMW I had in Germany. Many a morning, while hauling ass down the autobahn, this stereo and I grooved to techno-tunes and were brainwashed by the Armed Forces Network news.

And now it is gone, the victim of a senseless crime.

What frightens me is some grit-eating freak was wandering around Manhattan in the middle of the night looking into cars for something to steal. You would have never known my car with K-mart seat covers had a decent stereo hiding inside without really hunting around.

I locked my car around 11:45 p.m. Wednesday night and left the window down about three inches. I came back out at 5:55 a.m. Thursday morning, and the stereo was gone.

Whoever stole the little black box of wires reached their bony little arm through the window, opened the door and pulled out the stereo. The squirrel-licking bandit also crawled into the hatchback via the backseat and tore the speakers out. The scab-picking, shoe-sniffer locked the door again on the way out.

You would think it would be really quiet in a car without a stereo. It's not. You notice every squeak, squeal and moan the car makes. You talk to yourself out loud. You hum the small bits of songs you can remember.

Riding in a car without music is like solitary confinement on wheels. You gaze with envy at the drivers around you all bobbing their heads along with the music in their cars.

I can't make it. If I don't have my daily dose of DB92, I will go insane.

I NEED MUSIC. Hell, I would settle for talk radio — even AM.

As close as I am to lunacy, I will recover. I'll buy a new stereo. But I hate this feeling. I'm afraid. This time it was just my stereo. What if someone broke into my apartment? What if I get mugged?

The cliché "I never thought it would happen to me. Stuff like that only happens to other people," echoes in my head. I don't think about crime much. Those people who buy security systems always struck me as paranoid fools.

MY

Mary Renee SMITH

When I lived at home with my parents, we never locked the front door. I don't even think anyone had a key to the front door. We lived on a main street in town and never worried about being robbed.

When I moved out to my own house, I lived in the country. Everyone I knew left the keys in the ignition of the car and the front door wide open.

I am not naive. I don't walk through parking lots or alleys alone at night. I don't give out my credit card number over the telephone. I don't take money out of the ATM and then scream, "I've got a hundred dollars, come and get me."

I just didn't expect someone to search out my car and steal something from it. Those people who buy car alarms, they expect that. Those folks who carry Mace, they expect to be mugged. I don't want to live like that.

So now I will lock my doors and roll my windows all the way up. I will be more careful to guard my belongings from all the do-do heads of the world, and from all those people who missed the day in kindergarten when we learned you don't take things that don't belong to you.

Kassebaum's Landon Lecture

Editor,

I was dismayed to see that, in your coverage of the Landon Lecture by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., on Sept. 9, you omitted any reference to the two questions about the Employment Non-Discrimination Act that were put to Kassebaum. These questions and the Senator's answers were timely and important: ENDA was defeated by one vote, 50-49, the day after Kassebaum's lecture.

Because I asked the first of the two questions, I can tell you my primary objective was to educate the public about ENDA, the Senator's position, and the status of gays, lesbians and bisexuals in many workplaces in Manhattan, Kansas and America.

Quite simply, people can be — and are — fired for their sexual orientation, even if such action is based solely on rumor or suspicion. One can even be fired — and such cases have occurred — for hiring someone who is suspected of being gay or lesbian. Surely these issues are more newsworthy than the gossipy references to the Senator's possible marriage plans.

I find it especially deplorable that the Collegian gave space to Fred Phelps and his pitiful attempts to gain attention — as far as I can tell, most people these days have the good sense to ignore Phelps — and chose to ignore these vital issues that affect the lives of many of your readers.

My goal in asking Kassebaum about her opposition to ENDA was not to change her mind but rather to educate and inform the public.

I'm sorry that your reporter, Russell Fortmeyer, and your editors apparently do not to share these objectives.

Climatology at K-State

Editor,

We are pleased that the fine work of Mary Knapp, the K-State climatologist, was highlighted in the Collegian article Sept. 5. She is responsible for the Weather Data Library within the Department of Communications of the Division of Cooperative Extension and NOT in a Department of Climatology (as suggested by the Collegian article). Two of the important functions of the Weather Data Library, research support and data archiving, were appropriately mentioned.

However, in the absence of a Department of Climatology on this university campus — and most others — it is worth mentioning where a student at K-State can go for general education courses dealing with the weather and/or climatology. Environmental Geography I emphasizes the atmosphere and hydrosphere and serves as a prerequisite for Introduction to Climatology. These two geography courses provide a good scientific springboard to more advanced courses available throughout the University.

Show your purple pride

Editor,

Last weekend I had the opportunity to attend two great football games, the K-State Wildcats and the Kansas City Chiefs. Both teams left with terrific wins and the fans left filled with pride at their team's accomplishments.

I noticed several comparisons between the fans of both teams. Most noticeable was the strong support for the teams both inside and outside the stadium. It was evident the fans love their teams. However, there were also some distinctions that can be defined.

As you walk into Arrowhead Stadium, the sea of red is breathtaking. At once you realize you are in hostile territory, and the Chiefs are ones to reckon with.

With most stadium-goers wearing the bright red known to the Chiefs, an awesome feeling of team spirit overwhelms the opposing team. Furthermore on every defensive down, the roar of the crowd overtakes the stadium. Everyone joins in chorus, chanting, yelling and cheering. Fans continue this spirit throughout the game.

The fans fill KSU Stadium in a plethora of white and purple. Our stadium rocks for the first quarter and on every first down. The possibility of having a stadium full of purple intimidating the opposing fans and team inspires me to write to you, the fans of the K-State Wildcats!

Purple is the color of royalty. How majestic it would be for the Bearcats and all future opponents to enter our stadium and tremble at the sight and sound of us.

Imagine the roar of our chants penetrating their helmets causing them to stop in wondrous awe of our power. As Wildcat fans, let's make it our goal to fill the stadium with a sea of purple, and at the same time show our spirit to the team by cheering and chanting on every defensive down. Go Cats!

Fraternity should apologize

Editor,

I am writing in response to Corri Blick's defense of the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity. First, I would like to defend Suzie Solenberger's response to her treatment by the Lambda Chis.

Having worked as a pizza-delivery driver two summers ago, I know the potential dangers of the job. It is risky when you are carrying food and a bag of cash walking up to a house you've never been to delivering to people you've never met. Often the areas are poorly lit or people don't have their porch lights on, which the Lambda Chis didn't.

The risk to women delivery drivers is much worse than for men, when you consider they might be sexually assaulted or raped. So when a man and his buddies made threatening comments to Solenberger while she's standing on a dark porch, I think she had good reason to be frightened.

Now, when the police arrive at the fraternity, does the guilty party come forward and apologize? Nope. Do their fraternity brothers apologize for them? Nope. Instead, nobody knows anything.

If the members of this fraternity were such outstanding gentlemen, why hasn't anyone apologized for what happened? Instead of getting the guilty party to come forward, they protect him and cover it up.

If the Lambda Chis had some character, they would apologize to Solenberger.

ROSH HASHANAH

the Jewish new year

Jewish students, faculty appreciate fellowship found in Manhattan area

STORY BY DAN LEWERENZ

Rosh Hashanah is more than the beginning of a new year. It is a time of reflection for people of the Jewish faith — a chance to think about the mistakes of the past year and take steps to prevent them from happening again.

At K-State, where Jewish students and faculty are few and far between, simply arriving on campus can be a new opportunity.

"You're in the wrong place if you want to be a fundamentalist Jew," said Nathan Clarenburg, graduate student in computer and informational sciences. "My family moved here 30 years ago, and it's difficult to go down to Dillons and get kosher meat. It's difficult to go out to restaurants because they don't keep the milk separate from the meat. It's difficult to be an Orthodox Jew, if not impossible."

But Clarenburg and other Jewish students appreciate the community Manhattan has and the fellowship it offers.

"We kind of knew that KU had a larger group, but I didn't even know K-State had a Jewish group," Wendy Asner, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, said.

"We met some of the other Jewish students last week, and that was relieving," Sara Emeson, freshman in architectural engineering, said. "I didn't know when I came here whether there would be other Jewish people or not."

That's why coming together for holidays like Rosh Hashanah, celebrated last Friday and Saturday, and Yom Kippur, next Sunday and Monday, is that much more important in a city like Manhattan.

Manhattan's synagogue, at 1509 Wreath Ave., serves about 40 regular members from Manhattan and surrounding communities. Jan Galitzer, past president of the Manhattan Jewish Congregation Board, said K-State students and faculty always make up a sizable number of participants.

A TABLE of freshly prepared traditional food is part of the dinner for the new year. The two leftmost dishes are Israeli salads. There is also a potato salad and a red pepper dish (top center). To the right is the traditional apples and honey.

Jewish holidays

Rosh Hashanah, the first day of the Jewish new year, is spent in solemn prayer and begins the Ten Days of Penitence.

Yom Kippur, also known as the Day of Atonement, is a day of fasting and praying for forgiveness of this past year's sins.

Sukkoth, or the Feast of Tabernacles, is the fall harvest festival. Meals are traditionally eaten in a sukkah, a booth with a thatch roof, to recall the shelters of the Jews when they wandered in the wilderness.

Others come in from out of town because many neighboring communities don't have a synagogue.

"We almost always have Jewish cadets every year," the Rev. Jim Cox, chaplain of St. John's Military School in Salina, said. "And we commit ourselves that they'll be able to attend at least the holy day services, and try to get them here for Fridays so they can keep in touch with their faith."

Galitzer said one of the toughest tasks is convincing newcomers, who often come from larger Jewish communities, the congregation stays active without a rabbi.

"We do everything ourselves, and sometimes that's hard for people to understand," Galitzer said. "But that makes us closer as a family. It's like when we offered the prayer for the new baby, it's all our baby. It makes us closer, and we don't need a rabbi to be a congregation."

Asner, who comes from a Conservative congregation in Overland Park, said she doesn't mind the difference.

"This is more reformed than what I'm used to back home," Asner said. "But it's nice to know this kind of community is here. I'm glad I found out about it."

Asner and the rest of Manhattan's Jewish congregation will spend the next week, the holy time between Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, in reflection. But one thing they can be grateful for is the chance to express their faith in Manhattan.

"Having the opportunity to be a Jew here — it is an opportunity," Clarenburg said.

"All this talk about America and freedom of speech, freedom of religion, all that is is the opportunity to be free. And in Manhattan, we do have that opportunity, and that's great," he said.

SHEL EDELMAN, left, and Jan Galitzer find passages in the scroll that will be read during the Rosh Hashanah service.

Cats earn respect with 35-0 bashing

■ K-State's defense shuts down Cincinnati offense. No last-second heroics this year.

TODD STEWART
sports writer

One year after barely escaping Cincinnati with a 23-21 victory, K-State had something to prove.

"It was a personal thing for us," defensive end Nyle Wiren said.

The Wildcats got their point across in a 35-0 thumping of the Bearcats Saturday at KSU Stadium.

K-State coach Bill Snyder said the score did not surprise him, even after it took last-play heroics for wide receiver Kevin Lockett to pull out the win last year.

"I was not surprised. I wouldn't have been surprised if we lost the game," Snyder said. "Whatever it takes to get it done."

Saturday, what it took was a running attack and defense.

The Cats rushed for 257 yards on the game, led by Marlon Charles' 106 yards and two touchdowns.

In fact, it was the rushing attack that did all the scoring in the game.

Running back Mike Lawrence's 2-yard touchdown run in the first quarter started the Cats' scoring and four short touchdown runs by Charles, Lawrence again, fullback Brian Goolsby and Charles again, capped off the Cat scoring drives.

But it was the defense Snyder said made the difference in the game.

"If you're good on defense, we have basically a chance everyday," Snyder said.

He said one play in particular may have helped set the tone for the defense.

On a 2nd-and-8 play from the Bearcats' 28-yard line, late in the first quarter, linebacker DeShawn Fogle was sent on a blitz up the middle and knocked Bearcat quarterback Chad Plummer out of the game until the start of the second quarter.

"We had a blitz on and I just didn't get blocked," Fogle said. "I just hit him as hard as I can."

But the mood was set.

Cornerback Chris Canty said much of the defense's success can be attributed to the secondary and shutting down Cincinnati receivers Anthony Ladd and Robert Tate.

"We just wanted to come out and set the tone and I think we did that," Canty said. "Emphasis all week was on stopping Tate and Ladd. The secondary came out and had a great game."

Canty also came out and lent a helping hand to the offense.

Late in the first quarter Canty switched to offense and caught the first reception of his career. The 22-yard reception gave the Cats a first down and Canty a memory he said he would not soon forget.

"I think I'll remember that for a long time. Until the second one," Canty said.

That play was one of the last that Canty's secondary teammate, Mario Smith, would see. When the Cats were forced to punt in the final minute of the first half, Smith would be ejected for a personal-foul, elbow-to-the-head of a Bearcat player.

Smith said it was a retaliation from a unseen clip on the punt coverage.

"It was a cheap shot," Smith said. "I just wanted to apologize to the fans, my team and the coaches. I know that's a big mistake."

Snyder said it won't happen again.

"He's perfectly willing to accept responsibility for it and has," Snyder said. "I can assure you it won't happen again."

K-State, 3-0, will travel to Rice on Saturday for its first road game of the season, and Snyder said not to be fooled by the Cincinnati score, because the Cats still have many things to work on.

"I think we've continued to make improvements," Snyder said. "But there's always something you're going to have to correct."

Wolverines win battle in Lawrence; men finish 4th; women finish 2nd

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

It might have been Kansas' Jayhawk Invitational, but Michigan dominated. Trailing the Wolverines was K-State's cross country team.

The Wildcats' men's team finished fourth-overall with 92 points while the women's side finished second with 54 points.

Led by Cristy Swartz, the women's team showed the potential it has to be a contender for the NCAA National Championships in November.

The women's course, normally a five-kilometer trek, was actually shorter than usual because of construction. Kansas will be the host of the National Championships in two years. The shorter course resulted in faster times for the runners, but even so, Coach Terry Drake said personal records were still set.

"You would add about 30 seconds to their times to make up for the course being shorter," he said.

Swartz finished first overall with a time of 17:03, eight seconds faster than the second-place runner. Her personal best before the race was 18:30. Add the 30 seconds to Swartz's Saturday time, and she topped her personal best by nearly a minute.

"I was as surprised as everybody else," Swartz said. "But I'm excited. I guess I have a big year ahead of me."

Samantha McNamara also had a good race for the Wildcats and finished only a couple of seconds out of fourth place. Together with Swartz, Drake said he expects both runners to be all-Americans at the end of the season.

Swartz said she agreed.

"We should go to nationals this year," she said. "I'm kind of excited."

What impressed Drake the most about the women's team was its determination.

"The girls showed strength. They're a determined group and they want to do well and do well badly," he said.

On the men's side, Drake wasn't as excited.

"This was a perfect example of the dynamics of our team," he said. "If a couple of the guys don't have a good race, the team doesn't place well."

Zach Davies and Chris May, both expected to be leading runners on the men's team, had bad races Saturday. May is recovering from a bout of food poisoning from last week.

"It shows our glaring weakness," Drake said. "We just don't have any depth."

But there were bright spots on the men's team.

Ryan Clive-Smith and Paul Birnbaum each had excellent races, Drake said. Clive-Smith's time of 24:57 wasn't a personal best but Drake said it was definitely the best Clive-Smith has run at this point in the season.

"They ran great," Drake said of Clive-Smith and Birnbaum. "They ran with a good group of runners."

Also impressing Drake was Brent Stover who finished 28th overall, but was K-State's fourth-top runner.

"He picked up the slack. He's supposed to be our sixth guy, and he finished 28th," Drake said.

"If Davies and May had ran better, we would have been in good shape."

Cats sweep home tournament

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

The K-State volleyball team improved its record to 10-1 after mopping up its opponents this weekend at the Commerce Bank/KSU Invitational. The Wildcats went 4-0 to win their home invitational and didn't lose a game in their four matches.

K-State coach Jim Moore said he was proud of the team.

"I'm just happy it's over right now," Moore said. "I think we played well. I thought coming in they were four matches we had to win, and we did."

Swing hitter Kim Zschau and middle blocker Kate DeClerk were named as co-MVPs of the tournament. Setter Devon Ryning and play-set-hitter Toie Young also made the all-tournament team.

"Co-MVP's are not a usual thing," Moore said. "I've haven't seen it happen before."

The Cats got the ball rolling in the first match Friday against UMKC winning 15-6, 15-1, 15-5. K-State cleared out the bench against the Kangaroos with every player on the team getting action in at least two games. Freshman setter Linsey Luther had a good outing in her first match with extensive action, racking up 14 assists.

Luther's performance relieved Moore, who said the team needed depth at setter behind starter Ryning.

"We have to have a back-up," Moore said. "That's why it's so important we get Linsey some confidence and experience, not only from a game standpoint, but from a practice standpoint. The better Linsey is in practice, the better the second team is. Therefore, the better our competition is every single day.

"Linsey set really, really well. She didn't do anything wrong, and as a setter that's hard to do. She didn't do anything flashy. She bettered the ball. If there wasn't a real good

Fans getting used to Jumbo noise

staff writer

Recent grumbling made by some fans about the decibel level of commercials on the JumboTron has been drowned out by fan support of the huge console.

Larry Nelson, Claflin resident, sat in folding chairs directly below the JumboTron at Saturday's game. He said the speakers were loud, but it didn't lessen his enjoyment of the game.

"I'm 50-years-old. The noise doesn't bother me," Nelson said.

The general consensus among fans at Saturday's game was that the JumboTron is a huge asset to K-State football.

"I think it adds a lot to the game," Judy Ahrens, Manhattan resident, said. "I liked that they showed the words to the alma mater."

Lori Sampson, senior in secondary education, said her seats in ICAT provided a good angle to view the screen, although she did have one complaint.

"Sometimes the commercials are a little bit loud," she said. "But I like the replays."

Kent Brown, K-State Sports Information director, said fan complaints after the first game prompted officials to make adjustments to the JumboTron.

"We had some phone calls from people, especially the first week, about the sound of commercials," Brown said. "We made a lot of adjustments the second week to fine tune it."

Brown said the volume level was brought down to accommodate fans at the north end of the stadium, who were closest to the speakers.

He said the camera crews are also becoming more accustomed to their job and are more in sync with the band.

Brown pointed out that like in anything new, it takes some time to work out the kinks.

"The first time you do anything there are going to be some flaws," he said. "Each week we are getting better."

Some fans said they believed the JumboTron wasn't in need of any improvements.

"I think it's great," Jeff Fitzmaurice, Humboldt resident, said from his seat in section two. "I don't think there are that many bad seats to see it."

Todd Haas, Topeka resident said the Jumbotron added a positive spin to the atmosphere of the crowd.

"It gives a chance for the fans to get into the game more," Haas said. "We get more into it when we can see replays."

Shirley Arnold, Sante Fe Trail resident, was seated directly below the JumboTron. She said the noise only added to the enthusiasm of the game.

"It doesn't bother me at all," she said.

"It's all in the spirit of the game."

Bands duke it out in the Opus 10 competition

Moksee conquers

Debbie Hollis
staff reporter

The Opus 10 Band Competition brought together seven unsigned bands Friday. Three of those bands won. Moksee, Red Eldon and Julia Surrendered took first, second and third place respectively.

Moksee earned first place and $400 hands down. Jessica Cullison, junior in journalism and mass communications, surprised and captivated the audience with her powerful voice. This petite young woman belted out the voice of a well-trained musician, smooth and deep, during sound-check before the set began.

During their performance, Cullison took control of the evening with her dynamic stage presence. She introduced each song, involved the audience in her support of guitarist Aaron Fisher, sophomore in electrical engineering, and even had members of the group Llama dancing around the light poles on the porch of Seaton Hall.

Ann Giebler, sophomore in elementary education, on keyboard and Monty Brown, senior in mechanical engineering, on drums complemented the group well but were never given a chance to demonstrate the extent of their individual talents.

Look out. With vocals like these, Moksee is bound to make a splash on the local scene. The band will play at 10 p.m. Sept. 24 at Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

Second place and $250 went to Red Eldon. The four-man band played third in the competition. But it was the first to really be heard.

The lead vocals of Heath Dumler, while limited in range, were audible and melodic. Jacob Goheen and Brandon Mock on bass and guitar and the drummer, Brandon Lapo, showcased their talent in a variety of solos and interludes throughout the set. The funky beat and slap guitar brought to mind a mix of Red Hot Chili Peppers and Primus. While the band's sound was not unique, it was a great blend of what's out there.

Students might be familiar with Red Eldon. The band has played at Last Chance and will play at the Tap Room in Topeka sometime in October.

Third place and $150 went to Julia Surrendered, ruining the judges' perfect record. Oh well, two out of three isn't bad.

Although the crowd remained attentive during its performance, Julia Surrendered's sound faded into the endless catalog of alternative bands with no sound to call its own. It benefited from the tired ears of the judges and fell victim to the tired ears of the critic because it was the last band to compete.

There's little to say about the band. Think of any other amateur band, and the sound of Julia Surrendered could easily be substituted.

One of the categories bands were judged on was instrumental ability. Ruskabank had instrumental ability that blew your socks off.

Amigos to open in Union

R.J. Diepenbrock

Amigos, a Mexican fast-food restaurant, will open in the K-State Student Union on Tuesday.

A small service area will be set up in the Union Stateroom, where students can purchase any of the 17 food items, many cheaper than $1.

Along with lunch and dinner, Amigos will offer a breakfast selection.

On Sept. 23, the trio Los Tres Caballeros, will sing in the Stateroom during lunch to officially open the food stand, said Teto Henderson, program adviser for the Union Program Council.

"This provided us with an opportunity to add to our variety of food service," Bernard Pitts, director of the Union, said. "We needed some grab-and-go items."

Amigos was chosen by a committee of students, faculty and staff who interviewed about nine different food services.

"It was felt Amigos met the campus needs," Pitts said.

Pitts said bringing in food chains will help to broaden national recognition of the K-State food court and its services.

Also, negotiations are under way to contract a fast-food hamburger and pizza restaurant.

Deadline only a week away for December graduation applicants

Debbie Hollis
staff reporter

Although December graduation seems to be in the distant future; the deadline to apply for graduation is less than a week away.

Students need to get a graduation check the semester before the semester they plan to graduate. A grad check is a chance to straighten out any confusion about what credits are still needed or how transfer hours should be assigned, said Diane Barker, transcript specialist for the College of Arts and Sciences.

Students who plan to graduate in December or May and have not received a grad check need to visit their dean's office soon, Barker said.

Applying for graduation is not automatic. This semester, the deadline to apply for graduation is Friday. Applications can be picked up and returned to the deans' offices.

Students who miss the deadline might not be able to graduate, Barker said.

Once students turn in their applications, they will receive confirmation in the mail. Students who do not receive confirmation within three weeks of turning in their applications need to go to the dean's office and ask about it them, Barker said.

Students can order announcements and buy their caps and gowns at the Grad Fair from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Oct. 16-17 in the K-State Student Union courtyard, said Don Becker, clothing and gift buyer for the K-State Union Bookstore.

Graduation is Dec. 13-14, and it is important to make sure out-of-town guests have hotel accommodations. Rooms for December graduation go a little slower than in May, Sandy Robb, front desk clerk at Day's Inn, said.

"We're about half-full now," she said. "Rooms for May graduation sold out seven months ago."

Students should order an official transcript from the registrar's office, Barker said.

"Students need to know what record they are presenting," she said.

Students who graduate in December have a head start in the job-search process.

"You get a full half a year to look for jobs before the majority of students graduate in the spring," Jeff Wagner, graduating senior in sociology, said.

On-campus services can aid students in that search.

"December grads have the best of all worlds," said Marcia Schuley, assistant director of Career and Employment Services.

Golden Key Week commences

Kari Brown
staff reporter

Golden Key National Honor Society will feature five different themes during Golden Key Week. This week, events will be featured under a tent on the K-State Student Union lawn.

These daily activities help to get the campus involved with the 15-year-old organization, which emphasizes academic excellence as well as community and campus service, said Fred Fairchild, Golden Key adviser.

"It's hard to stay well-known because of graduation," said Bob Kohl, senior in Spanish and president of Golden Key. The organization requires its members to be juniors or seniors.

Today, the chapter is featuring some of the fundraising projects it does throughout the year. Golden Key helps charities such as Big Brothers and Big Sisters of America, Habitat for Humanity and, on the regional level, Ronald McDonald Houses.

Throughout the week, Golden Key will be giving away different prizes all students are eligible to win. It will also be giving away a textbook worth up to $100 to promote academic excellence on campus, Kohl said.

Other activities include a banquet on Tuesday evening, at which students will have a chance to question a panel of faculty members. At the dinner, the graduate teaching assistant of the year will also be announced.

Honorary members, including community and faculty, will gather for a reunion Wednesday.

Officers and directors of Golden Key will meet with prospective members at 6 p.m. Thursday at City Park. There will be an informational meeting followed by an ice cream social all members are invited to attend.

To conclude Golden Key's campus awareness week, membership registration will take place Friday. Membership is by invitation only, Lewis said.

For the last 12 years, K-State's chapter has won the prestigious Key Chapter Award. The award is consecutive, and no other college has had a record like K-State's, said Katrina Lewis, senior in interior architecture.

Award selection is based on chapter activities. Golden Key tries to do an activity a week, Kohl said.

Local radio and TV stations will be broadcasting live from the Union courtyard during the week.

participate in. These issues were a significant focus of the interviews.

Teske's critical issue was "Readers are Leaders: The Importance of Parents' Reading to Their Pre-School Children."

"I have always loved to read," Teske said. "I read all the time when I was a little girl. Being in journalism made me realize that there are a lot of people out there who can't read. People need to become aware of it."

This issue will contribute to the list of appearances Teske will make this year.

"She will have parade appearances, and she will be in elementary schools talking to children about reading," Susie Stanfield, co-executive director, said. "She will also speak at luncheons to organizations about being sponsors of the pageant."

"We're very pleased," Stanfield said. "We just consider Deana one of our own. She's been back here every year, and we wanted the opportunity to work with her and her parents."

If, for any reason, Teske cannot fulfill her duties as Miss Manhattan/K-State, Jennifer Parks will step in for her. Parks was named the first runner-up and received a $100 scholarship.

"This is an exciting year," Stanfield said. "This is our 40th year, and this is one of the oldest local pageants. It is a lot of fun and a lot of hard work. Tara Dawn Holland started out at a local pageant just like this on a stage just like this."

Teske plans on becoming a reporter and a news anchor after college, but her immediate plans are different.

"This is great, but this is just a tiny portion of what is about to come this year. Sounds like they have a lot of appearances already for me. The best part will be representing all the people."

ASBURY

already had the job," Cal point guard Prentice McGruder said. "That came off on some of the players really wrong."

Asbury also expressed concerns about the Cal roster.

"Half their players didn't come to any of the candidates' interviews. I don't know what that reflects. Maybe it doesn't reflect anything. And I know the background of a lot of the players, being from the West Coast," Asbury said.

"But I just think I have an extraordinary group of guys."

Although Asbury admitted Cal had its attractions, including a large and talented recruiting base in California, Asbury said the commitment of K-State's administration and his devotion to his players kept him in Manhattan.

"That's the administrative support that we get here, and some of you have little or no feel for what goes on in college athletics administratively throughout the country," Asbury said.

"We have the best here, and I'm not just saying that because these guys are standing here. I told them that before I left. They're honest and fair and loyal, and between Ernie (Barrett) and Max (Urick) and Bob Krause and certainly Dr. Wefald, we've got unbelievable people here, and that's the reason that the University's enjoyed the amount of athletic and academic success we've had.

"And I love my guys. We're in the building process, and we think we have the base of a really sound and solid program. I'm a little conservative in my estimates and feelings as to how good we'll be and how soon we'll be, but I think we've got the makings of a really fine basketball program from start to finish."

Urick, K-State's athletic director, said he respected Asbury's decision to look at the Cal position but was glad he decided to stay.

"The world of college athletics is a winding one," he said. "Many times, you don't know what might lie around the next turn. And for that reason, I think it's important to keep a perspective on things — that's a healthy perspective on college sports — and be prepared and tighten your seat belts."

Wefald also expressed support for Asbury's decisions, both to interview and to stay.

"Am I delighted that Tom Asbury is staying at Kansas State? No, I'm thrilled. Am I upset that he went out and interviewed at the University of California at Berkeley? Absolutely not," Wefald said.

pass, she made it an easier swing."

The second match saw the Cats defeat South Carolina 15-7, 15-7, 15-5. DeClerk led the team with 13 kills, while Zschau and middle blocker Val Wieck each had 11.

Saturday, K-State kept its winning ways while downing Eastern Michigan 15-2, 15-5, 15-10, and Boise State 15-9, 15-5, 15-1, for the tournament championship.

Against Eastern Michigan, K-State again unloaded its bench with everyone seeing some playing time. Luther had 25 assists, while swing hitters Abbie Brown and Mandy Whitfield each had eight kills.

In the Wildcats' last match, Young, Brown and DeClerk all had 12 kills. Brown and Zschau each had three service aces.

Moore said his team might be starting to develop a sense for putting matches away.

"I hope we're starting to develop a killer instinct," Moore said.

"We have a bunch of real nice human beings on the team. They're just a bunch of kind, caring people. Beating Boise State 15-1 in the third game of the fourth match, I'd say, is pretty good," he said.

With the Cats' total domination over the weekend, Moore said he wasn't sure what it meant about the competition.

"I'm not sure if it was the competition wasn't as good as we thought, or we are just getting that much better," Moore said. "I think it might be a combination of both."

Moore said his team was able to keep its composure this weekend.

"We didn't get tired or lose our focus because we played so well," Moore said. "In the Eastern Michigan game and against UMKC, we had five freshmen and a sophomore on the floor. Nobody played the whole time, and that's great."

> "I hope we're starting to develop a killer instinct. We have a bunch of real nice human beings on the team."

> • JIM MOORE, VOLLEYBALL COACH

The play of the team proved a lot to Moore over the weekend.

"We showed we could be real good," Moore said.

"We have the ability to be real good. I can say for sure they're worth coming to watch. Win or lose, I think they're fun to watch. We're pretty athletic."

architectural engineering from Wyoming, said he also looked at other schools, including the University of Kansas and Texas Tech, but he chose K-State because it was the best value.

"I didn't want to go to the University of Wyoming. K-State had a much better program. It was also the least expensive school for out-of-state students," Holladay said.

Institutional Research & Evaluation Inc., a Georgia-based company that did research for the book, not only included the University's success rate, but it also considered the high-school grade point average, and ACT and SAT scores of the incoming freshman class.

"The fact that we can attract so many ones and twos of high-school classes and that our ACT scores are so high, in addition to being an open-admissions school, certainly does say something about this University," said Tom Schellhardt, associate vice president for administration and finance.

There are two reasons for more patrol, Grubbs said. It deters speeding and inattentive driving, and officers can monitor road-condition safety.

Grubbs said the RCPD plans two more things to decrease accidents. First, it will release safety tips.

"We want to keep things in front of the public so they can be safer drivers," he said.

Second, it will announce the selective-enforcement spots.

"We're going to notify the public that we're trying to conduct proactive enforcement using radar," he said. "So if you're in that area speeding, you may get a ticket."

Kennedy said he thinks accidents, injuries and traffic violations are down because of the RCPD's increased visibility.

Grubbs said these statistics could decrease even more if people would wear seatbelts and motorcycle helmets.

"I'm not viewing that as a political stance. I'm viewing that as a police officer," he said. "We're the ones who have to clean them up. We're the ones who have to notify their families that they're not going to be around anymore."

▶ BAND REVIEW

Local band makes transition

staff writer

The only thing more entertaining than experiencing the idiosynchronized chemistry of Seraphine 7, the guys, is experiencing Seraphine 7, the live band.

Often compared to the sounds of Sonic Youth, Jawbox and Season to Risk, Seraphine 7 hesitates to put a label on its music.

"We don't want to fall into any label," Eric Parker, guitarist, said. "We want to keep an open range."

While all of the band's music contains contributions from each of them, it usually reflects more of the mood of the vocalist first, then style.

"The theme is expression, lots of them, and feeling," Russell Behrends, bass guitarist, said.

"We're very plugged in. We rely on electronic doodads a lot," said Matt Anderson, drummer and freshman in secondary education.

"We like to work in extremes. There is a lot of compromise involved," he said.

"If we're about to kill each other over a song, it usually turns out pretty good, because if we feel that strongly about it, it's going to turn out better," Anderson said.

The band made the transition from the three-piece band, Ever Since My Accident, when it added guitarist Jeff Boren, junior in biology, a year ago.

"The principles are still the same as in Ever Since My Accident, but the aesthetics are different," Parker said.

"It's not as riffy, and it's a lot more complex," Parker said.

"Sometimes I think we're too meticulous about our music. The problem is you get so sick of the songs. You're just playing them into the ground, until you do it live again," Parker said.

Practicing about three or four times a week, the band rents a storage shed for rehearsing.

As concentrated and technical as its approach is, the band doesn't come across as pretentious, but rather the opposite, humble, with offbeat humor and sarcasm.

> "The humor we have is a big part of how we deal with each other, but I don't think it comes through in our music."
> • JEFF BOREN
> JUNIOR IN BIOLOGY

"We've all got different ideas of what we like, different tastes and styles," Boren said. "All four of us are guitarists, so one of us will bring something in and we will all go in on it."

"The humor we have is a big part of how we deal with each other, but I don't think it comes through in our music," he said.

The band plans to record a five- or six-song demo in October.

Until then, it will contend that it is open to playing anywhere, anytime, but that isn't always easy, Behrends said.

"It's such a job to get to play in Manhattan. It isn't that they want you to play. It's that you want to play for people," he said. "It's a pain in the ass."

Playing both house parties and local bars with local bands including Scully, Ultimate Fake Book, El Fontain, the Invisibles and Jiffy Boy, Seraphine 7 has developed a unique sound and following in a short time and made a name for itself among Manhattan bands.

"They have the dissonant and droning sound of Hum, but darker, with a psychedelic noise reminiscent of Sonic Youth," Marty Robertson, sophomore in psychology, said.

Robertson is guitarist and vocalist for El Fontain.

Others identify with how the band has and continues to develop.

"There is no band like them in Manhattan and it gives Manhattan, as little as it is, a new little twist," said Nick Colby, bass guitarist for Ultimate Fake Book.

"They're young and still working out the small kinks here and there, but they're talented. I can see where they're coming from," Colby said.

The name Seraphine 7 was the title of a 19th century German poem.

The word serafin means angelic in Italian and miser in French, Parker, a junior in German, said.

The band finds it mysterious that although those who attend shows are genuinely receptive, among students there is so little support for live music, especially when Manhattan has the best bands per capita, Anderson said.

Parker agreed virtually all Manhattan bands are good as opposed to larger cities that have a lot more bands where only a handful of them are good.

"There are so many good bands in Manhattan and everybody is listening to Bush. I don't get it," Parker said.

"I don't understand why these bands are still in Manhattan. Ultimate Fake Book and El Fontain, they should be signed. You're hard pressed to find a bad band in Manhattan," Parker said.

Job hunters need to be prepared for Career Fair

VALERI CRENSHAW
staff reporter

Dust off that resume and free the moths from that suit in the back of the closet. It is time to get ready for the All-University Career Fair.

K-State will sponsor the third annual Career Fair Tuesday from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the K-State Student Union.

Both graduate and undergraduate students from all colleges are invited to participate. Students will have the opportunity to speak with employers from 193 organizations about co-op, intern and professional employment opportunities.

In anticipation of the Career Fair, there are several things students should do to fully prepare themselves for interviews, said Tracey Fraser, director of Career and Employment Services.

"Students should have an understanding of the type of job they are interested in they should have a well-written resume and learn about the companies they wish to interview with," Fraser said.

Fraser said she recommends students bring a sufficient amount of copies of their resumes to the Career Fair.

"Some might want to bring 40 or 50 copies, depending on how many companies they plan to interview with," she said.

There are two ways Career and Employment Services has made the employers accessible to research. One way is to visit the office in Holtz Hall and get a list of the employers and another way is to visit the homepage set-up for the Career Fair. The address is (http://www.ksu.edu/ces/student/CareerFair/career.html).

From this page, students can link to a master list of employers attending the fair with the option to access the employers' home pages.

In addition to research and resumes, it is important to dress appropriately for the occasion.

"Dress professionally. Appearance is important. This is a business transaction," Fraser said.

Students are free to come and go throughout the day. To get the most out of the Career Fair, Fraser said she recommends using time efficiently and allowing plenty of time throughout the day.

"Certainly start early. Employers have the greatest availability early in the day. Use time wisely. Don't stand in long lines, and know who you want to speak with," Fraser said.

During the fair, students can get additional information from the student registration table.

"The day of the event, students will be able to stop at the student registration table to get a name tag, a map of the Union and a list of the employers," Fraser said.

GET THE EXPERIENCE

K-State colleges requiring internships and how to obtain one

STORY BY CHRIS DEAN

Today more departments than ever require their students to have internships to graduate, and the Career Fair offers a chance for students, even those not preparing to graduate, to meet contacts and possible summer employers. Many companies at the annual event will also be looking for future interns.

The following is a rundown of who needs what, when and where. Information on specific majors is available through the K-State Undergraduate Catalog.

THE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE

Who: Although most departments do not require students to receive internships in order to graduate, all departments encourage it and have programs in place so students can receive college credit for their internship experience. A few of the departments that require internships are crop consulting through the Department of Agronomy and the Department of Horticulture, Forestry and Recreational Resources.

How to find them: All companies looking for interns are published in the college's newsletter. All advisers are also kept up-to-date on internship opportunities in order to better help the students.

THE COLLEGE OF ARCHITECTURE AND DESIGN

Who: During spring semester of the fourth year, every student has the option of participating in a 30-week internship program that will earn the student academic credit. Although it is not required, 15-25 percent of the students choose to participate in the Department of Architecture's internship program, Eugene Kremer, coordinator of the architecture internship program, said.

How to find them: All students are informed of the internship option when they first enroll in the College of Architecture and Design, and any interested students are placed on a roster. These students are informed whenever an internship in their field becomes available. The college also holds informational meetings and keeps all information posted on a bulletin board located outside its office.

THE COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES

Who: Internships for students in the College of Arts and Sciences vary depending on which major the student is in. Majors in social work and various journalism degrees are required to do internship work, and other majors, such as criminology, have optional internship programs. These programs offer students academic credit for their internship experience. Most majors, however, do not have a set internship program. These majors include English, mathematics and biology, among others.

How to find them: Students interested in exploring internship options should check with their department's office or their adviser. Career and Employment Services located in Holtz Hall, also works to help these students find internship possibilities. Students in majors where there is no specific internship program should check with their adviser for other employment possibilities.

THE COLLEGE OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

Who: Business students are not required to pursue internships, though the option is available for any student to receive academic credit for an approved summer internship.

How to find them: It is up to students to locate their own positions, although they can receive help from Career and Employment Services or from their individual advisers. In order to receive credit for the internship, students must sign up for the summer internship course offered through the college. If students wish to complete the internship during the school year, they must enroll in independent study and make special arrangements with the college.

THE COLLEGE OF EDUCATION

Who: All students in the College of Education are required to student-teach or otherwise participate in an internship for graduation.

How to find them: Students must submit an application for student teaching a year in advance of when they wish to participate in the program. The College of Education then places the students in a particular school.

THE COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING

Who: Engineering students are not required to have an internship, but the dean's office highly recommends it as a way to better the chances of employment after graduation.

How to find them: Information on internship opportunities is made available through Career and Employment Services. Information is also posted on the College of Engineering's World Wide Web page. Students are encouraged to start researching possible contacts as soon as September for summer internships.

THE COLLEGE OF HUMAN ECOLOGY

Who: "Internships are not required for all but everyone's encouraged to pursue some sort of summer employment or internship," said Karen Pence, assistant dean of human ecology.

Some of the internship-requiring majors include apparel and textile design, food science, nutrition and exercise science, dietetics, and hotel and restaurant management.

How to find them: Students are encouraged to look to the Career and Employment Services office for assistance in finding internships, as well as attend the Career Fair. The college also offers preparatory courses designed to help students develop their résumés, and interview and research techniques.

THE COLLEGE OF TECHNOLOGY AT K-STATE-SALINA

Who: Internships are not required, although various companies throughout the community offer internships for these students, who can receive credit for them.

How to find them: The K-State-Salina campus has its own Career Services center where students can go to find out about possible employment or internship opportunities.

THE COLLEGE OF VETERINARY MEDICINE

Who: In order to become a veterinary medicine major, students are encouraged to have animal exposure and work experience in order to help their chances of being accepted into the college. Once in the college, during the senior year, students work in an on-campus clinic for field-experience work. They are also required to participate in an externship, where students work in a clinical environment off-campus.

How to find them: For the senior-year field experience, students are automatically placed in a particular rotation, in which they will study various specialties of veterinary medicine.

The externship is something students locate on their own or through the help of their advisers, and it must be compieted before they graduate.

Architects might pay

■ College investigating funding new equipment with semesterly fee.

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

The College of Architecture, Planning and Design might be adding a $100 fee for all architecture students. The fee will pay for replacing and purchasing equipment.

"If we don't find a way to raise money, the state must find it. I don't think they are going to be able to do that. If we don't get money, the students are not going to be competitive," Dennis Law, dean of architecture, planning and design, said.

Law said the fee addition is still in the beginning stages. He said the $100 fee would be paid by every architecture student each semester. If the fee is approved, he said, he is confident the fee would be assessed next fall.

One upperclassman said he is not in favor of paying the fee.

"I have problems with me paying $100 a semester for somebody five years down the road to get the benefits from it," Kevin Albrecht, junior in landscape architecture, said.

Ray Weisenburger, associate dean of architecture, planning and design, said the money would have a direct application for the students.

"It will be a combination of students and faculty to decide what the money will be spent on," Weisenburger said.

The fee would be statewide. Architecture programs at both the University of Kansas and K-State would implement the fee. The fee would not be internal and would require the approval of the Kansas Board of Regents.

Melanie Smith, sophomore in architecture, said she is willing to pay the fee. She said the quality of equipment is inferior to equipment in other departments. Smith said new drawing tables and stools would make projects for students much easier.

Law said there are three groups researching which areas in the college need funding. They are supposed to report to him by Friday, he said. The groups are looking at computing, multimedia and individual departmental needs.

The final decision will be made by looking at what the highest priority is and how to achieve it, Law said.

The $100 fee is not a new concept. KU and K-State are the only two Big 12 schools with architecture programs that do not assess a fee. At K-State, the College of Engineering requires full-time students to pay $100 each semester.

Fast food suffers from poor communication, student finances

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

Greeks, tipping, bad communication and parties are just some of the things that can cause problems for restaurants that deliver.

Local pizza restaurants have varying opinions about greeks. Some agree that sororities and fraternities are definitely more difficult to deliver to than regular customers, while others have never had a problem with them.

"For the most part, greeks are just fine," Dan High, Aggieville Pizza employee, said. "They usually tip well but are a lot pickier and gripier."

Pat Musselman, Pyramid Pizza employee, agrees it is more difficult but said sororities are much easier to deliver to than fraternities. He said fraternities never have anyone waiting at the door, whereas sorority members are always waiting with cash in hand.

Nikki Booth, manager of Little Caesars Pizza, said they have never had a problem with greeks, and if they ever do, there is an easy solution.

"If someone abuses the service, we will quit delivering to them," she said.

Tipping can also be a problem for many local restaurants. Most college students cannot afford to tip at all, and those who can don't tip much.

Musselman said tipping is always better at the beginning of the year, when students have more money and have just received financial aid checks. As the year goes on, tipping decreases drastically.

Little Caesars Pizza has run into several problems resulting from bad communication.

Signs to celebrate livestock, debate teams' success

KENNY WENTWORTH
staff writer

A new sign displaying the accomplishments of K-State will welcome travelers along Interstate 70.

The awards of the livestock-judging team and K-State Debate Team will be on the new signs at both K-State exits to Kansas Highway 18 and Interstate 177.

College of Agriculture Senator Bret Glendening said the sign has been an idea for a couple of years.

"I'm glad we now have something tangible through years of work. It has been a long time coming," Glendening said.

For the signs to become a reality, Student Governing Association had to propose the signs to Gov. Bill Graves. Resolution 969720, the SGA proposal, was never voted on and was still in the Committee for Government Relations, Glendening said. The estimated cost of each sign is $2,000.

> ● BRET GLENDENING
> COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE SENATOR

In Monday's Topeka Capital-Journal, Arlen Tappen, a Kansas Department of Transportation traffic-signing engineer, said if the president of the University or the winning team members request the sign themselves, the sign is free.

John Fairman, assistant to the vice president of institutional advancement, said after the administration received the article, it called KDOT.

"This morning, we both agreed on the signs, and now they are in the process of being created," Fairman said.

This comes as a surprise to the coach of the judging team.

"I didn't know about it until today, but I really appreciate the support the College of Agriculture gets from the administration," Scott Schake, coach of the judging team, said.

There are two groups of signs going each way along the highway. Among the two groups of signs are three individual signs.

The first sign says the next exit is the one to be taken to get to K-State. Below that the two smaller signs read "Natl Debate Champions 1991 and 1992."

In four to six weeks, the two smaller signs will read "National Debate Champions 1991 and 1992" and "National Livestock Judging Champions 1994 and 1995," Fairman said.

Bosnians complain elections flawed

SPEED

▶ Controversy surrounds Bosnia's first post-war elections. While organizers argue they did their best, critics say the polling was flawed and invalid.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnia's first post-war election was no model for democracy. Beyond that, much is open to interpretation.

Organizers argue the vote was the best that could have been expected in a country crippled by war's divisions. But some observers say the polling was flawed to the point of making its results invalid.

There was broad relief, though, that the national and regional elections were mostly peaceful. Turnout was estimated at between 60 and 70 percent in Bosnia's first post-war ballot, intended to start the long process of reconciliation between Muslims, Serbs and Croats.

But with glitches in free movement and confusion about where to vote and voters-registration lists, nobody was claiming the elections were perfect — particularly after campaigns full of rhetoric about letting the new government collapse and allowing Bosnia to split once and for all into two halves, one controlled by Serbs and the other by Muslims and Croats.

Fair to extend students opportunities for internships, community service

ALISA GOOD
staff reporter

Students will be able to explore opportunities for volunteer service, internships and cooperative education at K-State's Opportunity Fair.

On the Web

Students who would like to obtain more information can contact the World Wide Web site at (http://www.ksu.edu/ces/student/CareerFair/opportunity.html)

The event, "Opportunity Fair: Professional Development Through Service," will take place from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Wednesday in the Union Grand Ballroom.

Last year the College of Human Ecology initiated the Human Service Opportunity Fair. The event has been expanded this year and is focusing on community service.

More than 40 service groups, agencies and organizations will be represented. Organizations from Manhattan, Wamego, Fort Riley and Ogden will participate. A few agencies from Nebraska and Missouri will also participate.

Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department is one organization that will participate.

"Hopefully, students who are interested in internships will come by and talk to us. We have a lot of opportunities for volunteers outside of sports," said Karen Perry, Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department supervisor.

Students will be given the opportunity to network and strengthen connections with representatives from cultural arts, correctional, health, education and human-service organizations.

"I hope students, faculty and staff will come and learn about community programs," said Olivia Collins, temporary assistant professor in the School of Family Studies and Human Services, said.

"Manhattan has a lot of nonprofit organizations that are always looking for volunteers. Most agencies need marketing and publicity help," Collins said.

The event is sponsored by the College of Human Ecology, and Career and Employment Services, and coordinated by the School of Family Studies and Human Services.

NATION WORLD

• TWA FLIGHT 800. Navy divers looking for the remaining wreckage of TWA Flight 800 were back in the ocean today after being kept out for several days by the rough seas from Hurricane Hortense.

Investigators hope recovery of the remaining third of the plane's wreckage will help them determine conclusively whether the plane was downed by a bomb, a missile or a mechanical malfunction.

• FLOOD IN SUDAN. Surging waters swept through shantytowns near the Sudanese capital, killing dozens of people and leaving thousands homeless. The floods were the latest to devastate the poor region around Khartoum, where the White Nile and Blue Nile converge.

There were no specific figures on the dead and homeless; television said dozens had died. Majzoub Khalifa, Sudan's minister for social planning, promised prompt government action.

• WHITEWATER REQUESTS DIARIES. Whitewater prosecutors have subpoenaed the explosive diaries of the prostitute who detailed her relationship with former Clinton political adviser Dick Morris.

Independent counsel Kenneth Starr issued the subpoena a week ago. Sherry Rowlands hasn't turned over her diaries but plans to comply. Starr was interested in Rowlands' claim that Morris told her first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton was behind the White House's improper gathering of hundreds of FBI files on top Republicans.

• RACISM LAWS IN FRANCE. Activists and government officials are calling for broader anti-racism laws and for sanctions against a far-right leader's party after he said the races are inherently unequal.

The silver-haired Jean-Marie Le Pen, 68, whose National Party blames immigration for France's unemployment, delinquency and other national problems, is known for his explosive — many say hate-tinged — comments.

The conservative government has refused demands by some opposition Socialists to ban the party altogether. Instead, Justice Minister Jacques Toubon said Friday he would submit a bill this month broadening an anti-racism law to include indirect provocation of racial hate.

SPORTS

• MICHIGAN STATE FOOTBALL PLACED ON PROBATION. Michigan State's football program was placed on four years' probation by the NCAA on Monday, but it does not include bans from bowl games or TV appearances. The NCAA concluded the school violated rules on recruiting, benefits, academic eligibility, ethical conduct and institutional control.

• MAGIC'S KONCAK OUT FOR SEASON. Magic center Jon Koncak, who underwent surgery Sept. 10 to remove torn cartilage and bone spurs from his left knee, will miss the entire NBA season. Koncak, who has had operations on the same knee three times during his 11-year career, re-injured it during an informal workout Sept. 9.

new aggieville dance club could cure a case of

JESS C. LOUK
staff reporter

If you feel like going out to Aggieville and dancing yourself into a frenzied groove, you now have a place to do it.

KJ's Bar & Dance Club opened for business Aug. 29.

The club is co-owned by Rusty's Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon and Jeff Fellows.

The theme is music and dance, and the target audience is the K-State student body.

"Bombers draws a lot of the military people, and we're really focusing on the students. So we're not really in competition with Bombers," Fellows said.

KJ's offers discounts at the door to anyone showing a valid student ID.

The idea for a dance club came while Fellows was a disc jockey in the Manhattan area for his DJ company.

"I really saw a need for a good dance club. Tubby's and Lucky's is always so packed. People are dancing next to the dance floor," Fellows said.

The DJ company grew so fast Fellows and his partner, Kevin Rome, needed a truck to haul their equipment.

While they were having a beer, they got the idea to buy an ambulance.

"We just flew out to New York and bought an ambulance," Fellows said. The company has been hauling its equipment in an ambulance ever since.

KJ's is equipped with $20,000 in lighting and music equipment.

Although the club opened in August, this week is being touted as the grand opening by Fellows.

KJ's emphasizes speedy service. With four bartenders and three servers on duty on the weekends, customers shouldn't have to stand and wait for a drink. KJ's also uses Last Chance's kitchen to serve food.

"I think kids want to go out and have something to do. They now have a chance to dance if they want to," Fellows said.

Online homework, discussion groups double since last year

LILLIAN E. BEEBE
staff reporter

Computers are adding another dimension to class discussion for many K-State students as list serv discussion groups are becoming a requirement in some classes.

"For bigger classes it's a good way to get into discussion," Lesley Durfee, sophomore in English literature, said.

The number of faculty using list servs in classes is easily doubled from last year, said Betsy Edwards, list serv coordinator for Computing and Network Services.

"A number of faculty are realizing it's a way to extend class discussion to outside of class," Edwards said.

A list serv is an electronic mailing list created by a program called LISTSERV, from which it gets its name.

The list serv owner can send mail to everyone on the list, and list members can also send mail to everyone else. They are also referred to as discussion groups because of their printed form, Edwards said.

Mail is set up in monthly files and is not deleted until the list owner clears it for deletion. This provides for good archiving capabilities, Edwards said.

Sharon Morcos, instructor of foods and nutrition, uses the list serv to disseminate study questions and timely information in her basic nutrition class, which has between 335 and 350 students.

"In a large class it's easy to be anonymous, and using a list serv is a way for students to ask questions and explore new ideas. It's another layer of interaction," Morcos said.

Many students who are not first-semester freshmen in Morcos' classes don't even have K-State IDs.

They need computer literacy in the workplace, she said.

"The point is, we use whatever technical advances we have to improve education," Donald Hedrick, professor of English, said.

> "There is a slow generational evolution to using this technology. Three years ago, this was Star Trek."
> • PETER KNUPFER
> ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF HISTORY

Hedrick teaches Introduction to Shakespeare to a class of about 80 students. He used LISTSERV to organize them into nine discussion groups. Students respond to questions and discuss answers. Each group has its own address that was created specifically for the class, he said.

This is Hedrick's first time using list servs in his classes. There has been some confusion getting started. The instructions are not adequate for people who are not used to computers, he said.

"I'm having problems opening files and sending replies," said Orlando Jackson, freshman in kinesiology and one of Hedrick's students.

Some people who wouldn't normally discuss in class are discussing on the computers, Hedrick said.

But discussion on the computer is inferior when compared to small-class discussion, he said. The discussion takes place over time instead of in real time.

His real thoughts on list servs won't be in until the end of the semester, but he remains cautious.

"The technology has proved its value to me, so I'm going to continue to use it," Peter Knupfer, associate professor of history, said. "I require students to get involved."

Students who have a deep hatred for computers usually speak up, but they are a minority. Most students don't say anything, he said.

"There is a slow generational evolution to using this technology. Three years ago, this was Star Trek. Two years ago, you had to get them to do it kicking and screaming," Knupfer said.

"Last year in my larger classes, 30 percent were using it without my kicking and screaming about it," he said.

Knupfer's undergraduate Civil War class is linked up with a Civil War class taught at Washburn University for discussion. In the next year he sees the class also being linked to a Civil War class at Emporia State University.

"We have a window of opportunity for the next two to three years where text-based computer services can get students to write," Knupfer said. "It has powerful potential to get students to write for an audience."

Advantages aside, Knupfer said he thinks computer discussion groups are still a supplement, not a substitute, to teaching and discussion in the classroom.

OPINION

EDITOR: SERA TANK 532-0730 (KAROLYI@KSU.EDU) | TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1996 | PAGE 4

IN OUR OPINION

Debates should not be limited to 2 main parties

Third-party candidates represent a vital part of our political system.

But despite their importance, they are usually not represented in the presidential debates.

Ross Perot, the Reform Party's presidential candidate, needs to be given a fair shake in November's election.

WHY WE CARE

Having only two political viewpoints represented at the debates limits voter information. Third-party candidates are vital in our political system.

Recently, there has been a push to not let Perot in on the presidential debates with President Clinton and Bob Dole.

We think he should be allowed.

We think all third parties that can get enough signatures to be on the ballot in all 50 states should be given a chance to speak about their views in the presidential debates.

Perot has done what he needed to do to get into the election.

He and his party have worked hard to get his name on all the ballots. Perot will be on all 50 states' ballots.

Third-party candidates bring unique insight into issues.

They also introduce new and important issues.

In the latest polls, Perot was receiving about 5 percent of registered voters' support.

That's not going to be enough to win the election, but the point is millions of people support the guy — millions of taxpayers.

The debates are paid for by taxpayers, and we think supporters of Perot and other third-party candidates will be cheated if their view is not represented at the debates.

Voters should have the right to listen to the candidates in a debate to decide whom they should vote for.

We feel Perot has mustered enough support to campaign against the big dogs.

And who knows, maybe someday Perot or another Reform Party candidate will win the presidency.

But before that will happen, all candidates must be heard by the people so we can decide for ourselves whether they are crazy or not.

Including children in Phelps' protests encourages irrational hate, cowardice

MY

Keely SCHIELDS

Walking toward the north entrance of McCain Auditorium to hear Sen. Nancy Kassebaum's Landon Lecture last Monday, I caught a glimpse of and heard the wails of some familiar campus visitors.

I only shook my head and walked inside. You see, I'm aware of the futility of arguing with this group. They're never going to adopt my attitude any more than I'm ever going to adopt theirs.

Yet they stand outside auditoriums performing their quirky antics and looking to pick fights — essentially yearning for a little attention.

As much as I dislike indulging that desire, and as strongly as I feel mentioning them isn't worthy of the space it will take, I was sufficiently disturbed by one of these protesters to do it anyway.

The girl holding the sign that read "God Hates Fags" looked to be no older than 11 or 12.

If indeed that was the case, shouldn't she have been in school or inside getting ready to hear the lecture or ... anything other than what she was doing? Where are this girl's parents?

I have a pretty plausible guess.

Participating in such a protest is not something I can readily imagine in the first place, but what I really can't fathom is taking the kids along.

Who's to say?

Maybe it was superb family values keeping the whole clan together on this particular outing — an opportunity to teach the child something.

And what on earth is this girl supposed to learn as a result of having borne this sign?

It seems the first thing she will learn from this experience is cowardice.

> "If this is truly how you feel, why not just be truthful and hold up a sign that reads, "I hate fags"? As God's feelings on this subject don't appear to be widely agreed upon ..."

Although the sign is an antagonistic one, magic-markered in big capital letters so it will be able to draw arguments, it's ultimately a cowardly one because it's not a terribly honest one.

I mean, if this is truly how you feel, why not just be truthful and hold up a sign that reads, "I hate fags"? As God's feelings on this subject don't appear to be widely agreed upon, I can only conclude that this is what the sign really means.

And if I were 11 or 12 years old and I saw someone carrying this sign as it reads now, I'd be tempted to call her a chickenshit.

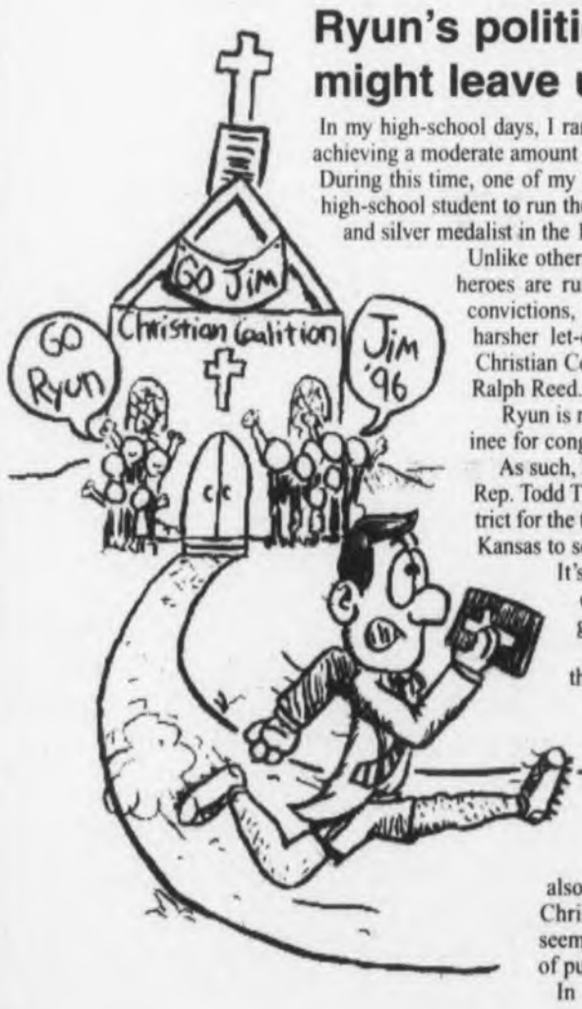
Obviously, though, what this experience is really hammering into the girl's 11- or 12-year-old head, and what has probably been hammered into it since before preschool, is hate.

This kind of learning rooted in early childhood is extremely difficult (perhaps even impossible) to unlearn, and therefore, it's a pretty safe bet the girl is going to continue hating people who are homosexual, and probably a variety of other people, for the rest of her life.

During the Landon Lecture, I had trouble forgetting about the people outside, and afterward, during the question-and-answer period, their memory resurfaced even more unpleasantly.

In framing her question to Kassebaum, someone mentioned her belief that education was the key to tolerance.

There's more than an inkling of truth to that.



Education is our only hope for overcoming irrational hate.

Even so, the group protesting outside raised a rather distressing question in my mind, and that was, how can positive education reach children before their parents go and screw them up with the negative kind?

God help us

Ryun's political ideas might leave us all praying

In my high-school days, I ran both track and cross country, achieving a moderate amount of recognition in both.

During this time, one of my heroes was Jim Ryun, the first high-school student to run the mile in less than four minutes and silver medalist in the 1968 Olympics.

Unlike others, whose picture of their sports heroes are ruined by drug use or gambling convictions, I've had to cope with a much harsher let-down. Jim Ryun is, (gasp), a Christian Coalitionist falling to the right of Ralph Reed.

Ryun is running as the Republican nominee for congress in our own 2nd district.

As such, he is running neck in neck with Rep. Todd Tiahrt, R-Wichita, of the 4th district for the title of worst possible choice for Kansas to send to Washington.

It's not that the Republicans couldn't have put a reasonably good candidate up.

Believe it or not, a few of them are actually decent human beings who are unfortunately ignorant.

But in this case, unfortunately, many Republicans seem to have voted for Ryun on name recognition alone. He was also helped by a healthy dose of Christian Coalition votes, which seem to have an inordinate amount of pull in the Republican primaries.

In the Aug. 5 Topeka Capital-Journal, an activist who asked not to be identified said, "The Christian Coalition and the family values groups have really gone out and worked for Ryun.

I understand at some churches, they pass the collection plate to pay for his television spots."

But, you might ask, where does Ryun stand on the issues? Well, sit back and be prepared.

The Atchison Daily Globe reported July 16, "To address those issues, especially the issue of reducing the federal government, Ryun would like to see the authority of some bureaus now run by the federal government returned to state level. Those bureaus include the Department of Education, Department of Energy, Environmental Protection Agency, Department of Commerce, and Housing and Urban Development. Ryun believes that returning those powers to state control will provide greater efficiency and reduction of the national debt."

Yeah, and cutting all salt whatsoever from my diet will lead to a healthier lifestyle.

Although there are many ways I could attack this, let me just use one. The Department of Energy does mucho research, which is expensive. No state is going to be able to duplicate the efforts of the Department of Energy, leading to a lack of progress.

The effects on regulation of cutting out the Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of Commerce, I'll leave to your own imagination.

Let's look at Ryun's ideas on education.

In the July 28 Manhattan Mercury, Ryun said, "I see the voucher system as an opportunity for the taxpayers to vote, basically, on their school system and who they think they should be having their child educated by."

If you aren't familiar with the voucher system, it's basically an attempt by the Christian Coalition to fund parochial schools with state money.

Basically, all parents with school-age children would receive vouchers from the state that they would turn over to whatever school they choose to send their children to — a further weakening of the public-education system.

To see where Ryun's ideas come from, though, we now have to leave the mildly rational discussion of issues and enter the bizarre realm of Ryun's own ideas.

A good example of this can be found in a little piece that ol' Jimbo did in Focus on the Family Magazine titled "Dating in the Nineties: Courtship Makes a Comeback."

In this article, Ryun basically advocates the quaint little custom of courtship as opposed to dating.

MY

Lach FRANQUEMONT

Says Ryun, "If a young man is interested in a young woman, he starts by praying about the relationship.

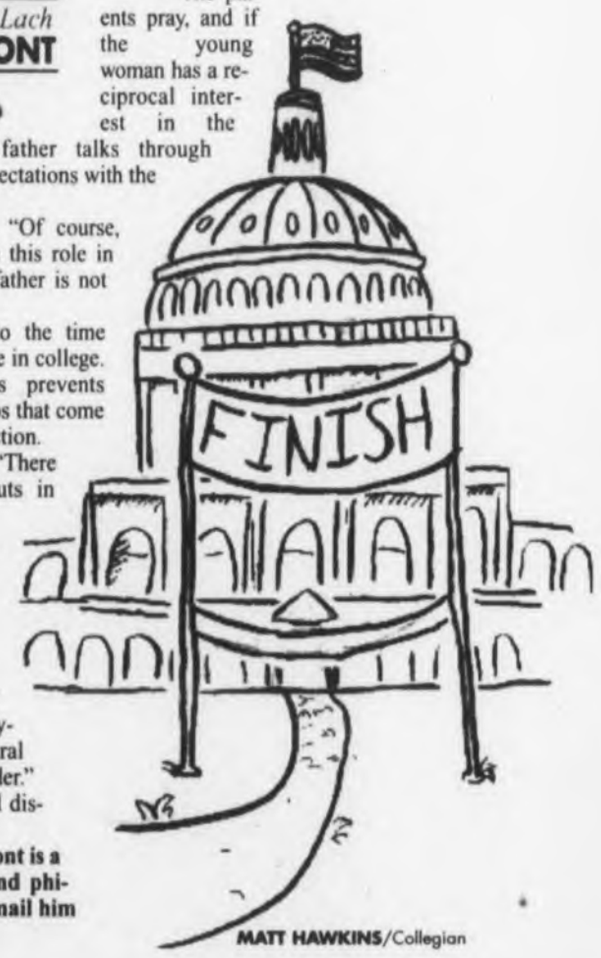
"With a go-ahead from the Lord and his parents, he then approaches the girl's parents.

"The parents pray, and if the young woman has a reciprocal interest in the young man, her father talks through courtship and its expectations with the fellow."

Ryun continues, "Of course, the mother can take this role in families where the father is not available."

This extends into the time when the children are in college.

Supposedly, this prevents many of the hardships that come with dating and rejection.



As Ryun says, "There are no casual tryouts in courtship."

I could go on, but many of Ryun's ideas pain me just too much to report.

In Ryun's book, "In Quest of Gold," he said, "If there's anything I'm not by natural personality, it's a leader."

God help the 2nd district if he leads us.

I was introduced to OM only a couple of months ago.

After studying it, as a longtime engineer, I saw OM mirrors the work required by most engineering companies.

You are presented a problem or project.

You have to study and research it, develop a plan, execute that plan or build the project, and sell that plan to your superiors or clients.

This is exactly what OM teaches.

I have worked for 35 years as an engineer for an electric utility, as an instrument engineer for NASA, and as a control engineer for a consulting engineering firm.

In all of these the basic skills taught by OM are required.

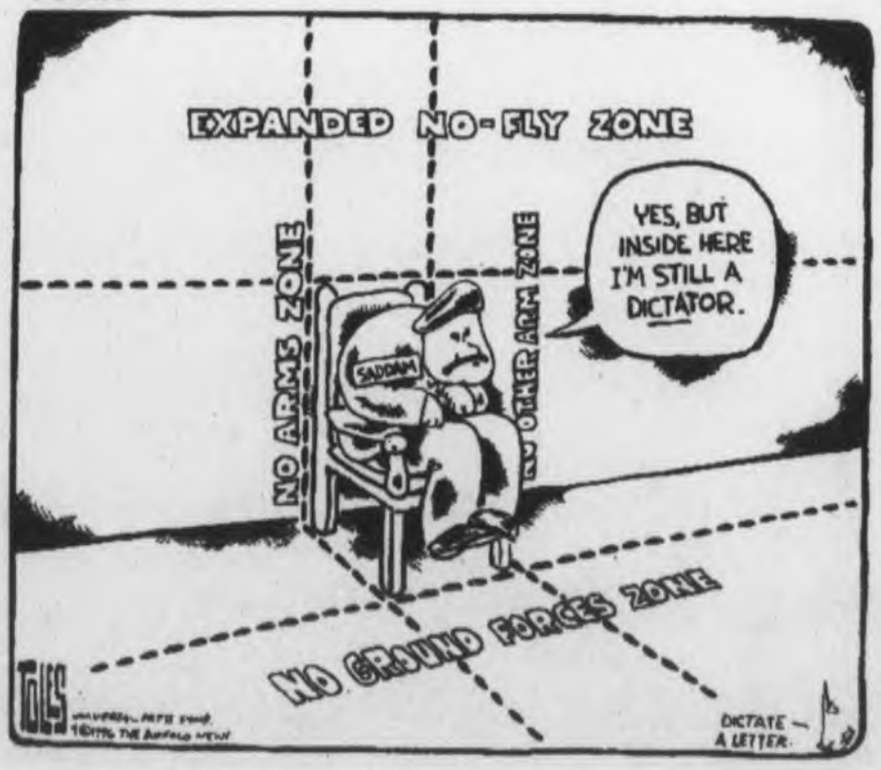
Even after you've forgotten all your electrical theory, thermodynamics or how to calculate stress in an I-beam, you'll still need the skills developed in OM.

I can't promise faster promotions or more money from participating in OM, but it's not out of the realm of possibility.

I realize most students already have full schedules, but if you can find the time please investigate OM.

If you can't find time this year, schedule it for next year.

We'll be here.



I'm a volunteer coach for the program, and I plan on being here for a long time.

Class surveys prehistoric site

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
contributing writer

The sky was gray, and a light rain fell, but spirits ran high. Despite the dreariness of the day, Matthew Root's nine archaeology students wore sunny smiles as they unloaded equipment.

Chatting eagerly among themselves, they looked as happy as a group of preschoolers headed for the sandbox. But this group had a bigger mission in mind.

This was the second meeting for the Saturday class, which meets during the semester at an archeological site at Fort Riley, thanks to an understanding between Fort Riley and K-State.

"This is the only dig with K-State this year," said John Dendy, an archaeologist with Dynamac Corporation, which manages studies at the post.

Dendy serves as co-principle investigator with Matthew Root, professor of anthropology at K-State. Dendy said the site, originally recorded in the 1930s, was not found again until this fall, when an 18,000-acre archaeological survey performed.

Root said the class gives the students field experience and provides valuable information on how old and how important the site might be. The information will be used to determine whether the site can be nominated with the National Registry of Historic Places.

"I'm sure it will be worthy of nomination," Root said.

The archaeological field school offered at K-State during summers — and often during fall — is just one example of the long-standing tradition of interaction between Fort Riley and the school to provide educational opportunities to military personnel and K-State students alike.

The class teaches students how to find archaeological sites and survey them. Students learn the nuts and bolts: how to map a site, how to make a grid system at an excavation, how to determine where to dig, the actual process of digging and finding and recording artifacts.

Sarah Engler, senior in anthropology, French and American ethnic studies, said it was her first time at a dig.

"It's not exactly like being in Egypt," Engler said.

Lisa Bruna, sophomore in anthropology, volunteered for the extra experience. She said she thought the site would be bigger.

"You never know what to expect. Every site will be different," Bruna said.

This particular site is in a valley by the bottom of Seven Mile Creek. Sites are found by systematically looking at ground-surface maps and transecting an area. Transecting is accomplished by several people walking in a straight line and looking for artifacts in places where the subsurface is exposed.

"We look in cutbanks or recently eroded areas," Root said. "Sometimes we make small probes into ground sediment if we don't find artifacts on the surface but think it's a good place to look.

"Another method of probing is to use ground penetrating radar, but the more sophisticated techniques are rarely used."

Flooding often deposits heavy sediment at one time in certain places, and that can vary archaeological sites. In river valleys, sites are often below the ground because of sediment deposits but can be preserved better because of floods. Sediment can also be eroded by floods.

"Floods can open or close a site. It is a natural process that has been going on for thousands of years," Root said. "This part of Kansas is just rich with archaeological finds."

Fellowship given to architecture grad

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

A graduate from the College of Architecture has been awarded a $10,000 national fellowship from Skidmore, Owings & Merrill Foundation Traveling Fellowship.

Dwayne Oyler, a 1996 graduate, is the fourth student from K-State to receive the national honor since 1991.

"An architecture student winning the fellowship is like winning the Rhodes or Truman, but better. It is extraordinary," said Susanne Siepl-Coates, head of the Department of Architecture.

Oyler gives credit to K-State for his accomplishment.

"My fellowship says the most about the things that go unsaid in the College of Architecture. I truly believe K-State has the best bachelor of architecture program in the nation," Oyler said.

Oyler plans to visit several countries in Europe with his fellowship.

"I'm going to cities that are relatively new to the ideas of social change," Oyler said.

To be considered for the fellowship, faculty and staff from each school of architecture in the nation have the option of nominating two individuals.

A portfolio demonstrating nominees' progressive achievement is then prepared by the nominee. The portfolios are reviewed by a jury of international architects and critics.

Finalists are then asked to interview.

After Oyler's interview, SOM Foundation named him the 1996 bachelor of architecture traveling fellow.

Oyler is now working for Gould, Evans and Goodman Architects in Kansas City.

Mother Teresa falls, returns to hospital

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CALCUTTA, India — Ten days after leaving the hospital, Mother Teresa was readmitted Monday after falling from her bed.

The nun — who has come to symbolize compassion for the needy — had bruises on her face and an irregular heartbeat after the fall, doctors said. Her injuries were not life-threatening, they said.

"She was admitted for observation and investigation," said Dr. S.K. Sen, director of Calcutta's Woodlands Nursing Home.

Mother Teresa was rushed to the hospital by ambulance, then taken to the intensive coronary care unit.

She under went a CT scan, which will allow doctors to determine whether she suffered any brain injury.

Mother Teresa was fully conscious Monday, eating normally and speaking to the doctors, said Dr. Asim Bardhan, her personal physician.

Doctors did not say when she might be released.

The 86-year-old Nobel Peace Prize winner left Woodlands Sept. 6 after two weeks of treatment for malaria, a chest infection and cardiac problems.

She suffered a heart attack in 1983.

Six years later, after a second, stronger heart attack, she was given a pacemaker.

Is there anyone more Swift ?

Maybe so, but K-State tight end Justin Swift knows that his position is as important as any of other position.

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

TIGHT END Justin Swift runs to throw a block for a ball carrier during the Indiana State game, Sept. 7.

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

It's hard for Carol Swift not to be proud.

Her son, Justin Swift, a sophomore and the Wildcats' starting tight end, caught a pass in each of the season's first two games — double his total from last year.

Swift

"I'm so glad to be a part of K-State," Carol Swift said.

But it's not because her son is the center of attention. On the contrary, it's his struggle in anonymity that makes watching him play that much more exciting.

"The tight end job is pretty low-key," she said. "He just really likes being part of the team and doing his part, whatever it takes."

And it can take a lot. Tight ends aren't on the field for every offensive snap like some other receivers are, but they pay their dues in other ways. When Justin isn't catching the ball, he's blocking some hulking defensive lineman.

"It's almost like being on the offensive line," Justin said. "You make a catch every now and then, but a lot of the time you really aren't doing the things that get you recognized.

"That's fine, though," he said. "What's important is the team."

Justin Swift is the first to acknowledge his teammates can help make his job easier as well.

"It seems like the secondary is usually paying attention to Kevin (Lockett) and Jimmy (Dean), especially when there's a lot of open field. That means the tight end is more likely to be open," he said.

It's not all about team for him. He feels the thrill of catching the ball as much as anyone else does, and he has personal goals in addition to team goals.

But the team somehow manages to make its way to the forefront.

"Before I'm done, I'd like to get some kind of recognition from the Big 12, even just honorable mention," Justin Swift said, "but as long as the team is doing well, I am glad just to play my role."

Considering his genealogy, recognition in the Big 12 should not be a problem. In fact, some Kansas fans might recognize his forefathers in their coaching staff.

But let there be no doubt where the Swift family allegiances lie on game day when the Cats and Jayhawks do battle. Carol can speak to that.

"Everybody is going to be sitting on the K-State side."

Soccer club wants varsity status given

SCOTT PHILLIPS
staff reporter

K-State's men's soccer club sparked this year's goal of being recognized as a varsity sport by defeating Iowa State last weekend for the first time in three years.

K-State played in Ames, Iowa, against Iowa State and Mankato State. The club defeated Iowa State, 2-1, but lost to Mankato State, 4-2.

"We've got a lot of sore people," Eric Fitzwater, president of the men's soccer club, said. "It was worth the effort, though, because we haven't beaten Iowa State for the last three years. We tied them two years ago but finally beat them this year."

The men's soccer club began its season Labor Day weekend with a tournament in Norman, Okla.

With the victory against Iowa State, the club stands at 3-4 this season and is looking forward to accomplishing more than just winning tournaments. The club is looking for varsity sport status.

Of the 12 programs in the Big 12 conference, nine out of the 12 have women's soccer as a varsity sport.

Because of the club's concern for varsity-sport status, Fitzwater said K-State is being denied the opportunity to provide potential recruits for major-league soccer programs like the Kansas City Wiz, which kicked off its professional existence last year.

K-State has been successful as a club sport by winning two tournaments last year, placing second in the National Intercollegiate Recreational Sports Association Tournament and taking third in the last year's Big 8 Tournament.

"After the club's success last year and a record of 31-10, we hope to win the NIRSA tournament and be able to feed professional teams like the Kansas City Wiz," Fitzwater said.

"We can't deny our program the opportunity to be considered a varsity sport. We play conference teams that have been at the varsity level for years, and we are still waiting.

"Even community colleges around the conference have soccer as a varsity sport."

> "We play conference teams that have been at the varsity level for years, and we are still waiting.
> ● ERIC FITZWATER
> SOCCER CLUB PRESIDENT

The club is continuing to work on ideas with the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics but remains concentrated on team performance as well.

"We'll play a little over 25 games this season with tournaments," Fitzwater said.

"We'll finish the season in late November and plan on winning a national qualifier."

The men's soccer club will continue conference play at 5 p.m. Saturday against Wichita State at Frank Anneberg Park in Manhattan.

Chiefs' special teams could lose next game

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Chiefs are 3-0 for the second straight year, but you'd never know it by the way their special teams keep making opponents look special.

There has been at least one breakdown leading to one big, special teams play by each opponent, thus far.

Houston, in the season opener, blocked a punt. Next, Oakland faked out the Chiefs and 75,000 Arrowhead Stadium fans on a slick fake punt, springing Jeff Gossett loose for a key first down.

And Sunday, before the Chiefs nailed a 35-17 victory in Seattle, the Seahawks made the defending AFC West champs look bad twice on kicking teams.

With the Chiefs holding a 14-0 lead in the second quarter, Chris Penn muffed a punt, and the Seahawks recovered on the Kansas City 35. Then, early in the third quarter, Steve Broussard high-stepped his way 86 yards on a kickoff return to the 11.

"We've got to arrest this trend of one big play against us in the kicking game every week," Coach Marty Schottenheimer said after a light workout Monday, "because what that will do is foster the creative spirits of everybody we're going to come up against, and they'll be trying to take advantage of us.

"Clearly, we're going to have to be more vigilant about what's going on," he said.

Penn's miscue was softened by the two touchdowns he caught from Steve Bono. On the punt, he had decided not to catch it on the fly, but then tried to field it on the bounce. Seattle wound up taking possession as the red-faced Penn left the field.

"A lot of the big plays people are having against us have come from us not being disciplined, not staying in lanes, and not making good decisions — like I did on the punt," Penn said. "We have to keep our assignments in mind and do what we need to do. Everybody's been busting their tail. We just have to keep focused on everybody doing his job."

A couple of young players got out of position on Broussard's kick return, including rookie wide receiver Joe Horn, who ended up making the touchdown-saving tackle.

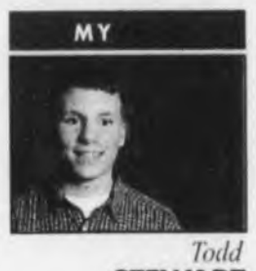
Wildcat coach Stoops is victim of unfair scrutiny by newspapers

Leave Mike Stoops alone.

Let's think about this one for a second. A K-State defensive coach was arrested for DUI and transporting an open container.

OK, but what warranted the trial in the newspapers?

Everyone knows someone who has been picked up on DUI. It's just a fact of life. Believe it or not, a DUI has become commonplace here in Manhattan.



But Stoops made a mistake, and he will face up to it. He has no choice.

Is that a reason, however, to plaster his picture on the front pages of newspapers? Is that a reason for a paper, this one in fact, to lead a down-with-Stoops, we-don't drink, we-are-the-courts, hang-the-bad-man execution?

I don't think so.

Stoops did not hurt anyone, the charges are misdemeanors, and the decision is in the hands of the court. Leave him alone.

MY

Todd
STEWART

Stoops has coached five years at K-State, and now, finally, he gets the attention he deserves. The public-figure reasoning for the front-page attention does not hold water with me. He was not a public figure until misguided media made him one. Few could have listed Stoops as an assistant coach. Even fewer could have picked him out of a lineup before Wednesday.

Now Stoops is the bad guy of Manhattan.

What makes an assistant football coach's DUI charges more newsworthy than the charges of the guy sitting in the next row in your lecture class?

Your classmate's charges could be even worse.

For all you know, the guy sitting right next to you right now is a felon two times over. Maybe he wasn't lucky enough to get a DUI. Maybe his charges are much worse.

The fact is no one should pass judgment on Stoops. One mistake does not make a man bad. One mistake makes him human.

Everyone makes mistakes, maybe not a DUI, but people make mistakes. What people need in that time is not abuse and criticism, but understanding and support.

Give him one freebie until he proves he doesn't deserve it.

You would give your best friend that freebie, and Stoops deserves the same.

That guy sitting next to you right now got his freebie, but you don't even know about it. You don't know about it because it was not proclaimed by the information centers on campus, so you don't think any differently of him.

That guy could have been arrested twice on felony charges since June, and you would never know. All of a sudden that misdemeanor DUI doesn't seem so earth-shattering.

That guy who missed class yesterday could have spent yesterday morning listening to prosecuting attorneys bargain for jail time.

He could be the guy a weekend at Fifth and Colorado might do some good for. He could have been the one who broke down and cried outside that very courtroom.

But you will never know.

And you'll never know what that guy did, because he is not Stoops, and because he is getting his second chance, and because he is getting his freebie.

I personally have never met Stoops, but if I do, I would tell him I think the Collegian is wrong.

I would tell him people you least expect have done things many times worse, but they are given the luxury of the freebie. Stoops was never given the freebie.

So next time you run into Stoops, don't point him out to your friends as the defensive coach who got the DUI.

Instead, point him out as the coach who helped last year's K-State team lead the nation in total defense. Point him out as the coach who helped pitch the shutout against Cincinnati Saturday.

> What makes an assistant football coach's DUI charges more newsworthy than the charges of the guy sitting in the next row in your lecture class?

Society needs to better accentuate the positives, instead of only the negatives.

Stoops, I am sorry for what you are having to endure. I do work for the Collegian, but that does not mean I stand behind everything the paper does. You deserve so much better.

I have made my mistakes as well.

I could even make a point that my weekly column and daily sports writing makes me as much a public figure as yourself. But someone must not think my mistakes are newsworthy.

I was given my freebie. I will be paying for my mistake for some time, but at least I do not have to deal with the public scrutiny you have to deal with.

Because I am the person you would least expect. But I am by no means lucky, Stoops.

I was the guy who spent my morning crying outside the Riley County Courthouse.

Sidewalk shortcut planned

MATT BASLER
staff reporter

Now that Farrell Library is taking shape, new sidewalks have been installed or planned for different places around the library.

The plywood wall around the library has come down, and a new concrete pathway has been poured into place.

A sidewalk that will link Mid Campus Drive with 17th Street is in the works. Gerald Carter, director of facilities planning and University architect, said he hopes the sidewalk will be completed next summer or sooner.

Crews could be working on the new sidewalks well into next summer. However, Carter said, the schedule could be accelerated.

"Our aim is to get as much finished in the spring as possible," he said.

The sidewalk is being paid for by the City/University Tax Fund and will cost about $100,000. Funds will become available for the project in January 1997, Carter said.

"We're going to build a new sidewalk across the quad, along the north side of the 1927 building to the southwest corner of Willard and even out to Mid Campus Drive," Carter said.

Although a dirt path has been formed by students along the construction fence of the north side of the library, the actual sidewalk will run closer to the building.

Carter said a problem many universities face is student's making their own cattle-paths where there is not a sidewalk. Some universities wait until the students have made a path, then pour concrete over it.

"Once we have the right sidewalk in, we don't expect folks creating paths of their own," he said.

The north sidewalk will begin at Mid Campus Drive. It will run past the library and wind its way around Lafene Health Center to connect with 17th Street. This sidewalk will be large enough to withstand the weight of fire trucks in case of emergency.

Mid Campus Drive is scheduled to be open to the public sometime after

▶ GREEK LIFE

Greeks maintain ties, freedom in annexes

AMY E. LAGRONE
staff reporter

Living out-of-house has a different meaning for several students within the greek system.

Some sororities and fraternities at K-State have two houses. One is known as the main house, and the other is referred to as the annex.

Some of the annexes are official, meaning they are owned and operated by the main house. Other annexes are unofficial, meaning they are just rented by members of the house.

Alpha Delta Pi has an official annex occupied by 11 junior and senior women. It is their decision to live there, and placement is based upon seniority.

Nealy Olmsted, senior in pre-dentistry and ADPi annex resident, said the annex is quieter, and she is able to study more efficiently. She also said the annex allows her to still feel she is a part of the house while at the same time being an individual.

"I live with a lot of really close friends right now," she said. "It's a lot of fun."

The Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity has an unofficial annex near Aggieville. The small house is the residence of only two members of the fraternity. This number is lower than in years past.

Jim Boomer, junior in accounting and president of the SAE, said the annex is in a good location and provides parking for other members when they visit Aggieville. He also said it gives the men a place to stay if they are unable to drive home.

"They still have close ties to the house," he said. "The in-house members are much more likely to go over there than to other apartments."

Unlike official annexes, the SAE annex is in no way connected to the main house as far as bills and food are concerned. The men pay for everything separately.

"Everyone has individual payments," he said. "Out-of-house members pay a separate fee for parking and eating at the main house."

Kappa Kappa Gamma also has an annex operated in the same way as the ADPi annex. Both sororities said they are required to follow the same rules as the women who live in the main house.

They also said they pay the same amount in fees as the in-house members.

Becky Hayden, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said she enjoys living in the Kappa annex. All her food and laundry is paid for, and she still feels like a big part of the sorority. She said the nine women in the annex make an extra effort to go over to the house and participate.

Commission to become more citizen-oriented

MICHAEL O'LEARY
staff reporter

The city and county commissioners agreed to keep the number of City-County Health Department Advisory Board members at the current 11.

There are four commissioners on the board, two each from the city and county commissions. One board position from each commission will be replaced with a citizen position.

This move was made in an effort to restrict the influence of politics on the board and make the board more citizen-representative, city commissioners Steve Hall and Justin Kastner said.

After almost two years of working and modifying the final wording of the agreement between Riley County and Manhattan, the City-County Health Department was finalized Tuesday afternoon.

"We want to do what makes the most sense," said Bruce Snead, city commissioner and current president of the health board.

Riley County and Manhattan have shared a health department for many years, and the original agreement has been in the review process for about two years.

The composition of the advisory board was the final issue in the draft agreement.

The final draft of the agreement will go before the city and county commissions for approval at their regular meetings.

One group of students might order pizza from Little Caesars, while another group at the same address might order from another restaurant.

When the pizza shows up, students realize they have double-ordered.

In this case, one delivery person gets sent away with a carload of pizza and no money.

Local pizza establishments agree that parties are definitely the worst possible places to deliver to.

When delivering to large gatherings, employees are more likely to encounter obnoxious or impatient students. The only positive aspect is they are much easier to find because of noise and crowds.

"Any large party, or for that matter any small party, where people are intoxicated is always a big problem," High said.

Easter Sunday, allowing easier access to parking places for the library.

Finding a parking place at the library poses a problem to many students.

"I just hope they put in more parking places," said Dylan Spencer, senior in biology. "We've already got enough of a problem as it is."

Because of the library's expansion, students said they are wondering whether more library parking is planned.

"It would be nice if there was a parking garage that could be used for both the library and the rest of campus," said Brad Young, senior in economics.

"If they want people to come to the library, they have to provide parking," he said.

Carter was optimistic about the parking situation.

He said the lots behind Holton and Dickens halls would be open for parking when Mid Campus Drive opens.

New show featured in Chang Gallery

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

The work of advanced architecture students is the focus of a new show in the Chang Gallery.

The Architecture Internship show, which closes Friday, showcases not only student work, but information and literature on companies the students interned with during the summer.

The 1996 intern class of 19 students worked with architects in places as varied as Kansas, California, Puerto Rico and Mexico.

Most of the displays are centered more on giving examples of the company's work, rather than helping to explain the work the students did.

RTKL, the international architecture company, is well-represented with two intern displays and plenty of literature. The exhibited work varies from historic preservation to contemporary church design to interesting commercial design. The show gives a good, if light, impression of what these talented students accomplished during the summer.

The Architecture Internship show is in the Chang Gallery until Friday. Gallery hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Student accused of cheating seeks advice

Dear Cassandra,

Recently, an instructor accused me of cheating on a quiz I took last semester (I didn't). This upset me so much I have become depressed and no longer wish to attend K-State. I suddenly have no self-esteem and am sure all my instructors are staring at me and thinking I'm cheating or am going to cheat.

I'm thinking of quitting school, or at least changing my major, as I no longer have any respect for that instructor.I have cried many nights about this whole ordeal and have lost weight and feel terrible. I am a smart, hard-working student. I study for my tests and quizzes and work my butt off to maintain a high grade point average, and I would never cheat.

What bothers me most is that this instructor automatically found me guilty without even giving me the benefit of the doubt OR confronting me with it until 1-1/2 months after the class ended!

Tell me, can an instructor find a student guilty of cheating — after the fact — without even telling the student he or she thinks the student cheated? It seems to me if an instructor thinks a student is cheating, then that instructor should confront the student then — not wait almost two months.

What if an instructor just didn't like a student? Couldn't that instructor SAY the student cheated without telling the student he or she thought the student was cheating and that way the instructor could give the student a lower score than what the student deserved?

Not Guilty

Dear Not Guilty,

The answer to your questions is NO.

No instructor can act as judge, jury and executioner in a matter regarding academic honesty, and if you are accused, you have the right to know of the accusation.

If this instructor believes you cheated, he or she is required to file the complaint with the provost's office before taking action.

The provost's office will notify you of the complaint.

It's possible this happened. Some complaints get filed at the end of the semester, then get lost in the mail shuffle when addresses change.

Check with Suzanne Auten in Anderson 106 to find out whether your instructor filed a complaint.

If one was filed, she can tell you how to address it — if not, your instructor has some explaining to do.

The other thing you need to do is stop by University Counseling Services in Lafene 232. It is natural to feel down after such an accusation, but if this is a continuing problem and you're losing weight, you need to see a professional.

I can't stress this enough, and please write me again to let me know how it's going.

Cassandra

And a little note to Mistreated in Manhattan — I received a letter from a woman who is looking for a sensitive, mature and intelligent man.

If you write me again (you know the code) and your tone is a little less hormonal, I'll see what I can arrange.

Artists capture Flint Hills' beauty in gallery showing

Russell Fortmeyer
senior staff writer

At the close of summer, just as the Kansas countryside is in full color, the Strecker Gallery opened its first show of the season, "Kansas Landscapes."

Although the subject matter is fitting to the season, most of the work by the four artists in the show makes one yearn to see the real thing even more.

The one exception is Judy Love, who has come back to Kansas after a 1-1/2-year stint in Hawaii.

Love's simple pastels evoke the prairie and the northern Kansas region with color and expansive vistas. They are not quite fully representational, but one could hardly label them abstract.

The work, which is somewhat reminiscent of Georgia O'Keefe, might require a few steps back from each piece to fully understand what one is seeing.

"Big Sky" and "Thunderhead Over the Konza" have rich, vivid grays that suggest the color is ground into the paper.

Love is an assistant professor of art, but she took a leave of absence for her Hawaii sojourn and has yet to begin teaching again.

"I came back with the intention of teaching, but I realized I wanted to focus on the art," Love said. "I thought it was a good choice."

> "I came back with the intention of teaching, but I realized I wanted to focus on the art."
> • JUDY LOVE > ARTIST

It was a good choice, and the use of pastels was a good one, too. Love somewhat fell into the use of pastels when, a few years back, she found herself in a pinch for getting work to a gallery. She found some pastel pencils in her studio and decided to try something new.

"What I'm interested in is a sense of space and emotion," Love said. "You know what my work is by the feeling they evoke, not the detail."

Love said she considers her work non-traditional but not abstract.

"Julie (Strecker) said they are contemporary landscapes," she said. "I guess that's what they are."

Love's Hawaiian work shows in three galleries in Hawaii, but only a few floral pastels have been shown locally. Anyone can see "Evening Sky," a 1994 wall-sized work of clouds over the prairie, on the second floor of the K-State Student Union.

The Strecker show also includes work by Joseph Orr, Louis Copt and Greg Fallon.

If there is a theme here, it is representational landscapes, with the exception of Orr, a Missourian, who occasionally lapses into semi-abstraction.

Orr's work is quite colorful but lacks the emotion of Love's work and the local connection of the Flint Hills landscapes depicted in Fallon's work.

Fallon, who studied art briefly at K-State and grew up in the area, paints detailed oils of countryside and limestone houses and barns in a way that owes something to Andrew Wyeth but doesn't quite reach the same level of accomplishment.

Copt's work, mostly in watercolor, is most successful in the piece "Evening Light," which creates a subtle feeling of tension in the expressionistic brushstrokes used in the clouds.

Comparisons of Copt to Robert Sudlow, perhaps the Kansas landscape painter, are easy. Copt studied with him.

Bronzes by Martha Pettigrew are also on show until Saturday. Pettigrew's work — Southwestern bronzes depicting Native Americans — could definitely be termed contemporary sculpture.

"Taos Morning," showing a woman working at an adobe stove, has the quality of a wood sculpture, warmly evoking the Southwest. Most of Pettigrew's work, however, takes the shape of a work like "The Enduring Spirit."

"Spirit" is a formal piece: two three-dimensional ellipses with a woman's and a girl's head peeking out the top — a sort of artistic Weeble grouping.

history, Root said. But Native American religion teaches that the people have been here forever.

"Native Americans have been here for 12,000 years, which in anybody's book is forever," Root said.

Root said he believes the site is a small hamlet consisting of several houses and is a prehistoric Native American site, dating from between 1000 and 1300.

That time span is known as the Smoky Hill phase.

"If we are really lucky, we will find the remains of a house, but chances of hitting a house would be unusual," Root said.

"Each family had work areas outside the home where they prepared meat and performed other everyday activities."

For example, finding a hearth could mean finding food residue.

Finding wood or charcoal for carbon dating tells what species of trees or woody plants grew in the area.

Often, families dug storage pits for corn, beans and squash.

If the students find pottery or something to store food or cook it, even the residues can be carbon-dated, and archaeologists can tell what was cooked.

If the remains are preserved plant foods or the bones from animals, archaeologists can tell what animals lived at that time.

Families cultivated garden plots where they grew corn, beans and gourds.

Nuts, sunflowers and tubers grew on the prairie and were also eaten by the people.

They also hunted deer and buffalo.

"It was a mixed economy of hunters and gatherers," Root said.

Tribes would leave a hamlet when houses got old or garden plots became exhausted.

Leaving the site often meant re-establishing a hamlet nearby.

As populations increased, new villages were formed also.

"Extended periods of drought occurred in prehistory, and tribes may have moved closer to the Kansas River," Root said. "That certainly seems to be case for small hamlets established west of here."

Once the digging is done, the students begin lab work.

In the end, the artifacts are returned to Fort Riley because they belong to the federal government.

If a burial site is encountered, the site will not be excavated.

Instead, the group will notify the Pawnee or Kansa tribes.

Root said the group will work every Saturday for as long as the weather allows.

ELECTION

of international organizations most involved in Bosnia were upbeat. Under pressure to stage a success, they glossed over the difficulties of the voting and the months preceding it.

Britain's Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Walker, ground troops commander in the NATO-led peace force, whose heavily armed presence was everywhere Saturday, said the vote was an indicator of a democracy being born.

Carl Bildt, the chief international monitor of Bosnia's peace, hailed the great dignity of election day. Robert Frowick, the chief election organizer, called the vote a basis to realize the promise of the Dayton peace accords.

On days preceding the vote, senior U.S. and international officials drew a line in the sand, saying Serb dreams of using the elections to prepare for secession were out of the question.

Some were too scared, others too angry. Towns like Srebrenica were effectively placed off-limits by organizers who feared confrontations. Other Muslims could not find polling stations — they existed only on paper or were created at the last minute.

The Muslims' ruling Party of Democratic Action demanded Saturday that the vote in the Serb half of Bosnia be annulled. President Alija Izetbegovic cited reports of serious irregularities. Bosnian Croats also filed complaints.

The European Union said truncating the elections by indefinitely postponing municipal voting was a cause for concern. It also criticized the gross imbalance of voting practices in Serb-held areas near Gorazde, site of one of the war's most bitter Serb-Muslim fights, saying inadequate facilities for returning Muslim voters skewed the vote.

EU observer Doris Pack said registration mixups prevented some people from voting, and some polling stations were overburdened. One Sarajevo building was supposed to accommodate the people of 44 east Bosnian villages. People waited as long as 10 hours to vote, she said.

Even more serious was the complete control of the media by the ruling ultranationalist parties in Serb- and Croat-occupied parts of Bosnia. That left no room for more democratic opposition groups to get their message across.

The lack of independent media led to such great inadequacies that the entire poll was questionable, according to a report on the election released Sunday by the EU office in Bosnia.

•CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

•CLASSIFIED AD WRITING TIPS

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Judge's ruling allows Damon back in school

Inside

David Damon is enrolled in K-State classes. His return to Wildcat football could be imminent. The editorial board does not think the Damon addition to the football roster is a good thing.

President Jon Wefald said last spring that troubled Wildcat linebacker David Damon would not return to K-State.

Geary County judge George Scott ruled otherwise.

Damon, dismissed last spring for violating University sanctions imposed after a conviction for sexual battery of a female student on campus in November 1994, is enrolled in classes at K-State with the hopes of returning to the football team next spring.

"David Damon filed a lawsuit against the University in Geary County and got the judge to sign an Ex Parte restraining order," said Richard Seaton, University attorney. "That is to say, he didn't hear our side. He just restricted us from preventing him from enrolling."

Although K-State's main campus is in Riley County, Damon has enrolled in extension courses at Fort Riley in Geary County, which would place the case in Scott's jurisdiction.

Coach Bill Snyder said Damon might return to the team in the spring but said the two had not had any discussions yet.

"I'm just pleased that he's back in school," Snyder said. "He's done some very positive things in terms of maintaining his education."

Seaton said the restraining order did not speak to Damon's eligibility to play; it simply granted him permission to enroll in classes.

Because the University was not allowed to offer a defense before the order was issued, a hearing will be held later on the suit.

"We will have an opportunity in the future to have a hearing on that," Seaton said. "But in the meantime, he will be enrolled as a student at K-State."

Troops to limit Saddam

■ Iraq retreats as U.S. troops move in to keep Saddam in control.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KUWAIT — After more than two weeks of military strikes, tough talk and escalating tensions in the Persian Gulf, the latest standoff between the United States and Iraq appeared today to be easing.

Iraq drew back from its earlier bellicose rhetoric, and the prospect of renewed U.S. military action, while still possible, seemed less likely.

In Washington, President Clinton said today he was sending U.S. troops to Kuwait to "keep Saddam Hussein in a box."

Clinton did not say how many troops will be sent to the region. He said the Defense Department will carry out the deployment in a timely fashion.

Senate Republican leader Trent Lott of Mississippi said after a White House meeting he was told Tuesday some 3,500 troops would be dispatched to Kuwait.

While Lott said he hoped there will be no basis for the troops to go into action, it would depend on whether Saddam threatens U.S. forces, including pilots flying over northern and southern Iraq, and Iraq's neighbors.

Moving away from its earlier loud threats to attack U.S. planes, Iraq's state-run media today focused on what they saw as the pro-Iraqi policies from some Arab and Western countries.

"Arab consensus on Iraq's right to territorial integrity and sovereignty," said the headline in the daily Al-Qadissiya.

In Washington, Clinton said Monday that "we have sought no confrontation with (Iraqi President) Saddam Hussein. We never did, and we don't now.

"My concern is that we limit Saddam Hussein's ability to threaten his neighbors, that we do it with the no-fly zone and, in so doing, we keep our pilots safe," he said.

Kuwait, meanwhile, began diplomatic rounds in the Persian Gulf to explain its decision to open its territory to U.S. warplanes and troops. The defense minister began a tour of the region with a stop in Saudi Arabia. The information minister headed to Egypt and Syria.

"I certainly don't believe there will

CARI BRANDT of Iowa Select Farming explains career opportunities to Ken Anderson, senior in animal science. Anderson was just one of many students taking advantage of the opportunities the All-University Career Fair presented.

Students test résumé skills at fair story by valeri crenshaw

The K-State Student Union was overtaken Tuesday by professionally dressed students and booths displaying real-world scenes.

The bustle was the result of the third annual All-University Career Fair.

Open to undergraduates and graduates from all colleges, the fair drew students interested in everything from consulting to management to food distribution.

It was a chance for employers to visit the campus and talk with students interested in co-op, internship and employment opportunities.

But it was also a time for students to familiarize themselves with companies and begin job-hunting.

Jason Duncan, junior in civil engineering, participated in the Career Fair to get a jump on finding an internship and possibly a job.

"Basically it is a chance to get your foot in the door and get your name out there," he said.

Duncan planned to meet with eight to 10 companies throughout the day but was disappointed there were not more opportunities for civil engineers.

"The number of companies representing civil engineering is somewhat less," he said.

Trying to find companies to meet with was not a problem for Mary Rock, senior in management. She spent the early morning in the Union highlighting the myriad of businesses she wanted to speak with before the Career Fair came to an end.

Rock said she was trying to get the interview because that was the most important thing.

"I'm trying to market my name so that when they see my résumé they will remember me," she said.

Rock said the Career Fair was an important event for students interested in getting jobs, and she planned to use her time efficiently.

"Just being aware of the major companies helps me in knowing who they are and what they have to offer," Rock said. "My plan is probably to spend most of my time with the companies I know a little about and the ones I'm most interested in and less time with the other companies."

Throughout the three floors of the Union, students could choose to meet with any of the 193 organizations representing companies and employers.

The Career Fair was not anything new to Nash Finch Company

▶ FINE ARTS COUNCIL

Reclassification of groups offers financial solutions for Union Activities Board

BREE BISNETTE
staff writer

Campus groups who discover unexpected opportunities to bring in speakers, exhibits or other artistic displays might receive less funding from the Fine Arts Council.

This money is allocated to the council by nine fine-arts-related divisions on campus specifically for unplanned events that may arise.

However, some policy changes may threaten this current system of funding. The Union Activities Board is in the process of reclassifying student groups into five different categories, said Beth Hochberg, the Fine Arts Council chairperson and a senior in pre-medicine and music.

> "When we put out our requests for proposals from groups in October, we may be inundated by new groups."
> ● BETH HOCHBERG
> FINE ARTS COUNCIL CHAIRPERSON

By lessening the number of groups, UAB can better track the spending of groups, Hochberg said.

"It makes it so organizations can't double-dip by taking money from more than one campus source," she said.

The campus groups will be assigned to the Fine Arts Council based on whether their mission statements fit under the council's new definition of fine arts, which will be solidified on Friday.

The groups that qualify may make proposals to the council for funding for different fine-arts activities they would like to bring in.

In restructuring the groups to solve financial problems, however, the UAB might create several new problems, Hochberg said.

The restructuring may bring in more groups than the council can financially support.

"When we put out our requests for proposals from groups in October, we may be inundated by new groups," Hochberg said. "We only have about $5,000 to allocate, and we don't know if the new groups will bring in funding from their old sources or if the increased number of groups will deplete our fund."

Another problem that might arise concerns groups that do not strictly revolve around fine arts.

"We've always tried to be as inclusive as possible in what we fund," said David Procter, the head of the Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance and the faculty representative of that department on the Fine Arts Council.

▶ SAFER HOUSING WEEK

Inspections offered on request

CHAD HELIN
staff reporter

The City of Manhattan code-inspection office will hand out information about rental inspections next week during Safer Housing Week.

There are 15,000 K-State students living off campus in rental housing where the conditions of the apartments could pose a threat to the health, safety and welfare of the occupants.

Hazardous electrical systems, basement windows that are too small and defective smoke detectors are a few of the common problems found in apartments, Pat Ball, code inspection officer, said.

"I've found cases where the foundation is falling in and the students weren't aware of just how bad it was," Ball said.

Manhattan inspections follow the National Property Maintenance code, which is a checklist of minimum health and safety standards used to check the inside and outside of an apartment.

The code-inspection office is not allowed to inspect a property without being invited.

Ball said more students would utilize the service if they were aware of it.

It is not mandatory to contact landowners in order to have an inspection done.

However, Ball encourages students to go to their landowner first.

"There are lots of great landlords," she said. "There are only three or four out of hundreds who cause any problems."

Besides the free inspections, the code-inspection office also has inspection records of all properties in Manhattan.

Students who are looking for a new apartment are encouraged to call and run a check of any problems found during past inspections, or if the apartment has been inspected at all.

"If I were a student, I would go out looking for places, and when I'd narrowed it down to two or three, I'd call them in," Ball said.

In support of Safer Housing Week, Student Senate will propose legislation and deliver the resolution to the Manhattan City Commission upon approval.

"This week is a way to promote the services and make sure students are aware of them," Chris Hansen, student body president, said.

"We're just trying to get the word out," he said.

Trash fire attracts crowd outside Seaton

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

A lit cigarette butt is the prime suspect in a small fire outside of Seaton Hall Tuesday.

At 3:20 p.m., landscape timbers and bushes near the unloading zone on 17th Street caught fire in front of Ahearn Field House, Seaton Hall and the K-State Student Union.

Pete Heptig, battalion chief, said the fire was probably caused by a cigarette butt thrown on wood shavings.

The fire was reported as a dumpster fire by someone driving by with a cellular phone.

Mike Brumbugh, acting lieutenant, said the flames were up a couple feet past the highest timbers.

By 3:30, the fire was controlled, and the firefighters were overhauling the timbers with axes to get to the root of the blaze.

"Those wood timbers have to be ripped apart,

• STUDENT MURDER AT STATE COLLEGE. A 19-year-old woman spread out a tarp in the middle of the Penn State University campus Tuesday and opened fire with a rifle, killing one student and wounding another before she was tackled. Jillian Robbins, a hunter with Army Reserve training, who acquaintances said had a history of mental problems and was known as Crazy Jill, was hospitalized in serious condition with a stab wound suffered in a struggle with the student who came to the rescue and knocked her down. No immediate charges were filed against Robbins, who is a longtime resident of State College but not a student. Police gave no motive for the shooting and said Robbins did not know her victims.

• CHEMICAL CASTRATION. Gov. Pete Wilson signed a law Tuesday making California the first state to require chemical castration of repeat child molesters. Similar efforts this year failed to become law in Texas, Massachusetts and Wisconsin. California's bill won final legislative approval last month. Under the measure, molesters who commit a second crime against a child under 13 must receive weekly injections of the drug Depo-Provera, which dampens sexual desire.

• U.N. GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN SESSION. The U.N. General Assembly opens its 51st annual session today faced with uncertainties over its finances and its leadership. The delegates from the 185 member-states will designate Malaysia's U.N. ambassador, Razali Ismail, as president of the General Assembly session. Many diplomats and U.N. officials believe the future of the organization depends more on the outcome of the Nov. 5 U.S. presidential election than on U.S. opposition to Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali.

• DEAD SEA SCROLLS. An English translation of the Dead Sea Scrolls for lay people is due to be published in November, providing greater access to the ancient documents that have fascinated religious scholars for decades. The first scrolls were found in 1947 in a cave near Qumran, in the West Bank. Other discoveries followed, and the scrolls, rolled up in stone jars, eventually numbered about 870.

• BOSNIAN ELECTION. Bosnian Muslim leader Alija Izetbegovic seemed assured Tuesday of becoming chairman of the country's new three-member presidency as election officials neared the end of their tally. The two halves of the country, the Muslim-Croat federation and a Serb republic, will enjoy a high degree of autonomy. The key to holding Bosnia together will be avoiding gridlock, beginning with the presidency. The peace plan for Bosnia called for a three-way presidency shared by a Muslim, a Serb and a Croat. The one with the highest number of votes is chairman for two years.

SPORTS

• BICHETTE TO HAVE KNEE SURGERY. Dante Bichette, who has hit 70 homers and driven in 265 runs for the Colorado Rockies in the past two seasons, will have knee surgery next month and is expected to be ready for the start of the 1997 season. Bichette suffered a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee in 1992.

• MISSOURI RECEIVER TO SPEND 15 NIGHTS IN JAIL. Missouri wide receiver Rahsetnu Jenkins will serve a 15-day jail term for violating probation in a sexual-abuse case last year. He was sentenced Monday. The sentence will begin Dec. 27, during the university's semester break.

• STOCKTON SIGNS THREE-YEAR CONTRACT. Former Tulane football coach Andy Pilney is dead at the age of 83. Pilney, who died Sunday at Chateau Living Center, was an All-America halfback at Notre Dame, and was Tulane's coach from 1954-1961. Born in Frontenac, Kan., Pilney played baseball and football at Notre Dame, where he graduated in 1936, and played professional baseball during the summer from 1936 to 1941.

BIKES for sale

Auction raises money for student scholarships

TONYA ALLOWAY
staff reporter

Eighty-two numbers were given out at yesterday's bike auction conducted by K-State Police.

"I'd say it was better than last year's auction," Jim Williamson, campus police officer, said. Williamson was the auctioneer. He auctioneers part-time as a hobby.

Some students went to the auction looking for a good buy, while others were ready to spend money. Several of the bidders were planning to resell a bike from the auction for profit.

Gabby Slater, junior in interior architecture, said she brought very little money and was looking for a bargain.

"I might even resell it back home," Slater said. "I'm an entrepreneur, I guess."

Slater said she wasn't new to the auction scene.

"I love going to auctions," she said.

Slater ended up buying a bicycle for $5. She said she planned to resell it to make a few bucks.

She said the bike she wanted for herself went for a little too much.

"I saw the little girl the guy had bought it for, so that's all right," Slater said. "She looked happy."

On the other hand, Daniel Smith, freshman in electrical engineering, spent the most on a bicycle at the auction. He paid $180 for a Timberwolf Bianchi. Smith said he would expect the bicycle to cost $300 new.

He said he would have to do some work on the bicycle, but it would be basic things he'd do to any bicycle.

The auction's profits will be placed in a student scholarship fund, said Robert Mellgren, campus police captain and assistant director. He said this was only the third time the police have put money in the fund, but it should soon have enough money to draw scholarships.

At press time, the campus police didn't know how much was in the fund or how much the auction raised.

In addition to the 44 bikes on display, the sale included a table full of lost and found items, including jewelry, binoculars, backpacks, tapes, coolers, battery chargers, bike parts, a car tire and hubcaps.

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian

NICK KRIER, freshman in secondary education, and Jeremy Girard, freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, take a closer look at a bicycle for sale. The bike was in less-than-perfect condition, providing a little humor for the pair attending the K-State police auction, held outside East Stadium Tuesday evening.

Residency struggle continues

BETH HUSTED
staff reporter

With the newly established linear tuition, establishing residency in Kansas would seem like a dream come true for some out-of-state students.

It isn't that hard to apply for in-state status, but circumstances for approval of in-state status will differ for each individual who applies.

Establishing residency for fee purposes is an option for any K-State student who will, or is, paying out-of-state tuition.

First, it is important to rule out some of the myths about attaining residency for fee purposes. Residency is not a matter of how long you have lived in Kansas or whether you have worked in Kansas.

"Even if a student were to take a year off of school from K-State and work for that year (in the state of Kansas), he wouldn't necessarily be granted residency," said Kris Young, assistant to the registrar. "Each case is reviewed on a strictly individual basis."

In-state tuition is cheaper because K-State is a state institution, and it uses state funds.

"It's a benefit," Young said.

Even if the circumstances of two individuals applying for residency appear to be the same, one may be granted residency, and the other may be denied that status.

Although attaining in-state fee status can be difficult, it has been granted to some students at K-State.

Amy Nery, junior in nutritional sciences from Texas, was granted in-state status. She has had in-state status since she was a sophomore.

"Honestly, I'm not really sure how I did it," Nery said. "I know a guy who had the same circumstances as I did, and he didn't get it. All I know is that I had to prove I could be self-sufficient."

Nery had to prove she worked in Kansas and paid Kansas taxes.

"I know some people who had to go in front of a board, but I never did," she said.

Several criteria can qualify a student for residency. Some criteria are living in Kansas for more than a year and paying Kansas taxes, no longer being financially dependent on a parent, or certain military status.

Judith Siminoe, interim general council for the Kansas Board of Regents, said usually Kansas high-school graduates qualify for in-state tuition, but there are always exceptions.

"All these things will be taken into account but will not necessarily be determinative," Siminoe said.

If students apply for residency and are denied status, the board offers a panel for appeal. The panel will usually consist of faculty, administration and students who are appointed by the president of the university.

Military requires new weather operator at airport

MATT SPURGIN
staff reporter

The Manhattan Municipal Airport could lose the business of military aircraft if the city does not fund a weather operator.

The Federal Aviation Administration and the National Weather Service have instituted a new Automated Surface Observation System.

Because of this system and the low classification of Manhattan's airport, funding for a weather operator will not come from the FAA and must come from the city.

The ASOS has been installed at more than 300 airports nationwide. It is in both small airports, such as Manhattan's, and large airports, such as Kansas City International.

Along with this new system, the FAA has new guidelines as to which airports require a weather operator in addition to the ASOS. These depend on how the airport is classified.

Airports not provided with a weather operator will have to fund a weather operator certified by the National Weather Service.

"The FAA, National Weather Service and 14 aviation associations have developed service standards," Jay Salzer, planning specialist for the air traffic division at the FAA, said.

These standards are based on three criteria: occurrence of significant weather, distance to the nearest alternate airfield and critical airport characteristics. This government team ranked airports in four service-level classifications. Manhattan's airport received a service-level D classification, which is the lowest classification.

"We were ranked service-level D because of our traffic volume and climate history," Ken Black, manager of Manhattan Municipal Airport, said.

This level does not require a weather operator for the ASOS system.

"They (level-D airports) have met the criteria that put them in a group where they can stand alone with the ASOS," Salzer said.

Black said this could cause a problem with military aircraft. The military will not fly into an airport where the ASOS system is not backed up by a weather observer.

Black requested the FAA re-assess its classification, but the EAA was not interested. He said the FAA thought the military rules were only for military airfields.

"I said, 'If the military is not comfortable with your system on their airports, why would they be comfortable at ours with the ASOS?'" Black said.

Black said being this close to Fort Riley, military aircraft accounts for 10-15 percent of the traffic.

If these aircraft can no longer land, the airport would lose a considerable amount of revenue from use of the airfield and fuel sales.

IN OUR OPINION

Damon faked left and is attending classes at K-State; here we go again

David Damon is back.

He's back in class, and he might be back on the football team, something that should not be allowed to happen.

That is to say that the ex-linebacker from the K-State football team, who was dismissed from the University for violating K-State sanctions after he was convicted of the sexual battery of a K-State student in the residence halls in 1994, is once again enrolled.

WHY WE CARE

After being kicked out of school for violating University sanctions, former Wildcat linebacker David Damon is attending classes again.

How did this happen?

Damon faked left and went to Geary County Court, appealing to be allowed back in school to take extension classes at Fort Riley.

He was granted an Ex Parte restraining order, which allowed him to attend classes until the University can tell its side in court. So the fight isn't over.

But he's back in school and attending class, and he might even be allowed back on the team.

Wildcat coach Bill Snyder admitted that he might allow Damon back on the team in the spring and said he was happy to see that Damon was back in school.

But the final decision about whether to allow Damon back on the Wildcat football team — and the one who could give him an athletic scholarship — is up to Snyder.

Damon shouldn't be a football player representing K-State. Although he has maintained his innocence, he is a convicted sex offender, and Snyder has already booted him from the team once.

He should stay off, and he should not be allowed to enjoy any of the privileges Wildcat football players enjoy, including the athletic department's training equipment.

All of the alumni who support the team, not to mention much of the Manhattan community and everyone who has ever bought a K-State football ticket, should not have their money used for the betterment of someone who is a convicted sex offender.

Excellence in football isn't worth it.

And the team, sporting an excellent, young defense, does not even need him.

If K-State were to allow Damon back on the team, it would be no better than Nebraska was when it let Lawrence Phillips play again.

That little episode did nothing for the credibility of their school or NU head coach Tom Osborne.

K-State shouldn't let it happen here.

Contact Coach Snyder and let him know what you think about whether Damon should be allowed back on the football team.

He can be reached at 532-6529.

But, officer ...

Speeding excuses might get officers to chuckle, but that's about all.

NOTICE: this column is not meant to promote unsafe driving habits or lying to officers of the law. Its sole purpose is to entertain. Cool? Now lets get on with the story.

It was Prince's fault. But I'm sure the police wouldn't see it that way.

OK, let me explain.

I was cruisin' down Interstate 70, attempting a quickie make-up job and listening to the oldies but goodies station, when all of a sudden, Prince's "Raspberry Beret" came on the air.

"Workin' part time at a five-and-dime, my boss was Mr. McGee. He told me several times he didn't like my kind. I was too leisurely."

Ooh, that used to be a jam back in the days.

Anyway, lipstick in one hand, mascara in the other (I was guiding the steering wheel with my knee), I started tapping my one free foot to the beat.

The faster the beat, the harder my foot hit the accelerator.

I was so into the song, I didn't even realize when the little arrow on the speedometer passed the 80 mph mark, and my 1983 Camaro started trembling.

"That's when I saw her. Ooh I saw her, she walked in through the outdoor, outdoor. She wore a raspberry beret ..."

Prince's sexy voice drowned out the wailing of the sirens. And it was only when I readjusted my rearview mirror that I caught a glimpse of the mad flashing red and blue lights.

Oh snap.

I knew the routine all too well.

My history of run-ins with "the man" goes way back.

I have been stopped for everything from changing lanes in the middle of an intersection to busted taillights.

Once, coming home from a study break, I was stopped and accused of driving under the influence.

I kid you not. The officer said I was weaving.

After a humiliating place-one-foot-after-the-other walk in front of the weekend traffic whizzing down Fort Riley Boulevard, he let me go with a warning.

In fact, half the times I got stopped, I got off with warnings.

But not this particular time.

No, this guy was a pro — a real veteran of the ticketing game.

The burly man shook his head as he asked for my credentials and informed me of how fast I was going.

"But officer," I said in my best Southern drawl.

"I'm a stranger to this part of the country."

I twirled a brown lock around my finger and gave him my best cute-but-confused look. (I know. That's pretty weak. But I only had seconds to be creative.)

Just for a moment, I thought I saw a hint of amusement or maybe mercy, spreading over the heavy creases of his broad face.

But the look quickly twisted into a deep frown. This man was not havin' it.

"Look, I could write a book about all of the excuses I hear," he said, handing me a glow-in-the-dark pen.

"Sign here ma'am."

MY

Nikola Maria
ZYTKOW

Before driving away from the scene of the crime, I figured I could at least gather some cool material for a column. So I got him to share some of the more interesting excuses he'd heard throughout his years on the force.

Later I contacted the Riley County, Geary County and Campus police departments and compiled a little list of unusual or outright silly explanations for putting the pedal to the metal.

- My wife is getting pregnant, and I wanna be there.
- Someone was chasing me.
- I'm a breast-feeding mother, and I have to get home.
- I just got new tires on my van.
- My wife called and said I had better get my butt home.
- This isn't the interstate?
- I was just keeping up with all of the other cars.
- Postpartum depression.
- My speedometer doesn't work, so I drove what felt like 55 (driver was doing 90 mph).
- My license was suspended. But I do have a note from my mother saying it's OK for me to drive. (He, matter-of-factly, handed the officer the note).
- I'm sorry, but I didn't see you officer.
- Officer, this is really embarrassing, but I'm having a bad case of diarrhea, and I'm in a desperate hurry to get home.
- But I was going downhill, shouldn't that count for something? (The driver suggested this case called for a 10 mph leeway).
- You couldn't have caught me speeding, my radar detector didn't go off.
- Nope, I couldn't have been going 42 (in a 20 mph zone). My car can't go that fast in first gear.

Here's a personal favorite of mine from a Geary County police officer:

- After being stopped for speeding, the driver handed the officer a get-out-of-jail-free Monopoly card along with his license.

How do the officers usually respond to this ridiculous rationale?

"He made me laugh so hard, I just had to let him go," said the officer who was handed the Monopoly card.

The general consensus was that while a humorous comment might evoke a smile or even a laugh, most people will still end up with a ticket.

So next time, you're caught speeding, you might not want to waste a lot of time wracking your brain for excuses or loosening up the buttons on that blouse.

These guys have heard and seen it all.

As for me, as soon as the insurance company finds out about my latest rendezvous with the law, I'll be bikin' it all around town.

Columnist says elitism flourishes at K-State

Welcome to higher education. You are now an elitist.

Wait a minute, you mean to tell me good old K-State harbors elites?

Before I answer that question, perhaps I should silence those of you chuckling at the irony of this column. Yes, I am a journalist (elitist blow No. 1). Yes, I am an engineering student (elitist blow No. 2). And, yes, I, too, am in higher education (elitist blow No. 3).

Now, I'll answer the question by introducing you to the unspoken world of résumé-packers, do-gooders and self-promoters who have suffocated student leadership (or similar forms of) on this campus for the past two years, at least.

Where are these people? (if you have to ask) Well, they exist in a carefully maintained structure of elitist organizations, which try to pass themselves off as leadership- or service-driven.

Why would anyone be enticed to join a hollow organization? For one, there's always social status. Who you know on campus matters. At K-State, your position decides who you interact with because the elites generally dominate leadership organizations.

In this way, campus thought is minimized and consolidated to the opinions of the elite, who are generally influenced by advisers.

Having connections on campus doesn't hurt when needing a letter of recommendation, a good word for a committee appointment or the deciding factor in a contest for an award. New recruits to the system clearly see the goal: Create the better résumé, meet the better people and make the better connections.

> "Don't fool yourselves, these people are only self-proclaimed leaders. People aren't leaders because they joined a leadership organization or have been invited to cocktails with so-and-so."

The running theme here is conformity. Why allow a common student, who attends class, has a night job and studies, the opportunity for leadership or praise? A safe member of the elite class could fill the shoes with the bonus of an administrator to dignify the act for all to see. Repeat as necessary.

For example, Golden Key, the junior honorary organization, has been soliciting for new members in the K-State Student Union this week. But (did I fail to mention?) you're only admitted if you're invited.

Or Silver Key, the sophomore honorary organization, that had the gall to sleep in cardboard boxes in front of the Union last year to remind us ignoranti that homeless people exist (This paper covered it. Surprise!) Thank you for taking time out of your hectic schedule to make a farce out of the homeless situation.

Running theme number two: lack of substance. Organizations, such as these, that are reactive and unfocused might grab an issue when trendy but abandon it with the fade of the spotlight.

I'd pick on Student Governing Association, but perhaps that's too easy a target. Oh, hell, why not?

Résumé-packers are precisely the reason I, and many of my colleagues, did not choose to run for a second term in Student Senate.

We got sick of attending meetings every Thursday night when half of the members had decided a more interesting option was to discuss the merits of television in the hallway outside.

If you don't mind them, you still have to deal with the plotting junior politicians who can't wait for the next great entry on their résumé-to-power (Who have, consequently, taken on some importance in the new balance of Senate. Scary.)

My gripe? You can't enjoy the rewards of being a senator if you aren't dedicating your time and concern for the responsibilities. Our current leadership worries more about the next campaign than any timely issue. How do you respond to someone who has admitted to running for a position for the prestige factor?

Even Homer would not be at home here when he wrote "I detest that man who hides one thing in the depths of his heart and speaks forth another." These people share their hypocrisy!

MY

Russell
FORTMEYER

Student Alumni Board is a grand incubator of elitist tendencies where the policy is once you're in, you're in for good. Did I fail to mention (again) to get accepted it helps to know an administrator or two or perhaps someone on the board, before you even begin the application and intensive interview process.

K-State's administration does little to curb this elite setup, since it gives oodles of credence to phony honor banquets and shallow leadership ceremonies, while paying scant attention to the people who truly create the fabric of campus life. They only welcome the next generation of establishment into their own comfortable shoes.

This eliticism cannot die because just as every honor drifts into irrelevance, a new student even hungrier for false praise and status steps forward, ready to join the club.

Don't fool yourselves, these people are only self-proclaimed leaders. People aren't leaders because they have joined a leadership organization or have been invited to cocktails with so-and-so.

There are, no doubt, people who will voraciously and publicly deny all of this. Admittedly, it would be nice and relieving (to some) to ignore this issue. Before you speak out, could you re-evaluate the organization in question and see if it doesn't provide services better rendered elsewhere (and with less pretension)?

Any organization where one must prove their worth to join isn't an organization for the betterment of humankind. Why do people pass their own understanding of values and judgment on potential members? The greek system is horrendously guilty of this.

Aren't we all in it together?

Changing a system that is practically inherent in the concept of being an American is no easy task, especially at a conservative school such as K-State. It's hard to change a system when the very people you're dealing with have benefited the most from it.

K-State's administration must make the first move. Until it makes a valid attempt for true diversity of thought and gives students who don't fit their conventional molds a chance, there can be little done.

SGA could be an excellent battling ground for the unrecognized student. No one can deny popular vote. The elite would then be forced into reckoning with a diverse leadership. We haven't seen this situation since Ed Skoog left K-State. However, enough of a tide must turn for the elitist do-nothings to be snuffed out.

I'd like to ask these leaders to ask themselves why they got involved in these organizations.

If you want to help the homeless, volunteer at a local mission. If you want to encourage other students to lead, give them a good example. If you want to pad your résumé, get lost.

Or, in the lyrics of Stephen Sondheim's glorious ridicule of committee-serving, leisure-class women: "Here's to the ladies who lunch. Everybody rise! Rise! Rise!"

READERS WRITE

Greek coverage was unfair

Editor,

I am disgusted and tired of unprofessional, opinionated articles about greeks and pizza deliverers. First, this problem has been stretched way out of proportion. What does this have to do with the entire greek system? If I am correct, I believe that pizzas are also delivered to residence halls, apartments and houses.

I don't see why you have to single out greeks and write about something of little importance. As I recall, you had a small article stuck on page five about Mother Teresa and her declining health. Then you had a larger article about greeks and pizza. Where are your priorities? I think they're a little mixed up.

Greeks are tired of ignorant people writing about how rude they are. If you took the time to learn about the greek system and what really goes on, maybe you wouldn't be wasting your time on things no one wants to read about.

This problem reflects on the guy who made the comment, not the entire greek system. All I ask is that you think before you place judgment. There are more important things going on at K-State, in America and in the world today than pizza delivery to greek houses.

Stewart's column off-base

Editor,

I am writing in response to Todd Stewart's column on the Mike Stoops affair. I think that Stewart is way off line.

First of all, Stewart needs to understand Stoops is a public figure in Manhattan. He is different from the average student. He is paid by the University. Consequently, he is an employee and a representative of K-State. Also, his job places him in an influential position in regarding the behavior of football players. They are also placed in the spotlight, and the attention they get (and most of the time enjoy) means they need authority figures to demonstrate how to handle it. Stoops is obviously not mature enough to handle this responsibility. How can we expect the players to represent K-State properly if the men they are supposed to be learning from represent the school poorly?

What is more disturbing about Stewart's column is the apathetic attitude he extends to the crime of driving under the influence. Stewart says Stoops didn't hurt anybody, and he should be given a freebie. The fact that nobody was hurt, doesn't make Stoops'action acceptable. Someone could have been hurt by him. A person who places the lives of others in danger does not deserve a freebie. The thousands who are killed by drunk drivers every year don't get a freebie. Drunk driving is a serious problem in Manhattan. Mr. Stewart might not take the issue so lightly had his little sister or parents been killed by a drunk driver.

Yes, Mike Stoops is human. He made a mistake, and I don't think anybody is condemning him to hell. However, K-State students and alumni have a right to expect more responsible behavior out of our waged employees, and the Collegian was justified in running the story.

Reader says Franquemont's column was unresearched

Editor,

This is in regard to Lach Franquemont's column Sept. 17.

In the past I have agreed and disagreed with Mr. Franquemont's views, but he has finally used his opinion as a basis for character assassination as well as hollow, no, non-existent arguments.

Lach, I challenge you to research before you write, so that those who read your opinion can give it credence. Even if they disagree with your view.

First you began your article by calling Republicans ignorant.

"Believe it or not, a few of them (Republicans) are actually decent human beings who are, unfortunately, ignorant." Unfortunately your opinion is a gross over-generalization.

I affiliate with no particular party, but I have found they are indeed quite aware of the issues and seek solutions to those issues. They are by no means ignorant.

As to your comments of the votes of the Christian Coalition: First and foremost, voting is a private individual act, so I'm not sure how you come by the knowledge that there were a "healthy dose of Christian Coalition votes ... " Secondly, a vote is a vote. You also mention funding coming from church offerings.

What's the problem? As long as funding for a campaign is generated by legal means and is taken through the proper procedures as well as is accounted for correctly, then what is the problem as to where it comes from?

You also spout that there are many ways you could attack Ryun's stance on the issues, yet you over-generalize, and never once do you validate your points with an actual fact.

For example, "The effects on regulation and cutting out the EPA and Dept. of Commerce, I'll leave to your own imagination." Cripes! Give me a break. You just stated in the paragraphs preceding that one, that Ryun's stance on those issues was the following: "Ryun would like to see the authority of some bureaus now run by the federal government returned to the state level. Those bureaus include the Department of Education, Department of Energy, the EPA, Department of Commerce and the Department of Housing and Urban Development."

OK, Lach, what's it going to be? Is he going to cut them, or does he want the authority returned to the state?

In regards to the voucher system, if teachers were being paid an appropriate salary, allowed to exercise authority in the classroom without fear of retribution, the quality of teaching would go up, thereby circumventing a mass exodus from public schooling. Based on my experience with private school, my daughter is learning to read in kindergarten.

She is also learning things I believe are good for both her intellectual growth as well as her growth in character. In public school, she'd be lucky to learn her alphabet and its phonetic equivalents by the end of the year.

Lach, get back to research, and base your opinion on that research. Present the facts that back up your argument. As for what else I'd like to say about your article, "I'll leave that to your imagination."

MARLON CHARLES breaks through Cincinnati defenders during the 35-0 rout of the Bearcats last Saturday. Charles rushed for 106 yards and two touchdowns.

Cats face Owls in next game, 1st on road

TODD STEWART
sports writer

The Rice Owls do not use your average, everyday offense.

Welcome, K-State fans, to the flying wishbone.

"It's basically an option wishbone," K-State coach Bill Snyder said. "They make you play the option. That's the basis of their offense."

And that's what the Wildcats will be faced with, stopping in their first road game of the year, Saturday in Houston.

Snyder said the key to stopping the Owl attack is stopping the fullback. On Saturday that job of stopping the fullback will go to defensive tackle Jerome Evans.

"You'd like that they're going to develop a close-knit relationship between the two," Snyder said. "Of course, the offensive line will have something to say about it."

> "If they get 3-1/2 to four yards a carry, it's very hard to get them to throw it."
> • BILL SNYDER
> K-STATE FOOTBALL COACH

That Owl offensive line will have to contend with a Cat team that is fifth in the nation in scoring defense and 10th in total defense. On top of all that, the Cats have compiled 17 sacks in three games, led by defensive end Nyle Wiren's 5-1/2 sacks.

Snyder said the key is to make the run-oriented Owl offense throw the ball. To do that, K-State's defense needs to force second-and-long and third-and-long situations.

"If they get 3-1/2 to four yards a carry, it's very hard to get them to throw it," Snyder said.

K-State is coming off a 35-0 win over Cincinnati, while Rice defeated Tulane 21-14 last weekend.

Snyder said Rice's win over Tulane showed exactly what the Owls hope to do against the Cats.

"The Tulane game is a great example of what that offense wants to do," Snyder said. "What they did was maintain possession of the ball. That's basically their approach."

One of the Cats trying to stop the Rice attack will be free safety Mario Smith, who sat out the second half against Cincinnati after being ejected.

Smith said he was caught in a heat-of-the-moment retaliation and said it was a foolish mistake.

"I just reacted. A captain is supposed to set a better example," Smith said. "The ref was right there when I did it. Like they say, the second guy always gets caught."

The Big 12 Conference has the authority to make Smith sit out Saturday if it is determined the ejection was a fight-related penalty. However, Snyder said the Big 12 had not contacted him yet, and he expects Smith to play.

Heading into its final non-conference game, Snyder said the 3-0 Cats are still not where they need to be.

"We're still a long way away. There are still new mistakes."

Linebacker Travis Ochs said the Cats, in particular the defense, took a step in the right direction with the shutout against Cincinnati, but the team did not do anything out of the ordinary.

"We didn't do anything special," Ochs said. "We just played hard."

Wiren says defense just as strong as ever

DAVE GUNTHER
contributing writer

After the buzzer sounded to end the fourth quarter of the game between K-State and Cincinnati, the scoreboard showed just who came to play: K-State's defense.

K-State shut out the Bearcats, silencing the Cincinnati faithful who thought last year's come-from-behind Wildcat victory was a fluke.

Defensive end Nyle Wiren, who had two quarterback sacks for minus seven yards and four tackles, said the defense answered a lot of questions Saturday.

"There is always questions when people graduate and move on and whatnot. Maybe you're going to be weaker in this position or that position," Wiren said.

"I don't feel it. I don't feel that we are weaker at any position. We came out, and we were ready to play."

Wiren said he believes the defense is on the same track as last year's No. 1-rated squad.

"It's what we are trying for, and it's a lot of pressure on us to keep that, but it's a good goal," he said.

"The shut out always makes a win sweeter, but that's our job. We might not get yelled at as much — maybe."

Coach Bill Snyder said he was pleased with the performance of the defense, especially with the pressure the defensive line put on Cincinnati quarterback Chad Plummer.

"We played awfully well defensively," Snyder said.

"It is always a great thing when that happens. I thought we played well against the run, and also we played well against the pass. We put pressure on their quarterback, even when he was scrambling."

The defense held the Bearcats to just 162 yards total offense. Cincinnati's offense averaged just 2.7 yards per play and made only three of 15 third-down conversions.

A hit by linebacker DeShawn Fogle to Plummer midway through the first quarter might have set the tone for the defense.

Plummer had to sit out the remainder of the quarter because of the hit.

"It's good to start off that way, to show them that we are coming to play. It keeps them nervous," Wiren said.

"We were running a blitz, and I didn't get blocked. You can't really describe it," Fogle said.

"To me, I just did what I was supposed to do. When you are in a situation like that, you want to hit him as hard as you possibly can."

NYLE WIREN crashes into Indiana State's Kevin Cox during the game at KSU Stadium Sept. 7. Wiren needs only three more sacks to become the all-time leader on the sacks list, surpassing Dirk Ochs, who has 24.

What is a wildcat? The answer could surprise you

K-State pommeled Cincinnati 35-0 Saturday. The Cincinnati Bearcats, that is.

After the game I pondered what a bearcat might be, and that brought me to the topic of this column — what exactly is a wildcat?

While Willie might have his own opinion on what a wildcat is, I figured I'd take a stab at the dictionary and see what it has to say. I found out some very interesting things.

The Webster's New Encyclopedic Dictionary defines a wildcat in two different ways. The first I expected: Any of various or medium-sized cats. Heck, isn't that why Willie is a cat?

The second — well, I didn't expect it. Old Webster also defines a wildcat as a savage, quick-tempered person.

Savage? K-State Savages? I thought perhaps I had misinterpreted the definition of a savage in my distorted mind. I turned the dictionary back a couple hundred pages. What I found disturbed me.

MY

Shana NEWELL

Savage: 1) Not domesticated or under human control; 2) Rude, lacking complex or advanced culture; 3) A person belonging to a primitive society; or 4) A brutal person, a rude or unmannerly person.

Savage K-Staters. K-State Savages. A week ago I would not have believed anyone if they would have placed the tag on K-Staters. But now I'm not so sure it wouldn't be so inappropriate.

Sitting in the press box at football games, I can't really hear the antics of the crowd, expect for the group "First Down" call and even that's a bit muffled.

I would hope that K-State fans would represent the University as well as, if not better than, our student-athletes who are busting their butts on the field.

But those hopes have been dashed. K-State fans are no better than the schmucks in Norman. In their home opener last week, Oklahoma fans increasingly booed first-year coach John Blake and starting quarterback Eric Moore until, I'm sure, tears probably welled in Moore's eyes; until he was replaced by back-up Justin Fuente.

I learned just recently that a very crude K-State fan (or fans, I'm not sure) yelled "Kavanagh — you suck!" pretty consistently throughout the game. Someone even suggested the fan (if he deserves that title) was so vocal the players could hear him because they kept looking up in the general direction of the offender who was sitting in the student section.

To make it worse, a considerable group of students sitting in the ICAT section began chanting "Beasley" not long after the start of the second quarter, referring to back-up quarterback and freshman phenom Jonathan Beasley.

I have only one response.

K-State football fans — YOU suck!

I am not a big fan of Brian Kavanagh. I think he was overrated coming into the season, and I think he can act cocky on many occasions, reminiscent of a Chad May.

But that does not take away from Kavanagh's accomplishments. None of that should detract from the fact that he has the ability to lead the Cats to a fourth-straight bowl appearance.

And with the way Big 12 programs are dropping like flies to non-conference opponents, fans should stop and think about how great it is that K-State is 3-0 with a very good chance to be 4-0 Saturday night.

Kavanagh deserves partial credit for those wins. He is doing an excellent job leading a very young and, in many cases, inexperienced team struggling to compensate for injuries.

What Kavanagh does not deserve are your boos. He does not deserve loud chants requesting yet another quarterback to replace him on the field. After all, he's one of us. He's a K-Stater, too.

Be patient, K-Staters. Why take chances with Beasley when we have a perfectly capable quarterback in Kavanagh? Save Beasley for the next three or four years. Let Snyder decide who should be calling the plays in the huddle.

How do you think recruits respond when they see a good quarterback ripped on for having a bad game? Hey, everyone has a bad game once in a while. I seem to remember Kavanagh being the Holiday Bowl MVP for a reason. I seem to recall he went 19-22 against Indiana State. Give the guy a break.

If I were a recruit seeing what happened Saturday, I would think long and hard about choosing to play in KSU Stadium. Let's not risk the future of K-State football by being outright stupid.

And that's all fans, like those savages yelling unsupportive statements, are being — stupid.

They give the Wildcats a bad name.

DEVON RYNING, K-State setter, is in her third season with K-State. With 2,687 assists, Ryning is in second place on the all-time assists record. The leader has 3,154 assists. When Ryning came to K-State, she was an outside hitter but had to learn a new position.

Record-setting year for Ryning?

sports writer

One of the most amazing things to come out of the 1996 volleyball season thus far is that junior setter Devon Ryning is on pace to set the all-time assists record in just a little more than two seasons as a Wildcat.

The all-time assists record is 3,154. Ryning, with 2,687 assists, sits in second place on the all-time list. The feat is more amazing considering Ryning came to K-State without knowing her position. Before becoming a Wildcat, Ryning was an outside hitter.

"I'm surprised," Ryning said. "I was shoved into the role my freshman year. I couldn't have done any of it without great hitters, great passers and everything that we have on the team.

"It means a lot to me. It's a great achievement for me. At the same time, I guess I don't think about (the record). I probably won't until January."

Ryning has been a part of one of the greatest turnarounds in all of Division I volleyball history. Last year, in only his second season at the helm of K-State volleyball, Coach Jim Moore took the Cats to their first stint of postseason play in 17 years.

"This has been the best two years of my life," Ryning said. "It has been the most exciting roller-coaster, and it is wonderful to see where this program is going and where we could go."

Ryning, who is always first to practice and last to leave, takes pride in what she does.

"I've been working hard to do that in the last two years," Ryning said. "I think that's what the team needs, and that's what I've tried to do.

"If the team does what our goal is, then all of my personal goals will have been met."

Those goals include going to the NCAA National Champion Tournament.

"I don't think it's an option for us not to make the NCAAs," Ryning said.

Playing only one nationally ranked opponent so far this season, Ohio State, the team that handed the Cats their only loss, Ryning said she isn't sure the team is quite ready for Big 12 play.

"I think we have a long way to go, and that's good," she said. "Everybody on the team knows that we have a lot to work on. We have three months before the NCAAs even start. We still have the Big 12 coming up.

The Cats came into the preseason picked to finish seventh in the Big 12. That doesn't bother Ryning.

"I don't think we deserve respect," Ryning said. "Until we go out and we beat some good teams, we don't deserve the respect, and that's an issue with us. We have to ask ourselves, 'Yes, we can talk the talk, but can we walk the walk?'"

With the team's record improving, it has gained more support from its fans.

"It's always fun to play in front of a home crowd," Ryning said.

"It gets you enthusiastic about your team and your play on the court."

K-State's newest sport still learning the ropes

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

Pay a visit to crew practice, and K-State coach Jennifer Hale will tell you it's still early.

That's not because practice starts before the sun comes up. It's because Hale still has a young and relatively inexperienced squad. But that doesn't mean it's not progressing.

"They're getting it," Hale said. "There's a lot of learning to do, because they're all getting used to rowing at this level."

About 80 students came to the team's first practices, and 55 remain.

"That will probably drop," Hale said. "I'd like to go into the spring with about five eights, and right now we have about 4-1/2."

Although K-State has had a women's rowing club for years, the Wildcats are a month away from their first varsity regatta. And the returning rowers might have more to learn than the newcomers.

"There's a lot of things we're used to doing one way, and we need to do better," said Holly Wise, sophomore in elementary education and returning club member.

Hale said she agreed.

"It's hard for them, because they have habits they need to unlearn if they want to do things right," she said. "But everybody's coming along well. They're picking things up quickly, and they have a great work ethic."

> "There's a lot of things we're used to doing one way, and we need to do better."
> • HOLLY WISE
> RETURNING ROWER
> SOPHOMORE IN ELEMENTARY ED

While the rowers are spending time on skill development in the boats, they are not done with their conditioning routine. In fact, Hale said they've only just begun. Running and workouts on the rowing machines on campus are still a regular part of the practice regimen, and the athletes will start working out in the weight room in October.

The learning is not limited to students. Assistant Coach Debra Morgan said she is just now getting acquainted with Hale's coaching style.

"We're starting to come together," Morgan said.

"I'm starting to get used to her lingo, and that helps a lot."

Especially when the team is breaking in several new coxswains. Hale said few coxswains were among the 80 people who came out for the team, so several new coxswains were recruited last week.

"This is their first day in the boats," she said. "But they're doing OK, too."

K-State has almost a month before itsfirst regatta, the Head of the Kaw, Oct. 12, in Kansas City. But Melissa Miller, sophomore undecided and returning team member, said the work the Cats have done in the preseason will pay off.

"We're going to be a lot better prepared than we were last year," Miller said.

The women's crew team is in its first season as a varsity sport at K-State. The Wildcats' first regatta, the Head of the Kaw, will be Oct. 12 in Kansas City.

Perot denied presidential debate spot

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — In a decision cheered by Republicans, a nonpartisan commission recommended Tuesday that Ross Perot be denied a spot in this fall's presidential debates. An outraged Perot vowed to sue, and the Democrats continued to argue he should share the stage.

The Commission on Presidential Debates said Perot should be excluded because he had no realistic chance of winning the White House.

The Clinton campaign suggested two two-hour presidential debates, with Perot to be invited to one. Republican Bob Dole wants four debates — all without Perot — and the gulf between the two camps made it appear certain that the first debate would not occur next week as proposed by the commission.

Ordinance to increase court costs

■ New funds make municipal court computerization possible.

SCOTT CONNER

Students and residents who need to go to court in Manhattan for violating a city ordinance might soon find themselves paying an increased court fee of $46.

The Manhattan City Commission unanimously approved a charter ordinance Tuesday night that would increase municipal court costs from $36 to $46.

City Attorney William Frost said the ordinance will go into effect after 61 days if it is not opposed by a referendum or at another reading by the city commission.

City Manager Gary Greer said the increase in court costs will help pay for computerization of the municipal court.

The commission also authorized beginning the design phase of the expansion and remodeling of City Hall.

Jerry Petty, the city's director of public works, said a steering committee, which consisted of Manhattan residents and officials, had agreed the remodeling and expansion of the current City Hall would be the best solution to expanding City Hall.

The other two alternatives evaluated by the steering committee were to build a new facility in the downtown area or to remodel an existing building downtown.

Commissioner Bruce Snead said he encouraged citizens to continue to participate in the next phase of designing and remodeling City Hall.

The Kansas Entrepreneurial Center will move to a new building, thanks to the commission, which allocated $325,000 to the center from the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund.

The move into the former Big Lakes Development Center building will help expand the center's new-business development program to help foster new industrial companies.

The center is currently located in the former Southwestern Bell building on Poyntz Avenue.

The commission accepted a bid for the expansion of the city library.

In 1994, the city approved the allocation of $2 million to expand the current city library.

The project was then delayed because of legal issues until the city received bids for the construction of the project.

However, the lowest bid received for the project was about $3 million, which was substantially more money than the city had set aside for the project.

Library administrator Bill Stamey said this increase is due to inflation and a request to include space for a telecommunications room in the library.

The commission authorized the city administration to negotiate with the bidder about the cost of the project.

Warhol show at the Union

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Andy Warhol lives on.

It seems the eccentric artist has been the subject of much attention this year, what with two Hollywood films that either focus on him or include him ("I Shot Andy Warhol" and "Basquiat") and the new Union Art Gallery show that opened on Sunday.

"Endangered Species" combines ten silkscreen prints the artist created in 1983 to give light to animals on the endangered species list at the time. You'll realize, though, the bald eagle is not on the list.

It seems odd this very New York artist, who did much to further popular culture, fuel an underground of drugs and alternative artists, and change the way we look at art, could have turned his attention to such a worthy subject.

However, this exhibit clearly focuses on the collaboration between Warhol and New York Gallery owner Ronald Feldman.

It was actually Feldman and photographer Peter Beard who proposed the idea of the print series to Warhol.

As the exhibition explanation in the gallery points out, Warhol only picked the colors and the photos used for the screening.

The prints were actually created by printmaker Rubert Jasen Smith.

With all this collaboration, the quality of the prints and the artistic statement doesn't really matter, I suppose. Nothing in this exhibit surpasses ordinary graphic design.

It could be said Warhol's simple style of subject composition and colorful line techniques have influenced graphic design. This is true.

For an artist who latched onto popular culture, it's ironic that same culture latched right back onto him.

The animals, everything from a panda bear to a zebra, are caught in a strange stare or, as the exhibit points out, as if they know their fate.

As with most save-the-animals cries for help, little-known species are left out while attention is paid to the cutesy, huggable types that draw crowds at zoos. But we forgive them because the oversight shouldn't overcast the intended message.

This show is a bit of a turn for the gallery, as it hasn't exhibited work by an internationally-recognized artist, especially one of Warhol's stature, for some time, if ever.

The fact that just three weeks ago a throwaway Ducks Unlimited exhibit was in the same space is even more fascinating.

It's somewhat ironic that Warhol, an artist who has always used his work to celebrate and parody popular culture, would share a space with something that is about as low on the scale of culture one can get.

Warhol, born in Pittsburgh in 1928, died in 1987 from complications of surgery. Besides influencing many artists of the second half of the 20th century, Warhol created the magazine Interview and the renowned Factory, a New York studio and hangout for actors, drag queens and artists.

When the show closes Oct. 4, you'll have to drive to Kansas City (as usual) to see a Warhol. So, don't miss this show.

"Andy Warhol: Endangered Species" will run in the Union Art Gallery through Oct. 4. Gallery hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Beach Museum to house the K-State art collection

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

If you build it, they will come.

In this case, they are not baseball players, but works of art that will be exhibited in the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

K-State's permanent art collection was begun by John Helm, professor of architecture, and Kansas artist Birger Sandzen in 1928. They established the Friends of Art in 1934, an organization that, to this day, collects and maintains the collection.

Bill North, curator, said, "There's a certain coherence to the collection because from the conception of the collection to about 1970, John Helm had a pretty focused vision."

"Our present mission of collecting is 20th-century American art, with a real emphasis on not only Kansas art, but art produced within the region — the Midwest," North said.

North said he hasn't had the time to devote to research on the collection because of the approaching Oct. 13 opening to the public.

In 1973, an important collection of 125 photographs, by famed photographer Gordon Parks, was given to the University by the artist.

The Beach art museum has received many donations of art and has made some acquisitions since construction was begun on the building.

A large John Steuart Curry drawing, "Study for Our Good Earth," was given by Topekan Don Lambert. Another noteworthy work will be unveiled at the opening of the art museum.

Among the new pieces in the collection will be a Dale Chihuly sculpture commissioned for the museum's lantern, which is how the architect refers to the main staircase between the ground level and the first floor. The Chihuly sculpture, a tornadic spiral of glass, was purchased through donations by Mr. and Mrs. Jack Goldstein of Manhattan and Mr. and Mrs. R. Crosby Kemper of Kansas City.

"I don't know how to describe it," North said. "It has almost a tornado shape and uses oranges and reds that evoke the prairie at certain times of the year.

"It's a very dramatic, stunning piece."

Curator preps art for first show

BEACH Museum of Art

In the four weeks leading up to the opening of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, the Collegian will be running a series of articles on Wednesdays spotlighting different aspects of the museum. On the Friday prior to the opening, be sure to look for a complete breakdown of the museum.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Before the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art can open its doors, someone has to hang the art.

But first someone has to matte the art. Then someone has to frame the art. Then someone has to put a hanger on the wall, organize the exhibition, research the history, write a gallery brochure .... There's much to be done.

These activities have been more than enough to keep curator Bill North busy for the past year.

North oversees more than 1,500 pieces of art that make up the K-State art collection.

Although most visitors will only see the collection as it hangs on the walls, many things happen before the art arrives at that stage.

Many fine pieces from the collection are hanging in campus buildings, such as the president's office in Anderson Hall and the K-State Student Union.

North said the art will be moved to the museum, but the process of moving it all will occur over a period of time.

"It's a wonderful testimony to the University, the University community and the students that there hasn't been major vandalism to the art," North said.

Once the art has arrived at the museum, the works that will go into the inaugural exhibits will be hung on the wall, and the rest will be put into storage.

"One of the first things we will do is have a conservation survey done of all the paintings and all the works on paper to identify the problems and prioritize things," North said. "There will be things that we identify as objects that need immediate attention, because they are unstable and degrading."

The survey would occur over a few years. None of the art in the inaugural exhibit will be cleaned prior to hanging. North said the cleaning and conservation processes will be contracted out to professional conservatories.

"One of the things the Friends of Art does is to underwrite this activity," he said. "Fifteen percent of the money they raise annually goes to a fund that goes toward conservation."

After the collection has been moved to the building and before some of it can be hung, it must be framed. Most of the paintings and major prints are already framed, but many of the works on paper will be stored in boxes.

A traveling exhibition differs from permanent collection exhibits in that it comes to the museum framed and only needs to be surveyed for damages and then hung.

There are two storage rooms: one for prints that will basically consist of shelves and small boxes, and another for paintings. The painting storage room consists of a system of vertical sliding panels which allow the work to be maintained in a wall-hung fashion, but still allows easy access and cataloging.

Laura Fatemi, assistant gallery manager, is matting prints for an opening show of works by Tom Edwards.

"Right now, I want to make sure I get the right color matte," Fatemi said. "You want the work to really stand out, so the three colors we use for mattes are very neutral."

Fatemi finished her master's of fine arts degree from K-State in spring 1994.

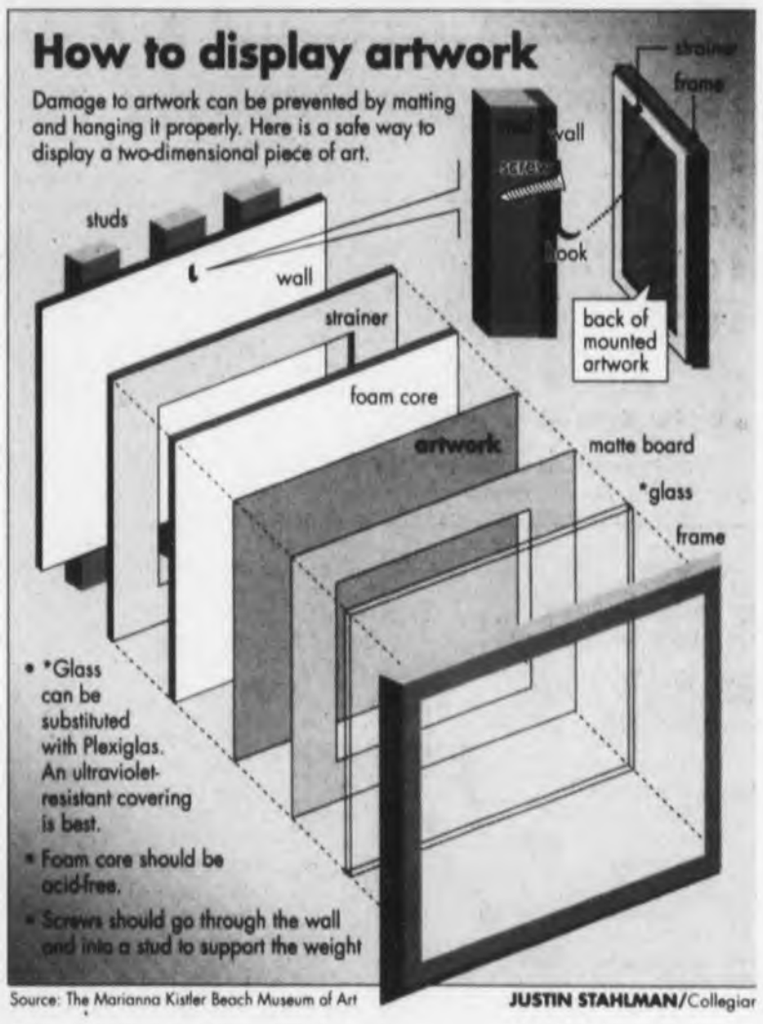
The matted prints will then be installed in ash frames custom-made for the museum's works-on-paper collection. Fatemi said the benefit of the frames is they are reusable with each exhibition.

North said he tries to retain the original frame for a painting if possible.

After it is framed, a work of art would then be carted, via a secured access elevator, from the ground-floor storage area to the first-floor galleries.

This is when Smith gets most involved. It may sound easy to hang a nail for a painting, but fine art is somewhat sensitive.

Smith, who hung art in a Santa Fe art gallery before coming to the Beach Museum, said the art on exhibit will be hung off a centerline, which will be about 60 inches.



"The hanging takes less time than anything," Smith said. "There's a lot of physical work involved in handling the artwork in storage and prep rooms before it gets to the galleries."

Once in the gallery, security becomes a bigger issue. The Beach Museum's storage facilities are accessed by computer keypad entry and are off-limits to the public. The galleries, however, will be monitored by cameras and guards.

A small concrete strip runs along the edges of the galleries. It is an unspoken way to keep visitors from stepping too close to a work of art.

Also located in the secure storage area is a works-examination room where visitors can request appointments to see art in the collection that is not on exhibit.

"This is a room I hope a lot of people will utilize, and I hope the public realizes this is a resource they can use to see the works," North said. "Your response to the work in a setting like this is a lot different than up in the galleries."

which is a food distributor that sells to and owns supermarkets. In his four-state area, he regularly visits 12 university campuses.

"Mainly, we're looking to introduce students to our company and introduce dialogues," Ehly said. "It's kind of like the 60-second soundbite to sell your company."

Ehly does not see the fair as an opportunity to hire students, but rather to get some idea of who to interview in the future.

"We don't usually hire at Career Fairs, but usually come back to interview students when we have more of a quiet setting," he said.

Each company is looking for an array of skills and personalities.

"We're interested in students that are excited to start a career, have people-related skills, good communication and personality," Ehly said.

"We want people who have the personal skills to meet the public."

Ehly also pointed out that the Nash Finch Company was willing to train the business aspect of the job, and it was not a requirement.

Whether students found internship or employment opportunities, it was a chance for them to get their feet wet in the pool of the real world that awaits after graduation from K-State.

"It just means reality is setting in," Duncan said. "Next year will be a lot more hectic than this year is."

IRAQ

be opposition to (the deployment of U.S. troops) because everybody appreciates Kuwait's position," said Sheik Saud al-Sabah, the information minister.

Many Arab governments have portrayed the recent U.S. actions against Iraq as heavy-handed. There is also the perception that the United States has picked a fight about an internal Iraqi matter — a civil war between two Kurdish factions in northern Iraq.

Several large Arab countries that were part of the Persian Gulf War coalition against Iraq, including Egypt and Syria, have been less than supportive of the U.S. buildup.

Saudi Arabia and Turkey, both important U.S. allies, refused to allow anti-Iraq strikes to be launched from their territories. U.S. troops and planes, however, can use the small Persian Gulf states of Kuwait and Bahrain.

The support from Kuwait had been expected. The oil-rich emirate relied on U.S. forces to end a 1990-91 Iraqi occupation.

The latest crisis began Aug. 31 when Saddam sent soldiers into the U.S.-protected Kurdish safe haven in northern Iraq. They ousted one Kurdish faction in favor of a Kurdish group allied with Baghdad.

Washington responded by firing cruise missiles on military targets in southern Iraq on Sept. 3 and 4.

Since then, however, Iraq has toned down its anti-American rhetoric. On Friday, it said it would cease firing at allied warplanes if they stopped patrolling Iraqi skies.

The fly-overs continue, but there have been no more reported Iraqi attacks.

or it will start back up again," Heptig said.

The landscape timbers were grease-loaded, which is like a tar and is flammable, he said.

The fire did manage to draw a crowd of onlookers.

Doug Bruce, freshman in mechanical engineering, said he saw the fire begin when he noticed smoke rising from the bushes. He alerted his friend Brian Widener, freshman in business, to come see the fire.

"The logs were burning really well before the bushes caught," he said.

Widener said once people heard the sirens, they came running.

"There were probably 100 people gathered around," he said. "It's not that big of a deal."

"If a group had a significant and legitimate fine-arts proposal, we would try to bring it in. With the new legislation, if a group isn't categorized as fine arts, they may not be able to do fine arts activities at all," Procter said.

The Fine Arts Council is an important source of money for extraneous activities for nine campus entities: McCain Auditorium; the Multicultural Student Organization; the International Student Organization; as well as the departments of music, art, English, and speech communication, theater and dance, and the College of Architecture and Design.

FDA deems RU-486 safe

SPEEDREAD

- RU-486, an alternative method of abortion to surgery, is already used in Europe by 200,000 women. In the United States, groups are protesting, not just for pro-choice/pro-life reasons, but for more information regarding what long-term health effects could exist.

■ Controversial abortion pill could be available in 1997.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The drug RU-486, an alternative method of abortion to surgery, passed its last hurdle Wednesday on the way to becoming available to women in the United States.

The Food and Drug Administration said the controversial French pill was safe and effective when used under a doctor's close supervision. But the FDA withheld final approval until it receives more information about how the drug would be manufactured and labeled.

It should be in doctors' offices by mid- to late-1997, said Sandra Waldman, spokeswoman for the Population Council, the nonprofit group that has the U.S. rights to market the drug.

The drug, already used by 200,000 European women, has long been the focus of an emotional debate between abortion-rights supporters and abortion opponents, who argue that making the drug available in the privacy of doctors' offices will increase the number of U.S. abortions.

The FDA sent a letter requesting further information Wednesday to the council, which in March began the process to get approval for the drug, known chemically as mifepristone.

"We are sure we will be able to provide the FDA the outstanding information necessary for approval," the council said in a statement.

Once the FDA gets answers to its questions, it has up to six months to review the information.

Abortion opponents accused the Clinton administration of rushing the approval process for political rather than sound medical reasons.

"We have no idea what the long-term impact on women's health will be by this politically motivated push to get this chemical into American women's bodies," said Kristi Hamrick, spokeswoman for the conservative Family Research Council.

Tougher rhetoric came from Randall Terry, founder of Operation Rescue

"The FDA is participation in the chemical assassination of innocent people," he said in a statement.

The decision was hailed by abortion rights supporters, who predicted it will help end the days when women arriving for abortions have to pass through pro-life rallies outside clinics.

"It's a new era of choice for American women," said Margaret Conway, vice president for public policy at Planned Parenthood. "American women have been waiting for years for this approval. They're ready for this."

One of the troubling questions for the FDA has been how to ensure women return for the third doctor exam, which comes after the pills are taken, to make certain the abortion was completed. If not, they need quick surgery.

Theft of street signs amounts to costly problem for tax payers

TONYA ALLOWAY
staff reporter

It is not uncommon to find a street sign missing in Manhattan due to thieves who want it for wall decoration.

"Stop signs, yield signs and street-name signs are the most common ones stolen," said Larry Quick, city traffic control foreman. He said the street-name signs most often taken are ones that include someone's name.

The stolen signs must be paid for by taxpayers.

He said between $10,000 and $15,000 worth of signs and posts are stolen per year. This money comes from the budget allotted to the traffic division.

Sgt. Larry Freeby of the Riley County Police Department said not a high percentage of people gets caught stealing signs. Most recovered signs result from the police's being in someone's apartment and seeing the signs.

Although they can recover these signs, Freeby said the police have to see the person committing the crime or have a confession to punish them.

"Very seldom do people say, 'I took it off a post on the street,' " Freeby said. He said they usually say they found the sign somewhere.

If a sign thief is charged, the punishment can range anywhere from $100 to $500 and six months in jail, said Laurie Cammel, Manhattan court services officer.

Cammel said there is no set fine for the crime and no minimum, but the Art festival ropes in horse enthusiasts

JACQUELINE BONE
staff reporter

The High Plains Art Festival promises the western art lover a showing fit for a king.

The show is one of the highlights of the 1996 World Championship Equine Endurance Race this week.

Artists from Idaho, Texas, Washington and various towns across Kansas will be displaying their talents this week at the art festival. The festival will be in the lower level of Heritage Hall at Rock Springs 4-H Center.

The festival is open to everyone and is free, said Kendra May, High Plains Art Festival Committee co-chair.

The western theme of the show evolved to fit the environment of the festival.

"When it first started, it didn't matter," May said of the art style to be shown. "Most people who agreed to show had western stuff."

The setting of the race makes western and equine art more fitting and easier to sell, May said.

Most of the artists were contacted as a result of committee members who were involved in art showings or other festivals. Many artists were personal contacts of Kathy Bartholomew and Jean Moore, chair and co-chair of the High Plains Art Festival Committee.

Bartholomew and Moore will be displaying their own talents at the festival. They will have various paintings, pottery and custom-designed tile for show and sale.

Clinton increases military presence in Middle East

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANKARA, Turkey — Renewed attacks by rival Kurdish groups were reported near the Iran-Iraq border, and the leader of one of those groups crossed into Turkey for talks with U.S. and Turkish officials.

A U.S. military spokesman in Saudi Arabia, meanwhile, said Iraqi air defense systems have been tracking U.S. and allied warplanes patrolling a southern no-fly zone, but that Baghdad has kept its promise not to fire on them.

Iraq said Friday it would stop firing on warplanes patrolling over northern and southern Iraq. However, Iraq has continued to turn its radar systems on and off, said Lt. Col. Andrew Bourland.

"We merely picked up an indication that their systems were turned on," Bourland said from the Saudi capital, Riyadh. "We only experienced minor indications from Iraqi surface-to-air encampments, which we don't consider any significant threat."

Bourland refused to say when this had happened.

President Clinton has dispatched 3,500 more Army troops to Kuwait to join 1,200 others already conducting war games there.

In Kuwait, two new Patriot anti-missile batteries were uncrated Tuesday. The Patriots were sent by the Pentagon to guard the oil-rich state, invaded in 1990 by Saddam's troops, against possible Iraqi Scud missile attacks.

Bourland said the United States also has beefed up its forces in Saudi Arabia with several Patriot anti-missile batteries and about 170 personnel to operate them.

Faculty members to vote on capping executive salaries

ANDREW FRANCIS
staff reporter

K-State faculty members and college faculties across the nation will be asked to vote on a resolution in early October that would demand a top pension fund to take action to limit executive salaries to $3 million.

Members of the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association-College Retirement Equities Fund, or TIAA-CREF, the world's largest pension fund, will be asked to vote on a proposal that would require TIAA-CREF to take action to stem the growth of executive salaries.

Since 1990, pay for the average CEO has nearly doubled, and total executive salaries and benefits have increased by 30 percent, according to information from the Preamble Center for Public Policy, a policy institute based in Washington, D.C.

According to the Preamble Center, the pension fund's earnings are directly reduced by increases in executive salaries at companies that hold its shares.

A member of TIAA-CREF made the proposal to limit executive pay. The TIAA-CREF Board of Trustees opposes the proposal but cannot intervene on the voting process. The board's opinion of the proposal will be included with the ballot.

K-State faculty who are members of TIAA-CREF will receive the ballot in the mail in early October.

Stan Clark, head of the biological and agricultural engineering department, is a member of TIAA-CREF.

Former vice president Agnew dies at 77

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Spiro T. Agnew, Richard Nixon's strident point man who railed against the media as "nattering nabobs of negativism" and became the only vice president to resign in disgrace, died at age 77.

Agnew died Tuesday afternoon of undiagnosed leukemia at Atlantic General Hospital in Berlin, near his summer home in Ocean City, hospital officials said today.

Picked by Nixon as his running mate in 1968, Agnew established himself as a national political force by employing a colorful phraseology in criticizing anti-war protesters, liberals and the media, and by proclaiming himself spokesman for the silent majority

"Spiro Agnew had something few people in this city ever show — raw political courage," Nixon administration speech writer Pat Buchanan said from Washington. "At a time when the Establishment was craven in its pandering to rioters and demonstrators, Vice President Agnew told the truth about both of them."

Agnew's meteoric six-year rise from county official to Maryland governor to vice president came to an abrupt halt in October 1973, when he pleaded no contest to a single count of income-tax evasion and resigned.

Only one other vice president — John C. Calhoun, who had a political split with President Andrew Jackson — was forced to resign from office. Agnew's was the first resignation stemming from legal problems.

Agnew was born on Nov. 9, 1918, in suburban Baltimore, the son of a Greek immigrant father. He became a lawyer and moved into politics, winning his first election to become executive of Baltimore County in 1962.

Agnew was later elected governor of Maryland. He was only the fifth Republican in 180 years to hold that office in the heavily Democratic state.

• MOTHER TERESA TO BE RELEASED. Mother Teresa is suffering from back pain, but X-rays and other tests showed no serious injuries after a fall at her home. The 86-year-old Roman Catholic nun was admitted to the Woodlands Nursing Home on Monday and underwent tests, including a CT scan, to determine whether there had been any brain damage. She was expected to stay under observation for a few days before being released.

• CRIMES AGAINST HUMANITY. A former member of France's pro-Nazi government will be tried for arresting and deporting 1,690 Jews during World War II — but not soon enough for the families of those who died. An appeals court in Bordeaux ruled Wednesday that 86-year-old Maurice Papon must face a jury to account for his role in the Vichy regime's collaboration in the extermination of Jews.

• TRAIN COLLISION KILLS 14, INJURES 40. A freight train collided with a stopped passenger train northwest of Rio de Janeiro today, killing 14 people and injuring 40 others. The collision occurred at 8:20 a.m. near the rural Japeri district of Nova Iguacu, about 70 miles northwest of Rio.

• ELEVEN KOREANS COMMIT SUICIDE TO AVOID CAPTURE. Eleven North Koreans were found dead today, and one was captured after they abandoned a submarine on the east coast. KBS-TV, a state-run station in Seoul, said they apparently committed suicide rather than risking capture by the thousands of South Korean troops and police searching for them in rugged mountains along the border. There was no immediate North Korean response. It was not clear whether any other men had abandoned the submarine after it ran aground off Kangnung.

• O.J. CIVIL TRIAL UNDER WAY. O.J. Simpson's wrongful-death trial officially began Wednesday with the arduous task of finding an impartial jury for a publicity-saturated case. Superior Court Judge Hiroshi Fujisaki was to have last-minute evidence hearing before attention turns to the critical phase of jury selection, which is expected to be a grueling process lasting several weeks.

• CRANBERRIES CONCERT CANCELED. The Saturday concert by the Cranberries at Sandstone Amphitheatre has been canceled due to an illness in the band. Lead singer Delores O'Riordan has been told by her doctor to refrain from performing for the next four weeks because of head exhaustion and a bad case of the flu. The Cranberries's tour, which features Cracker, will not perform at the last nine North American venues because of this sudden illness.

Executives at Midwest Contemporary Group said that the concert would not be rescheduled as of yet. However, any ticket holders will be reimbursed the full amount at all points of purchase starting at 9 a.m. Friday.

• FARLEY TO BE SENTENCED. Terrell Farley, a preseason all-American linebacker for two-time defending national champion Nebraska, will be sentenced Oct. 25 on a charge of first-offense drunken driving. Farley, 21, was arrested Aug. 30 after police saw him driving erratically. His blood alcohol level was 0.177 percent. The legal limit is 0.10 percent. Farley pleaded guilty to the drunken-driving charge at his first court appearance Friday.

• JAYHAWKS LOSE ANOTHER PLAYER. Travis Williams, a 7-foot center for the University of Kansas has been medically disqualified. On Tuesday, Coach Roy Williams said the medical staff had decided it would be best for the sophomore from Rozel to end his basketball career. Coach Williams disclosed that Travis Williams suffered from hip and back injuries.

Dancer offers insight on movement

ERICA DUNCAN
staff reporter

Feet stomping in aggression, toes tipping to the heavens and spider webs pulling chests forward are three ways Nina Nelson got her dance class involved in movement analysis.

Like many young girls, Nina Nelson started dancing by taking ballet in grade school at a local dance studio.

Nelson is a dance instructor at Western Michigan in Kalamazoo.

She is visiting K-State to give students additional insight on the different aspects of movement. She teaches modern dance, performance and choreography as well as the laban movement analysis.

"She taught us how inner weight controls how heavy and how light you are," said Erika Jackson, freshman in dance.

Introducing students to the laban system is an overall goal for Nelson.

The laban analysis is a model for describing and analyzing movement.

"It's a theoretical system, and most of the people who are trained more or less agree with it," Nelson said.

She said she feels being exposed to someone else's point of view will entertain as well as educate the students she is teaching this week at K-State.

Nelson said she had never thought of dance as a career until college.

Nelson attended Smith College in Massachusetts, where she discovered modern dance and the creative aspect of choreography.

"It was my entrance as a career rather than entertainment," Nelson said.

She decided to go on to graduate school to become a dance instructor. She attended Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, Ohio.

She met K-State dance instructor Vera Orlock there.

"I've known Vera for 20 years. We were joined at the hip as graduate students," Nelson said.

She then moved to Kalamazoo and began teaching. Western Michigan has the largest undergraduate dance program in Michigan with 80 majors and 20 minors, Nelson said. She has been teaching there for 14 years.

Nelson comes from a family that was concerned with and involved in education. She said she has always wanted to communicate with other people.

"I really like that exchange. I find it very stimulating," Nelson said.

Many of Nelson's students have gone on to become successful dancers, but Nelson said she feels it was more of a collaborative movement rather than her individual success.

"If you're waiting for those moments to happen, you're waiting forever," she said.

Breakthroughs happen every day, even if it's just a student's understanding a theory, Nelson said.

No one can claim sole inspiration to Nelson.

"Everyone I've studied or watched on stage makes an impact," she said.

Donors can save lives, earn money

HEATHER HJETLAND
staff reporter

Some K-State students are making money and saving lives at the same time.

At the Manhattan BioMedical Center, up to $30 per week can be earned by donating blood plasma. More than 100 people each day donate plasma, the clear portion of blood.

Of these donors, 40 percent are college students, said Tamitha Johnson, a phleobotomist at the center.

Mitch Patterson, senior in construction science, said he donated plasma while he was in high school because he played high-school sports and didn't have time for a job.

"It was easy money," he said.

In addition to making money, there are other benefits to donating plasma. Plasma goes to pharmaceutical companies where it is used to research such things as new vaccines and how to treat burn victims, Johnson said.

"We encourage it. It is lifesaving," said Donna Baer, business manager of Medical Associates of Manhattan, P.A.

Nancy Radebaugh, senior in speech pathology, donated last spring. She said she decided to donate because her job wasn't paying enough.

"It doesn't hurt and takes just about an hour," she said. "It's a totally good experience, because you're helping others."

When donating, a 175-milliliter reservoir is filled with blood. The blood is then spun, and the Center keeps the plasma. The red blood cells are returned to the donor.

"Donating plasma is not as draining as donating blood, so you can donate more frequently," said Dr. Guy Smith, medical director of Lafene Health Center.

"We've not had any problems attributed to the selling of plasma. The rules and regulations are reasonable, so students should consider it," he said.

One K-State student previously worked at the Center. Tamara Bourgeois, junior in elementary education, said reactions to donating depend on the person.

"Some people's bodies just can't take it," she said. "Looking at needles makes them pass out."

Patterson said he stopped donating when a needle was accidentally stuck into his muscle, resulting in a hematoma.

"It really hurt, and I passed out," he said.

Audrey Willcott, sophomore in hotel restaurant management, said she didn't want to ask her parents for more money and decided to donate.

"My friends passed out," she said. "I was sore and bruised. I can't believe I was that desperate for money."

Plasma can be donated up to two times per week, and donors are paid $15 per donation.

Donors must weigh at least 110 pounds, be from 18 to 65 years old and have strong veins in both arms, Johnson said. Current identification is required. Ear or body piercing cannot be done within one year of donating. Any medical conditions or prescriptions must be alerted to one of the 25 Center personnel.

Grabbing some friends and walking around the K-State campus could help save lives. People will be gathering to take a step to raise money for the American Diabetes Association's Walk for Diabetes on Sept. 29.

Connie Christy, eastern regional director of the American Diabetes Association, said last year the Walk for Diabetes produced more than $3,000 in donations in Manhattan alone; however, the association always strives to raise more money each year.

"Many students are directly affected by this disease and people do not realize the severity of it and what it does to people's lives," said Lori Richter, senior in public relations and coordinator for the Manhattan Walk for Diabetes.

Christy said the walk will be entertaining as well. KQLA-FM 103.5 will advertise the walk and will broadcast live from the walk site.

The K-State cheerleaders will also be there to help the walkers warm up before it begins.

Several companies have made donations, such as Carlos O'Kelly's Mexican Cafe, which will be serving free food at the walk, and Vanguard Airlines, which will give away two round-trip tickets to anywhere in the United States to the person who gets the most pledges.

Those who receive $50 in pledges will receive a free Walk for Diabetes T-shirt, and those with more than $100 in pledges can choose from gift certificates from Lillian Vernon and Spiegel catalog.

People who do not wish to walk are welcome to volunteer and donate their time handing out water and food, putting up signs, or helping set up, Richter said.

The walk begins at 2 p.m. at East Stadium. Participants will walk about two miles around campus and will finish back at East Stadium.

"Some people's bodies just can't take it," she said. "Looking at needles makes them pass out."

Patterson said he stopped donating when a needle was accidentally stuck into his muscle, resulting in a hematoma.

"It really hurt, and I passed out," he said.

Audrey Willcott, sophomore in hotel restaurant management, said she didn't want to ask her parents for more money and decided to donate.

"My friends passed out," she said. "I was sore and bruised. I can't believe I was that desperate for money."

Plasma can be donated up to two times per week, and donors are paid $15 per donation.

Donors must weigh at least 110 pounds, be from 18 to 65 years old and have strong veins in both arms, Johnson said. Current identification is required. Ear or body piercing cannot be done within one year of donating. Any medical conditions or prescriptions must be alerted to one of the 25 Center personnel.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Equestrian championships pose unique opportunity

If you've never experienced the magic of the Lippazanner Dressage or seen a real life Civil War re-enactment, now might be your only chance.

The 1996 FEI World Championship Endurance Equine Race has come to Rock Springs 4-H Camp.

WHY WE CARE

The 1996 FEI world equestrian championships bring once-in-a-lifetime sights to Rock Springs 4-H Camp. You should not miss it.

It has brought with it international horse racing champions and legends who will compete in the 100-mile endurance race on the open prairie Saturday.

With horse racers and their entourages coming in from around the world, this will mean money for local businesses in Manhattan and the surrounding area.

However, without support, Kansas might never have the chance to host an event like this again.

Spectators from more than 30 countries will be present. From 6,000 to 10,000 Americans will travel across the United States to attend.

Students are encouraged to show their support for this event and the riders who will represent the United States.

This event has been called the Olympics of horse racing.

It is also the first time the High Plains have played host to an international equestrian event.

Building up to the race, the event will sponsor a variety of activities, including the Juried High Plains Art Festival, the Lippazanner dancing horses and a Belgian Six-Horse Hitch.

The American Horse Festival will take place in conjunction with the equestrian event.

College is about experience, and this event is a once-in-a-lifetime chance to see world-famous horses and riders.

It is also a chance to be part of one of the biggest events in horse racing.

The High Plains Juried Art Festival will feature Midwestern art by artists from Texas, Idaho, Washington and Kansas, among others.

The event also offers a trade show and a variety of demonstrations such as pony club vaulting and jumping.

The event is open to the public, and it is free. This makes it accessible for college students strapped for cash.

The race will begin at 6 a.m. Saturday.

Activities began Wednesday and will continue through Sunday.

Learning, not grades, should be objective in the university setting

MY

Rhett HARTMAN

This week, for me and most everyone else I know, was a week of tests. Ever since high school, I've been irrationally disgusted by tests. Now, probably because I have learned so much in college, I can show you why you, too, can be disgusted by them.

For example, enrolle in a biology course. Person No. 1 took biology in high school, and his mother is a biologist so he has been around the concepts of biology all his life. He is majoring in biology and considers this class to be a waste of time.

Person No. 2 is from Ellinwood, an impressive town if not for its one stoplight. Person No. 2 did not take biology in high school, but she is very willing to learn, even though she is majoring in architectural engineering.

The course is taught, and both students finish the course with a grade. Person No. 1 gets an A, and Person No. 2 gets a C. So you would think Person No. 1 is the more apt student, listened closer to the tapes and learned more material than Person No. 2, right?

Ask yourself this: What do grades mean? Are grades only a product of bubbles from a Scantron form, or is there something more to their existence?

We would hope, because we are paying for our education, the grades we get from a class are directly related to how much we learn from our classes and our studying. But this is rarely the case.

More often, grades are correlated to how well someone can cram, or whether someone has had this teacher before or whether a student can memorize a list of definitions.

If a test is simply a list of comparative terms a student has to recall, then why would a student need to think at all?

There is little in this situation to motivate the students. Where the love of a subject should be the impetus for learning, now, when it's 3 a.m., the only thing keeping our eyes open are hopes for a high grade point average.

So what happens when teachers test on things never taught in class — "That part was in the book"? What happens when a class doesn't curve grades?

These are things that distance students' grades from how much they have learned. They also push the teacher away from the concept behind grades.

This whole mess is oriented around the idea of grades.

You might think you pay tuition for a university experience, but in the end, grades are all that matter in a university.

This attitude is virtually impossible to escape because of tradition. Would anyone come to a school that doesn't give out grades?

> "Grades are correlated to how well someone can cram, or whether someone has had this teacher before or whether a student can memorize a list of definitions."

So the focus on grades transmits itself to the students, and then you have the whole hatred-for-tests issue that started this column.

If grades were simply a gauge of how much you know, and not how much you don't know, students would want to be truthful.

This is because grades would represent how much you have learned instead of how much you haven't memorized.

But this is a change in attitude more than anything else. The change would have to be grass roots, and every person who works for the University on the academic faculty would need to share this attitude.

There would be a focus on learning, and faith that definitions and dates and memorization would naturally follow. There would be a movement toward creativity and flexibility in the classroom and more empowerment by teachers to focus on motivating the students.

I had a teacher who pushed these boundaries. He was an English graduate teaching assistant named Jon Tveite.

His idea was that students would learn more in smaller groups meeting fewer times a week than in larger groups meeting more frequently during the week.

This was a great idea, but it put an incredible amount of responsibility on our shoulders. If we only had 20 minutes to discuss inside of class, we had to commit ourselves to work outside of class.

Yet this method is quite unnatural in a world full of hour-long lecture classes.

But what is the alternative? Keep limiting students in classes where they sit in rows and columns of boredom? Where is the participation? How can students become motivated?

I took a Business Calculus class last year. It was a great math course, but it had no real relation to the business world.

We would study marginal analysis and profit margins and that sort of thing, but our lessons were relatively independent and mostly came down to one type of problem, not a usable concept.

In a world not restricted by grades and traditional math, I envisioned a course where each class was its own business, and the students were in charge of keeping it afloat.

I see a classroom free from a book and full of experiences, where students are given a chance to think and teachers' creativity is given priority.

Perhaps only in my dreams.

African American males should not allow condemning statistics to rule their lives

MY

Erin MANSUR-SMITH

When my brother turned 21 years old, he told me he never expected to live to see 25.

The moment after he made that statement, I panicked. I thought perhaps this was a not-so-subtle way of telling me he was dying of some incurable disease.

Thank God, it wasn't that. No, his excuse for making such a strange statement was this: He was a black man in this country at this time. No matter what he did or how hard he worked to stay out of what was going on around him, it was was going to find him.

And, he also said, it was probably going to be carrying a gun.

It doesn't matter that my brother has nothing to do with gangs or drugs or that he doesn't carry a weapon himself.

He is convinced no matter what he does or where he goes, he cannot escape the fate of dying at an early age simply because he is a black man. It is a certainty I have heard many other African American men assert.

"Because that is what happens to the black men in this country," he said. "It doesn't matter if they're not hurting anybody or doing anything. They die."

E.J. hasn't died yet. Of course, he doesn't turn 25 for another year, but the resignation I saw in his face and heard in his voice assures me when he does turn 25 it will be a complete surprise to him.

When I heard rapper Tupac Shakur died from injuries he had sustained in a drive-by shooting last week, I remembered my brother's prediction.

Shakur was only 25 years old and successful by all accounts.

I had never been all that impressed with him because of his criminal record. I didn't think of him as a good role model, regardless of how much money he had made or the number of records he had sold.

But there are many out there who did consider him a role model, especially young African American men.

They thought of him as a hero, as someone like them who'd been born in the 'hood and who got out of it, without losing what made him who he was.

I fear those same young people, particularly young men who are like my brother, might see Shakur's death as proof that no matter how successful a young African American man becomes, it won't cheat him out of an early grave. I don't want them to think seeing 25 is an unreachable goal.

It also scares me to think there might be men out there who might accept such a death as heroic and not as a total waste and tragedy.

It makes me feel as if they might think being an endangered species is some sort of status symbol. Or it won't matter if they don't try hard to get ahead because fate, God, the Man or even their own brothers will just knock them right back down again.

Many of those who think this way have well-grounded fears, but if they give into that train of thought, or allow their lives to be ruled by it, I think they are behaving like cowards.

Now, there are some of you out there who might think because I am not an African American man, I could not possibly understand the amount of pressure you are under every day of your lives.

You might think it is easy for me to sit here and spout out praise and condemnation because I could never know how it really is for all of you day to day, and you are right.

No, I am not a man.

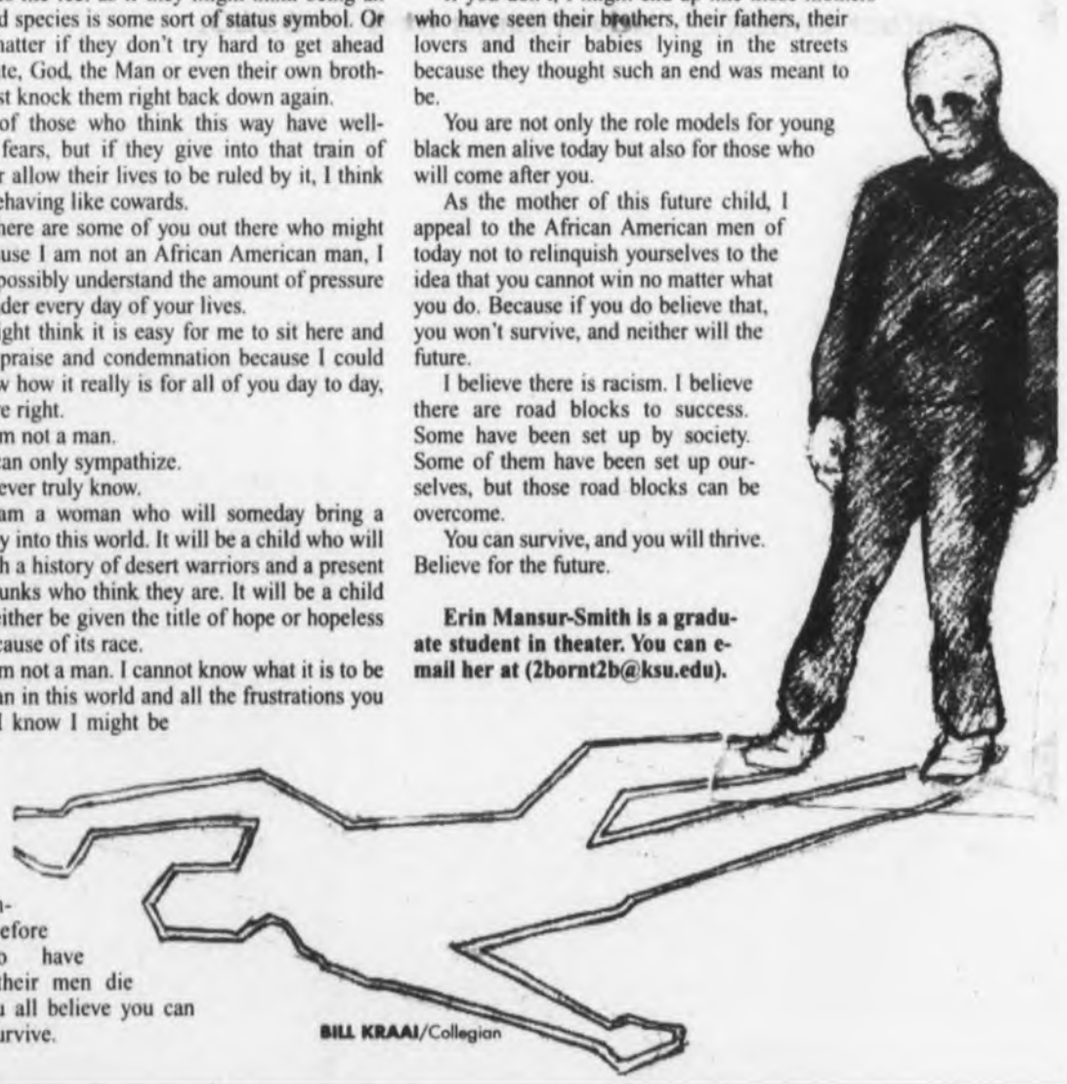
Yes, I can only sympathize.

I can never truly know.

But I am a woman who will someday bring a brown baby into this world. It will be a child who will inherit both a history of desert warriors and a present of street punks who think they are. It will be a child who will either be given the title of hope or hopeless simply because of its race.

No, I am not a man. I cannot know what it is to be a black man in this world and all the frustrations you face, but I know I might be like the mothers who have existed for centuries before me who have watched their men die unless you all believe you can and will survive.

If you don't, I might end up like those mothers who have seen their brothers, their fathers, their lovers and their babies lying in the streets because they thought such an end was meant to be.



You are not only the role models for young black men alive today but also for those who will come after you.

As the mother of this future child, I appeal to the African American men of today not to relinquish yourselves to the idea that you cannot win no matter what you do. Because if you do believe that, you won't survive, and neither will the future.

I believe there is racism. I believe there are road blocks to success. Some have been set up by society. Some of them have been set up ourselves, but those road blocks can be overcome.

You can survive, and you will thrive. Believe for the future.

Christian Coalition's views are as valid as any other group's

Editor,

Lach Franquemont's column "God Help Us" has once again inspired me to fire up the ol' digital pen and fire away. As a student of philosophy, I would expect at least some use of logic in his piece, however this is sadly lacking compared with the mindless invective with which it overflows.

You see I'm one of those ignorant, yet decent, Republicans of which he speaks. Now Lach is bothered by the inordinate amount of pull the Christian Coalition has.

What? Do its members have more than one vote per person?

No, the members merely vote as a block. While this certainly wouldn't bother Lach if we were speaking of the unions or environmental groups, this group is different.

Unlike those other groups' members who share a common interest in how they work or live, these people share a common interest in how they work or live.

I'm not a supporter of the Christian Coalition. It is far more conservative than I am, especially on social issues where I tend to approach libertarianism. However its members have as much right to speak or vote their views as the liberals, hopefully without being demonized by people because they disagree with them. And just because you disagree with them is not conclusive of the fact that you're less ignorant. In fact, I found your column wanting a lot more proof of what's so bad about this guy. So he's old-fashioned and likes courtship better than dating. Do you think he's going to propose a law requiring it?

So he actually believes in downsizing the government, My God man, perhaps he is what he says he is — conservative. I hope Lach might learn to speak his views without debasing people who disagree. It is immature and anti-philosophical.

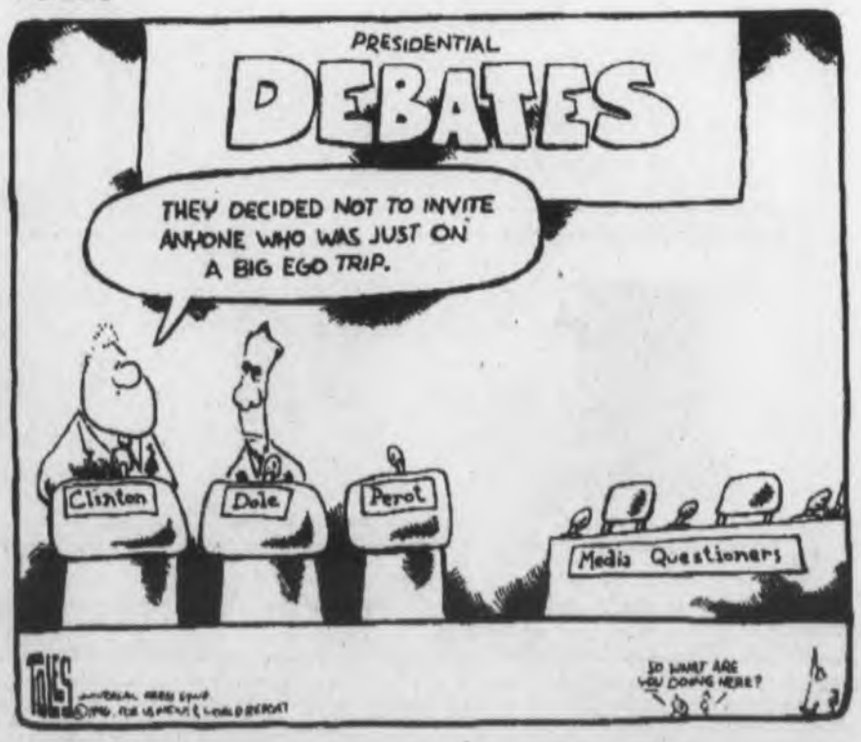
Go to Feedback Fridays



Editor,

Many new things are happening inthe Student Governing Association this year. All three branches of SGA are focused on making it more accessible. One aspect of this new atmosphere is Feedback Friday. Every Friday at 12:30 p.m., Student Body President Chris Hansen's office is open specifically for student input. Everyone is welcome to bring lunch and share concerns and ideas or ask questions. Hansen's office is on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Students are always welcome to visit with Hansen, Student Body Vice President Aaron Otto, Senate Chair Aubrey Abbott or any other officer. An individual meeting time can be set up by calling 532-6541. These people are committed to serving students and would love to hear from you.

Farrell construction is a pain; it's only temporary, though

Editor,

The conditions reported at Farrell Library by Kate Tirrell in her Sept. 13 letter are correct.

They are, fortunately, mostly temporary.

However, we should not expect that technology is foolproof and that we will be instantly gratified each time we use electronic information systems.

We are a library with too few conventional resources trying to move toward an electronic model which will provide a greater rate of success for students.

Combined conditions of changing technology, a $30-million expansion and organizational reinvention have created individual experience that might be chaotic and unsatisfactory at times.

> "Don't become so dependent on PsychLit or any other database that you lose sight of the other methods. How quickly we have become dependent on the computer to provide instant response."
> • BRICE HOBROCK, DEAN OF LIBRARIES

Yes, you should come back and take a look. Library expansion began June 1994 and will be complete by April 1997.

We thank you for your patience.

We are operating temporarily out of emergency an entry/exit that leads to a system of alcoves and carrels, which are designed for quiet study.

Operating public electronic reference interface on four floors creates difficulties for staff and users.

We expect the permanent service areas on the first and second floors to be available by Feb. 1 or sooner.

We only occupy the west third of the building at present, space that was not designed to function in the temporary mode that we must use.

This "expensive building that was too frustrating and full of glitches to be useful" is not nearly complete.

It will function as designed when it is completed.

It is not fair to critique the building's usefulness at this time.

The technology changes daily. We integrated the Voyager client-server integrated library system to move ahead with combining catalog and databases into a single-user workstation.

Note that this common user interface now exists, and you do not have to move from a database terminal to a catalog terminal. We receive an average of one new client (software operating on the workstations) daily, and we are dealing with at least 40 database vendors with unique, proprietary software.

All of this fits together into a network that includes two hundred client workstations, multiple servers, the University network, databases housed on CD drive, hard drives and servers on the Internet and the library LAN.

This is distributed computing. At any given time, multiple technical personnel might have to be consulted to diagnose your specific problem.

The user has a responsibility to read the commands on the database screens. We are finding that some of the printing problems are the result of improper commands.

There are problems with most of the databases.

KU users have the same problems getting kicked out of the same databases. Technology is not foolproof.

Fixes are made by the vendor when reported, but Murphy's Law will always be at work.

The last week has been a tough one for us.

We installed a new Ultra 4000 server, new operating system and 3.2 beta-test applications software for Voyager.

It is not surprising that there are lots of phantom problems.

But guess what?

The catalog now operates with the speed of the former libary mainframe LYNX.

Don't become so dependent on PsychLit or any other database that you lose sight of the other methods. We still take the paper version, "Psychology Abstracts."

How quickly we have become dependent on the computer to provide instant response.

Yes, we could use a lot more help.

The Kansas Board of Regents asked for 10 new positions to help us operate our newly expanded programs and space.

The Kansas Legislature ignored the request. Have you talked to your legislator lately?

I haven't heard anything but tax cut and reduce the state work force.

When we are able to move from out of temporary location to one floor for basic electronic services and user interface, we will do a better job with available personnel.

We are fixing the computer problems as quickly as we can, but they will not go away because these systems are complex.

More licenses for some databases might help, but we might have to ask you to select something other than peak periods.

The licenses limit the number of simultaneous users.

Are you aware that the 1996 Legislature granted zero operating increase and that the library acquisitions budget has been frozen for the foreseeable future?

Bare with us on fixing the problems. I know that it is difficult for staff and students to accept the imperfections of the technology and their colleagues.

We are aware of the problems and are trying to fix them.

Reader tells Newell not all Wildcat football fans suck

The following is in response to the statements made by Shana Newell in yesterday's Collegian, in which she wrote "Wildcat fans — you suck!"

Well, Newell, I'm the fan who wears purple on my body and purple in my heart.

I'm the fan who gets overly excited Wednesday, anticipating the game on Saturday.

I'm the fan who sings along with the band. I'm the fan who screams "First down" and "Touchdown" with everyone else.

I'm the fan who adds my voice to overwhelming "oooooohs" on every defensive down.

I'm the fan who stays to watch the half-time show, and I'm the fan who stays to watch the last seconds of the game, regardless of the score.

There are many like me, and you have done us all a great disservice with your column.

One of whom is my wife, who stands beside me trying to do everything a fan should do and who doesn't remember the crowd acting quite the way you describe.

There are many like her.

There are some bad little apples in the basket, and, as a whole, fans can always improve their support.

This, however, cannot be improved by pathetic commentaries such as yours. Only with positive suggestion, like those of real fans, can we hope to show our pride that much more.

I'm the fan who jumps up and down and screams like an idiot when Brian Kavanagh completes a beautiful pass and Jonathan Beasley scrambles for a first down.

There are many like me. Perhaps you can't hear up from inside your noise-muffling display case.

That's OK; we can't hear you either.

Based on your column, Newell, you are the one who sucks.

Drunk driving not a mistake; it is a choice we make

Editor,

I am writing in regard to Todd Stewart's column in the Sept. 17 Collegian.

First, I would like to say as a member of any K-State organization whether it's an athletic team, greek organization or anything else, you are representing our school and everyone associated with it. This isn't the point of my letter, however.

Stewart makes the argument that driving drunk is a mistake. It's not a mistake. It's a deliberate choice. You choose to get behind the wheel of a car after drinking. It's no wonder people are so carefree about drunk driving if it is so easily justified as a mistake.

Stewart's next argument is everyone should be given a freebie.

How many innocent lives — young and old — have been taken as a result of those freebies?

It only takes one drunk driver one time to kill. Allowing freebies is condoning drunk driving.

I did agree with one point Stewart made. Mike Stoops shouldn't be treated differently than everyone else. However, I think maybe everyone else should be treated like Stoops.

Maybe if one consequence of getting a DUI was getting your picture on the front page of the newspaper, people wouldn't be so apt to do it.

Getting a DUI is something to be ashamed of, not proud of, justified, joked about or condoned.

> "Drunk driving is wrong, and it should be treated that way. It's like playing Russian Roulette, only it isn't just your life, it's everyone who is unfortunate enough to be on the same raod as you."
> • KIM SWANSON, SENIOR IN ACCOUNTING

Drunk driving is wrong, and it should be treated that way. It's like playing Russian Roulette, only it isn't just your life, it's everyone who is unfortunate enough to be on the same road as you.

It's not a mistake. Mistakes are forgivable. Drunk driving isn't forgivable. It's stupid.

By justifying and condoning it, the problem will only continue to get worse. How many lives are we willing to lose before we wake up and realize how dangerous it is?

I just hope we all wake up soon.

You can be a participant in the 1996 presidential debates

Editor,

In just a matter of days, your presidential and vice-presidential candidates will square off in nationally televised debates.

We have an opportunity in Manhattan and at K-State to actively participate in these debates.

K-State has been selected by the U.S. Commission on Presidential Debates to be host to a series of DebateWatch discussion groups.

The Commission on Presidential Debates is a nonpartisan, nonprofit organization that has coordinated all the general-election presidential debates since 1988.

After the 1992 presidential election, the Commission proposed DebateWatch as a forum for American citizens to watch and listen to the debates and reflect and talk about the candidates and some of the issues presented in those debates.

DebateWatch96 is one example of grassroots democracy at work.

It is one way to promote local political discussion and to increase civic participation.

We are looking for volunteers who might be interested in participating in these debate discussion groups.

The presidential debates are currently scheduled for Sept. 25, Oct. 9 and Oct. 16.

The vice-presidential debate is scheduled for Oct. 2.

We are interested in individuals who would be willing to watch one or more of the debates as part of the DebateWatch group and then participate in discussion about the debates.

The debates will probably last from 8 to 9:30 p.m., and discussion will last for about one hour beyond the end of the debate.

Each DebateWatch discussion group will be facilitated by a Department of Speech Communication faculty member.

We are not looking to pick the winners and losers or for all the right answers.

We are simply looking for people who are interested in watching the presidential and vice presidential debates and are willing to express their opinions about them.

If you are interested in participating in DebateWatch96 or have questions about these discussion groups, please contact any of the faculty listed below at 532-6875.

Tri Sigma chapter expands

AMY E. LAGRONE
staff reporter

Ninety-three women have joined the Sigma Sigma Sigma sorority. Seventy-eight new women joined the sorority last Friday after Tri Sigma's second rush.

"It went great," Becky Cazedessus, Tri Sigma chapter consultant, said about the recent recolonization rush.

Tri Sigma accepted a wide range of women, including representatives from all classes. However, the bulk of the house is made up of freshmen to keep the membership strong after this year.

Kelsie Ormiston, freshman in business administration, was one of the women picked to join the house last week. She said they were asked to go to the house four times last week. During those times they got the chance to get to know some of the people already involved with the house.

Ormiston said it was an emotional week, but she is glad she did it.

"I wanted to go through rush at the beginning of the year," she said, "but I decided not to. I changed my mind, because I wanted to get more involved, and I thought this was the way to do it."

Tri Sigma used booths, posters, sidewalk chalk and letters to encourage people to rush. Ormiston said she heard about it through women from other sororities who live on her floor.

The informal rush was conducted by members of the Emporia State University chapter and the 15 women who joined after formal rush in August.

April Hawks, freshman in social work and new Tri Sigma member, helped with the informal rush. She said it was weird to be on the other end of rush so soon, because she had just joined a few weeks ago herself. She said it was sometimes difficult to answer questions, because she doesn't know much about the house yet.

Hawks also said support from other sororities and fraternities helped a great deal.

"It helped get people interested in Tri Sigma knowing there was so much support out there," she said.

Cazedessus said there is a huge advantage to starting a sorority over. When this happens, the women can feel pride in themselves for starting from scratch. They set mutual goals and work together to reach them.

There is also a greater opportunity to become a leader from the start. There are so many offices and so much to get done that all the members can find their place and get involved, she said.

The new members also got the chance to see more of the national aspect of the house than they normally would.

They have all had the opportunity to meet several national representatives, and Cazedessus will be guiding them through initiation and ritual activities.

Cazedessus said she was extremely pleased by the women who joined the sorority.

She said there are several strong leaders and a lot of unique personalities. She said she is excited to see them work together as a team to rebuild Tri Sigma. She said these women have been given a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

maximum is $500 and six months of jail time.

The traffic division finds out about the missing signs from a combination of citizens, police officers and observations made while doing other traffic repair.

More signs are stolen at the beginning and end of the school year, with a steady number of signs stolen throughout the year and the lowest amount taken in the summertime.

"The general share of signs are taken from high-school and college students," Quick said.

The traffic division has to prioritize when replacing signs, Quick said. A missing stop sign takes precedence to a missing street-name sign.

In addition to the replacement of stolen signs, the traffic division is also responsible for the signs damaged by automobile accidents.

Quick said damaged signs are usually paid for by the person at fault in the accident.

"I'm going to be real excited to see all the different types of artwork that is going to be brought into this area," Moore said.

The festival will showcase various art pieces with mostly a western theme.

Handmade leather clothing, handmade sterling-silver jewelry, various paintings and drawings, pottery, landscape sculpture and bronzes are a few of the types of art that will be featured in the showroom.

"People must come see this wonderful, wonderful art. Especially if they are interested in horses or western things," Moore said.

The festival is open to the public from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. Thursday and Friday, and from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday.

The championship trophies to be awarded to the Endurance Race winners will be on display in Heritage Hall. Michael Swearngin, designer of the Endurance Race logo, will be at the entrance to the art displays to sign posters, Moore said.

An artists' reception from 4 to 6 p.m. Friday will give riders and crew of the Endurance Race a chance to relax before the race. The reception is also open to the public, and admission is free, May said.

The Endurance Race features country and western singer Michael Martin Murphey at the banquet Sunday evening following the awards ceremony. This concert is not free, but tickets can be purchased to the banquet and concert for $50 per person at Rock Springs 4-H Center.

He agrees that executive salaries in large corporations are sometimes too high.

"Sometimes I think we put too much emphasis on executive salaries," Clark said. "They have so many benefits that they don't have the pressure on them to do well."

Pat Murphy, professor of agricultural engineering, said that executive salaries are none of TIAA-CREF's business.

"CREF always has the option to invest in other companies," Murphy said.

If TIAA-CREF does not agree with a corporation's pay structure, then they have the freedom to invest in other corporations, Murphy said.

TIAA-CREF has established a powerful position in the investment community because it has more than 1.8 million members at thousands of universities around the country.

"I think if this resolution even came close to passing, it would have a very significant impact on executive pay. TIAA-CREF is a powerful force and corporations would have to listen," Mark Weisbrot, research director for the Preamble Center, said.

Three children were among those killed in the Siran Band refugee camp in northwestern Iran, according to Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency.

Ten people were wounded, it said.

The report could not be independently confirmed.

Journalists on the Iraqi side of the border have seen many KDP fighters in the area, but no Iraqi forces.

U.S. officials patrolling the no-fly zones created at the end of the Gulf War to protect Kurdish minorities in the north and Shiite Muslims in the south have not reported any Iraqi forces so far north.

On the Iraqi side, residents said they came under attack Tuesday by Iran and its ally, the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan.

Residents of nearby Helshew also said their village was shelled Sunday and Tuesday. They also blamed Iran and the PUK.

Former Cat scrimmages with ABL

SPEED

▶ Shanele Stires, 1995 graduate and former women's basketball star, scrimmaged with the Columbus Quest of the ABL.

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

Former Wildcat Shanele Stires, whose 1,344 points and 701 rebounds place her fifth and sixth, respectively, in K-State women's basketball history, participated in a scrimmage with the Columbus Quest of the American Basketball League.

The Quest is coached and managed by former K-State head coach Brian Agler.

Stires, who graduated from K-State in 1995 after being tabbed for first-team all-Big 8 honors and runner-up for conference Most Valuable Player as a senior, played last season with Pagkrati A.O., a professional team based in Athens, Greece.

Stires

Stires was one of more than 200 former college stars to try out for the ABL draft in June but was not selected for the draft.

The ABL requires exclusive contracts with its players, precluding them from playing in foreign leagues or in the Women's National Basketball League, which begins play this summer.

With some players opting to play in leagues overseas or wait for the WNBA, teams are filling their rosters with free agents like Stires.

Neither Agler nor Stires could be reached at press time, but Agler told the Collegian last spring he would welcome an opportunity to coach Stires again.

"She has the versatility, the attitude, and with her time in Greece, the professional experience teams are going to want," he said.

"I know she works well in our system, and I would be glad to have her again."

Other free agents who have signed in the ABL include Olympic heptathlete Jackie Joyner-Kersee and Brazilian Olympic basketball star Marta de Souza Sobral with the Richmond Rage and former Kansas star Angela Aycock with the Seattle Reign.

LEADER on the green

K-State golfer Ann Slater has earned respect from her coach and team as the squad's leader, and she's only a sophomore.

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

Usually a coach looks for a senior to step up and be the leader of the team.

But for the K-State women's golf team, sophomore Ann Slater is called upon to lead the team.

"She was one of our top two players all year long last season," Coach Kristi Knight said. "She's a very strong player and a good person."

Knight said it is Slater's qualities off the course that make her a strong leader also.

"She also leads in the classroom. She makes good grades," Knight said. "She is just a strong leader."

Slater said, "I just try to help the players off the course as well. I talk to the younger kids when they are down. We all have our down days. I just try to encourage them and get them through it."

At the recent Chip-N Invitational, Slater finished tied for 22nd, a finish that was below Slater's expectations.

"I would like to hit in the top 10 in all of the tournaments," Slater said.

Slater's trouble came on the back nine at Firethorn Golf Club, where on two days she shot a 46 and a 45.

"I think she just started to get a mental block on that back nine," Knight said.

Slater said she learned a lot about her game from her back-nine performances.

"There are moments when I just need to control my emotions and stay calm," Slater said. "I need to bear down and concentrate on the tougher holes."

The Wildcats head into the season with no seniors on the team. But the team does have four sophomores who traveled with the team last season.

Slater said she thinks the team will be even stronger this season.

"We have a very eager team," Slater said. "We are all very competitive. We all want to make the traveling squad. Anyone of us could go to the next tournament."

Making it to the next tournament is just the next step in Slater's goals for the upcoming season.

"I would like to go to all of the tournaments and play well. I would also like to make it to regionals," Slater said.

As for the team, Slater said she feels it has some realistic goals to achieve.

"As a team, I think we should finish in the middle of the Big 12," Slater said. "If we can put up some good scores consistently, we definitely have the potential to be a good team."

Chiefs to face two-pronged Bronco attack

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — While preparing to play host to Denver this week, the Kansas City defense has' something new to worry about — a good running attack by the Broncos.

With second-year man Terrell Davis leading the AFC with 320 rushing yards, the Broncos are taking the heat off John Elway's passing and scrambling, and giving defenses an entirely different kind of headache.

"Their running game makes them a lot more balanced," safety Mark Collins said Wednesday.

"Denver's been relying on John Elway's arm for the last 13 years. Now they have a balanced attack," Collins said. "They can still pass, and they have a very formidable running game."

Last year when the Chiefs swept the Broncos in two games for the first time since 1980, the Chiefs out-rushed Denver 316 yards to 149.

First place in the AFC West will be on the line Sunday in Arrowhead Stadium between two teams that are 3-0. Kickoff is at noon. The Chiefs figure their run defense will face its biggest test to date.

"What's impressive about Davis is his versatility," Collins said. "He can run and catch the ball out of the backfield. He has all the tools to be a top back in the league."

After three games, the Chiefs' defense against the run ranks 14th in the league, giving up a shade more than 100 yards a game. Behind Davis, the Broncos in three games have averaged about 191 yards on the ground — No. 1 in the NFL.

"The pressure is not so much on John," defensive end Neil Smith said. "He's been throwing the ball so well for so many years, but now they've got a good running game."

Winning soccer games depends on experience

■ The Penetrators and Gamma Phi Beta top list of squads in preseason rankings.

SHANE MCCORMICK

Soccer season has once again started up in intramurals at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Although flag football has the edge in numbers, intramural soccer has been on the rise in K-State intramurals in recent years.

"We have seen a pretty good raise in numbers over the past two years," Steve Martini, director of intramurals, said. "Last year we got about 15 percent more participants than ever before."

> "When you have the same team together, that experience really helps."
> ● WILL KENNEDY, PENETRATORS' TEAM CAPTAIN

Whether it is due to the recent success of the World Cup in America, soccer is becoming more popular with students.

The top team to beat in the men's division this year will once again be the Penetrators.

The Penetrators cruised through last year's playoffs and won the all-University championship.

Team captain Will Kennedy, senior in construction science and management, said having experience on the team will help this year.

"Most of us have played for three years together," he said. "When you have the same team together, that experience really helps. Also, most of us played soccer in high school, so we have some skilled players."

Although there are several teams in contention to take over the lead, Afro could give the Penetrators a real challenge this year.

"This year there are a lot of tough teams," Kennedy said.

"Afro will definitely be one of the toughest this year."

On the women's side, Gamma Phi Beta is the top-ranked team this season.

Last season, the Gamma Phis finished second in the all-University playoffs.

Ranked behind them is fellow sorority Alpha Chi Omega. Gamma Phi player Amber Lawson, sophomore in pre-health professions, also said having an experienced team is helpful.

"We really haven't practiced much, but we have a lot of the same players back from last year," she said. "Most of us played in high school, but there are some of us who haven't."

Women's sports don't take money from men's; they're finally getting their due

Following my own advice, I took in some K-State volleyball last weekend. The Wildcats thumped their competition. Not one of the matches was even close.

But almost as impressive as K-State's dominating performance were the two new scoreboards at either end of the court.

For those of you who have never seen a K-State volleyball match (oh, and by the way — shame on you), this is a big improvement on last year's arrangement. There used to be a single scoreboard — a converted basketball scoreboard at that — most observers had to strain their necks to see.

Now anyone in any part of the volleyball area of Ahearn Field House can easily see who is playing, the current game score and the match results up to that point.

MY

Dan
LEWERENZ

"Aren't they great?" Cindy Fox, assistant athletic director and senior women's administrator, said Friday night. "We got them thrown in the package with the football scoreboards."

I related this story to a friend the next day at the football game. He wasn't as impressed.

"I'm all for gender equity," this fellow sports writer and former K-Stater said, "but if there's one program that needs new and improved facilities here, it's baseball."

My friend touched on a common criticism of gender-equity efforts undertaken with Title IX in mind.

For those unfamiliar with Title IX, it is a federal statute adopted in 1972 that requires all federally funded educational institutions to provide substantially equitable opportunities for both women and men.

> "Women athletes are not being elevated to a level above their male counterparts — they are being elevated to their rightful, equal status."

Now universities, including K-State, are scrambling to catch up. K-State's Department of Intercollegiate Athletics has significantly increased facilities, recruiting budgets, support staff and salaries for women's sports and added women's crew at the varsity level.

Where has all that money come from?

One simplistic answer would say it has come from men's programs. After all, football scholarships have been decreased.

And it seems (perhaps rightly so) that all new revenues go to women's programs while men's programs remain stagnant. And isn't it the revenue generated by football and men's basketball that pays most of the bills anyway?

This answer is popular because it contains a grain of truth. Men's sports do bring in the money at most of the nation's athletic departments.

But this argument overlooks the historical bias against women's sports. How is volleyball supposed to generate millions of dollars in revenue when women have only been allowed to play it for some 30-odd years? And even then it has to compete with football — a monster that's been around for more than 100 years.

Since collegiate women's sports began competition at the varsity level (K-State and Kansas had the Big 8's first women's basketball teams in 1968), their growth has been phenomenal.

The NCAA has negotiated the broadcast of dozens of games, including a large part of the NCAA tournament, on ESPN and CBS, with individual conferences making deals with smaller sports networks. The volleyball national championship was also broadcast on ESPN.

Now professional women's sports are taking their rightful place. The U.S. Open Tennis Championships paid men's and women's champions equally, and two professional women's basketball leagues are forming. Women's college sports are not far behind.

Yes, women's sports are taking money that might have gone to men's sports. But that's not to say they are taking money from men's programs. They are taking money that should have been funding their programs for years.

Baseball is probably the most obvious victim, because football and men's basketball will never be left out in the cold. But K-State's women's programs are still not funded at the same level as their counterparts on the men's side. No women's programs are.

Baseball coach Mike Clark needs a new facility. There is no reason for the team to change clothes in the parking lot for lack of locker rooms. There is no reason for the bleachers to cave in every season.

But let's not sell the new volleyball scoreboards to pay for it. Women athletes are not being elevated to a level above their male counterparts. They are being elevated to their rightful, equal status.

AFTER THE TABLES are set and the houseboys eat dinner, one of their last jobs before the girls enter for dinner is to carry out the food and put it on the tables.

DINNER SERVICE

houseboys cater to greek women

STORY BY MATT BASLER ● PHOTOS BY JILL JARSULIC

Some people might think being a houseboy could quite possibly be the greatest job for a male college student.

"Obviously, it's a great social job, but we can't forget what we're there for," Brian McLaughlin, sophomore in biology, said.

Houseboys are in charge of setting up, serving and cleaning up after meals at different sorority houses.

McLaughlin said he found out about the job through the grapevine and decided to take the plunge.

A typical week for houseboys consists of working several shifts. Sororities usually have houseboys work both lunch and dinner shifts.

During preparation for a meal, houseboys set out plates, utensils, napkins and glasses.

McLaughlin, an employee at the Pi Beta Phi sorority house, said most meals are served buffet-style.

However, every Wednesday night is formal dinner night at the Pi Phi house, so the houseboys have to serve the girls at their tables.

This requires the houseboys to dress up and bring the food to the tables.

"The worst part of the job is Wednesday nights when they have formal," said Jamey Haremza, sophomore in political science.

Haremza works at the Chi Omega sorority house. He said there are usually 60 more girls attending formal dinner than other nights of the week.

"We have to serve them all, and it takes forever because the pledges come over, which means there's usually 120 girls," Haremza said.

Haremza said the whole crew of houseboys works on formal nights due to the enormous crowd in attendance.

On formal nights, houseboys at the Chi O house work from 3 to 7 p.m. Haremza said formal nights make up the brunt of his weekly hours. He said he usually puts in 10 hours a week between serving lunches, dinners and formal nights.

Susie Viterise, senior in human development and member of the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, said houseboys can dress casually on nights when it's not formal dinner.

BRIAN McLAUGHLIN, sophomore in secondary biology education, and Paul Johnson, senior in marketing, set the table for the Pi Beta Phi house's formal dinner Wednesday night.

Viterise said a lot has changed in the last 30 years.

"Houseboys in the '60s were required to wear white sportcoats when they would serve," Viterise said.

A nice shirt, tie and jacket suffices for the houseboys today.

Sororities show their appreciation of their houseboys by giving them gifts and compliments.

"On Christmas, they give us gift certificates to Streetside Records and are always giving us nice remarks," McLaughlin said.

K-Staters to speak at Russian congress

BETSY WOOTEN
staff reporter

K-State will join forces with Russia Sunday.

The 1996 International Ecological Congress will convene Sept. 22 in Voronezh, Russia. More than 400 scientists from the United States, Russia and Europe will attend. Kansas Gov. Bill Graves is an honorary chairman of the congress.

K-State has a special role as the U.S. co-sponsor of the congress, along with the Voronezh State Academy of Technology. K-State was chosen because of its past cooperation with Voronezh and because of the geographic similarities between the state of Kansas and the great plains regions of Russia.

William Richter, assistant provost for international programs, said a strong relationship between the state of Kansas and the Voronezh region exists. In recent years, Kansas and Voronezh have cooperated in several scientific, trade and educational task forces and exchange programs.

"We hope to firm up our relationship with the educational system in Voronezh," Provost Jim Coffman said.

He will speak to the congress about the environment and the changing mission of the land-grant university.

"The way a land-grant university works is the best system in the world," Coffman said.

A land-grant university has strong ties to environmental education, he said.

Both Richter and Coffman will attend the congress, along with several other K-State faculty who are presenting scientific papers. K-State's Mikhail Korenman, graduate student in education; Richard Lissitschenko, graduate student in education; and Brian Becker, graduate student in biology, will also present papers.

Throughout the six-day congress, papers will be presented in 11 areas related to the environment. Coffman said Russia has problems with air and water pollution and erosion.

Coffman said he hopes the congress will help K-State carry on a long-term relationship with Voronezh.

"The congress will help us to understand the culture and people of Russia," he said.

Professors to demonstrate videoconferencing in Russia

BETSY WOOTEN
staff reporter

Two K-State professors will be releasing information to Russian scientists.

No, it is not a matter of national security. In fact, the Department of Defense awarded a grant to K-State for doing this.

Jack Henry, dean of the College of Technology at Salina, and Stephen Swanson, director of the environmental and industrial engineering technology program, will travel to Voronezh, Russia, for the International Ecological Congress.

They will demonstrate Internet-based videoconferencing and a set of hypermedia materials.

"Desktop videoconferencing is so potentially powerful," Swanson said. "It enables people to collaborate on a project from anywhere in the world. From their desks, they can work on the same file or document simultaneously. It could allow faculty at K-State and Voronezh, or anywhere else, to accomplish in a few minutes what might take a week of electronic mail to communicate."

Swanson said the hypermedia materials are K-State's version of an enhanced textbook. It includes sound and motion video in its coverage of environmental cleanup, compliance, conservation and pollution. Russia has significant air and water pollution and soil erosion.

"The environmental problems facing Russia are massive ones," Swanson said. "There are many advanced technologies for dealing with the problems, but there's a need for personnel there and everywhere who are trained to use these technologies properly."

William Richter, K-State assistant provost for international programs, said the congress is an effort to follow up on the recommendations from the 1992 U.N. Conference on Environment and Development in Rio de Janeiro.

Birthday Bash will feature country acts Atkins and Kersh

ERICA DUNCAN
staff reporter

Country music station KXBZ-FM 104.7 and country dance club and bar TW Longhorn's are celebrating birthdays Thursday.

They will have their second annual Birthday Bash at 6 p.m. at the Wareham Opera House.

TW Longhorn's will provide a cash bar.

B104.7 celebrates its second birthday while TW Longhorn's celebrates its fifth anniversary.

Decca recording artist Rhet Akins will be the main attraction.

Akins has opened for country star Reba McEntire and has had two No. 1 singles as well as several other top-10 singles.

Akins sings "She Said Yes," "Don't Get Me Started" and "I Break for Brunettes."

His current hit is "What They're Talking About."

This is Akins' first appearance in the Manhattan area.

National recording artist David Kersh, whose current single is "Goodnight Sweetheart," will add to the show's musical appeal.

Kersh's debut album, on Curb Records, will be out in October.

Other special guests are expected, but Hoss Michaels, program director at B104.7, is unsure who else will perform.

"We're still crossing our fingers," Michaels said.

Students were pleased with last year's show but anticipate a more exciting show this year.

"Last year's show is going to be tough to beat, but I think by having Rhet Akins this year the show can only get better," Gail Reno, senior in elementary education, said.

A disc jockey from B104.7 will announce the acts.

Tickets will be $10 in advance and $12.50 at the door, if any are available.

Nearly 400 tickets have already been sold. Money made from the concert will go to pay for the entertainment, lights, rent and other expenses.

The first Birthday Bash was at TW Longhorn's, but the second has been moved to the Wareham due to the expectation of a larger crowd to see Rhet Akins.

"I didn't make it last year, but since it's going to be at the Wareham, I definitely plan on going," Jeanne-Marie Johnson, junior in wildlife biology, said.

The High Plains Juried Art Show, sponsored by the Equestrian Event, will begin at 9 a.m.

Create your own newspaper on the World Wide Web website review

DARIN SIEFKES
contributing writer

I've always tried in my World Wide Web reviews to never mention a site twice. But then I thought of the freshmen who weren't here last year to surf the Web. So, this week we will look at some of the best from yesteryear.

CRAYON
(http://crayon.net/)

The Web page for CReAte Your Own Newspaper (CRAYON) improves every time I visit it.

For those not familiar with this site, it allows surfers to create their own newspapers for the Internet. It does this by having the user submit a form telling CRAYON which sites the user would like to see. It then generates a page with the links in a newspaper-like format.

There are hundreds of preformatted links that cover everything from sports, arts and entertainment, to the top comics around. You'll be hard pressed to find anywhere else that has the online versions of NBC Intellicast weather, Dilbert, Dave Letterman's Top Ten List and the Wallstreet Journal linked together.

The new features it has added in recent months take CRAYON to a new level.

It has implemented frames that allow the browser's screen to be divided into subsections that can be independently or interactively controlled. It sounds complicated but, trust me, it is cool.

In the past, users had to save their newspapers on their own machine. Now CRAYON will keep a copy so you don't have to.

This is a service all Net-heads need. And best of all it's FREE!

Timothy Leary's Home Page
(http://www.leary.com:8081/)

Though Leary is no longer with us, his homepage is living on as a testament to his life.

Although I can't believe it, it has improved dramatically since his death thanks to his wife and close followers.

By far, the most visible change is the introduction that fans will recognize from Leary's video "How to Operate Your Brain." This is one of the best homepage introductions. It is a brilliant combination of cutting-edge HTML and animated graphics.

A word of warning: If you are downloading this page while connecting to the Internet with a modem, you should begin downloading the page and go do something else for a while. When you came back to your computer, click your back then forward buttons. This will allow you to view the animation off of your hard drive, which is much faster than your modem.

The site has added a bunch lately. There are new pictures of Leary that are all thumb-nailed. There is even one of him with Joey Ramone.

His video is for sale here, and it has added much more of Leary's written work.

Donations keep the page running. So give what you can to keep Leary out in cyberspace.

ESPNET SportsZone
(http://espnet.sportszone.com/)

Sports junkies of all types will love the changes ESPN has been making to its page in recent months. It has the score information you would expect from ESPN with the convenience people expect from the Internet.

It is also running a special that makes it worthwhile. Use Microsoft Explorer 3.0 to view the homepage, and it will give you a free subscription until the end of the year.

This is just in time for hockey season.

• K-State's first lady

Ruth Ann Wefald serves University, community as 'professional volunteer'

TARA WRAY
staff writer

The unofficial role of first lady of K-State means more to Ruth Ann Wefald than sitting at home and relaxing.

It means devoting more than 10 years of her life to the betterment of K-State, its students and the community.

"I think everybody that is in this position sort of reinvents the role and makes it fit their own interests and talents and abilities," Wefald said. "I think you do what comes naturally to you."

One could argue Wefald's talents and abilities would include fundraising, as her involvement was key to the development of the soon-to-open Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

"Ruth Ann was absolutely involved in all aspects of major gift fundraising for the Museum of Art," Gary Hellebust, chief executive officer of the KSU Foundation, said, "including identification and solicitation of major donations."

The cumulation of more than 10 years of fundraising will ultimately pay off when the museum open its doors in mid-October, and Wefald said she hopes students will make touring the gallery a priority.

"The art collection is incredibly beautiful, and of course the shows will keep changing, so I would encourage students not to make it a one-time trip to the Beach Museum of Art but come frequently," Wefald said.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

SINCE COMING to K-State 10 years ago, Ruth Ann Wefald has kept herself busy getting involved in the bettering of K-State.

Other on-campus functions Wefald is involved in include Cats for Cans, which is the K-State counterpart of Flint Hills Breadbasket. She also serves as co-chair for the International Student Center fundraising campaign.

"I say I am a professional volunteer," Wefald said. "My work is not paid work, though I am pretty busy."

However busy Wefald might become balancing her volunteer duties, she said she still has time for family. Her sons, Skipp, a K-State graduate, and Andy, who is pursuing his master's degree, both live in Manhattan.

She shares 100 Wilson Court with her husband, President Jon Wefald, and their poodle, Popcorn.

Ruth Ann Wefald said she also considers the students to be a segment of her family.

"I am very proud of them," she said.

Ruth Ann Wefald said if K-State students come to her with concerns, she will try to help them out or at least direct them to someone who can.

However, she said, some students come to her with problems that are beyond her jurisdiction.

"Changing grades is not part of that," she said. "We have had people come to the door, that isn't part of our role."

Whether it is official fundraising or just helping students solve their dilemmas, the unofficial first lady of K-State is content to remain just that — unofficial.

"I'm not too hung up on titles. I guess I don't care what people call me," she said. "I just hope they call me something nice."

Students study French agriculture during exchange

DAVE KATZER
staff reporter

Two K-State students spent their summer in France and learned more than that French fries aren't really French and not everyone in France is rude. They studied French agriculture and learned about foreign culture.

Crista Andres, veterinary medicine student, and Meghan Mueseler, junior in agricultural economics, both took part in the Ecole Supérieure d' Agriculture de Purpan Study Abroad program.

Both the students spent the month of June in the classroom on the Purpan campus in Toulouse in southern France. They each spent an additional month on a host farm in the countryside.

Andres said Purpan is an agriculture university, similar to K-State.

"We took French classes, listened to lectures and took field trips on the weekends. There was more to the whole experience than if you were just a tourist," Andres said.

The classroom portion of the tour covered French institutions, animal production, agriculture business and plant science, Mueseler said.

The students received six hours of credit in the College of Agriculture for the study tour.

"You have to pay for it yourself. The program cost is about $2,500, and the airfare is approximately $650. But I definitely think I got my money's worth," Andres said.

K-Staters weren't the only Americans to participate in the study program. Students from the University of Illinois and Purdue University also went. The program is also designed to allow French students the opportunity to study and live in the United States.

Andres spent a month with a host family on a Limousin cattle ranch.

"As a whole, getting to know the family and knowing that when I left I would still have a connection with them was the best part," Andres said.

The farm that was host to Mueseler is similar to a bed and breakfast that also raises cattle and hogs.

"I learned to respect other cultures. We have to realize that they have a different culture, and just because we're American doesn't make ours the right one. But being overseas does make you appreciate being an American," Mueseler said.

Greek organizations bring back national recognition

JEREMY KELLEY
staff reporter

This summer many fraternities and sororities at K-State won awards.

Alpha Tau Omega received honors ranging from one of the best 10 chapters in the nation to best communications.

"We received the True Merit Award, which signifies the elite ATO chapters in the nation," Toby Crouse, vice president of ATO, said. "It encompasses all aspects of an excellent ATO house. It's the best of the best."

Todd Larkin, spring 1996 graduate, also won the Top Undergraduate Award from all chapters.

Alpha Gamma Rho won the Maynard Coe Award for top chapter in the nation, as well as the AGR spirit award.

"The Maynard Coe is for overall chapter efficiency for the 1994-96 school years," said Scott Foote, AGR treasurer.

Theta Xi won the Memorial Trophy for the best chapter in the nation the last two semesters.

"It was given to the top chapter on any campus with 20 or more fraternities, and we won it all," Jeff Gill, president of Theta Xi, said.

Theta Xi also has had the highest grade point average of any fraternity at K-State for the last eleven semesters.

Tau Kappa Epsilon was also named one of the best chapters in the nation.

"We work hard for that recognition," Justin Mitchell, TKE president, said. "It symbolizes excellence in chapter administration and scholarship."

"We have won top TKE chapter 11 out of the last 13 years," Mitchell said.

Many sororities got accolades for activities during the past school year.

Gamma Phi Beta won honors for activities and leadership.

"The McCormick Medallion Award encompasses within itself campus involvement, community service and philanthropy," said Michelle Aziere, president of Gamma Phi.

Gamma Phi also won an award for its rush program. "We had improvement in all areas of rush," Aziere said.

Alpha Delta Pi took home honors with the Diamond Four-Point Award for overall chapter performance.

"It was basically based on four things: rush program, scholarship, financial management and house leadership, such as activities and philanthropy," said Gail Eddy, junior in international business.

Chi Omega brought home the Award of Excellence, which is based on six criteria.

"It's given for the house who boasts high standards of excellence," said Carey Levell, president of Chi O.

Opportunity Fair gives students internship ideas

ALIESA GOOD
staff reporter

The K-State Student Union Grand Ballroom was filled with groups offering opportunities for volunteer service, internships and cooperative education experiences Wednesday.

The event, "Opportunity Fair: Professional Development Through Service," highlighted 44 service groups, agencies and organizations from northeast Kansas.

The focus of the event was on community service and increasing awareness of opportunities in the greater Manhattan area.

"It is important for all students to understand the role of professional development within their community," said Olivia Collins, temporary assistant professor in the School of Family Studies and Human Services.

"I decided to come because I want to get more involved in the community," said Kari Henningsen, sophomore in social work.

Students were given the opportunity to network with professionals and improve their interpersonal skills.

Shanna Brunkow, senior in lifespan human development and community services, participated in the event.

"I am looking for an internship and people to contact. I had no idea there were so many volunteer programs in Riley County," she said.

The United Way of Riley County, a volunteer organization that raises and allocates funds for human service agencies, participated in the event.

"The Opportunity Fair is a great opportunity for us to teach students about the United Way. I am very impressed with the students. They are articulate and intelligent," said Ailleen Cray, executive director of United Way.

Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan Inc. was another organization participating in the event. The organization has 110 volunteers, 78 percent of them K-State students.

"It is a great opportunity for students and us. We are getting many students who want to volunteer," said Tami Carolan, executive director of Big Brothers and Big Sisters.

RU-486 raises concerns

▶ Local doctors are divided on whether they will prescribe the abortion drug, which might be available next year.

NICOLE KIRBY

Thanks to the FDA's decision to conditionally approve the abortion drug RU-486, abortions could be more readily available to Manhattan residents.

"For those patients who demand it, someone will prescribe it, but I just don't know who that will be," Dr. Rex Fischer, an obstetrical gynecologist, said.

Fischer said he does not believe in abortion, so he won't prescribe it.

"There are five or six obstetricians in this town, and they haven't done abortions here in forever," he said.

Fischer also said he was not convinced of the drug's safety.

"Anything that can kill tissue, what's it going to do to all the living tissue in the woman?" Fischer said. "I don't understand how it can attack embryonic tissue and nothing else."

There are also concerns that women will use RU-486 as an alternative to contraception.

Lea Mayberry, president of the local chapter of National Organization for Women (NOW) and graduate student in education, said she hopes the drug won't be used in that way.

"People argue that we're so pro-abortion, but we're also pro-contraception and pro-sex ed, so people can make appropriate choices," Mayberry said.

She said the drug will make life easier for women in rural areas who want abortions, because they can go to a local doctor.

Docking, Glickman coming to K-State for tour, lunch

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jill Docking, candidate for U.S. Senate, and Dan Glickman, secretary of agriculture, are coming to campus today.

The two will tour Throckmorton Hall at 11 a.m. and will meet with students and faculty at 11:30 a.m. in Throckmorton 2002.

Afterward, they will walk to the Ramada Inn's restaurant for a public luncheon.

"They had asked basically to come to campus," said Sue Peterson, assistant to the president for governmental relations. "It's our chance to tell them about the research we do here, especially at the agriculture department."

Boxer wants to fight again despite HIV

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TULSA, Okla. — HIV-infected heavyweight Tommy Morrison vowed Thursday to return to the ring for one last fight, seven months after announcing he would never box again.

Morrison has no date, no site and no opponent but said he would fight to raise money to help children infected with the AIDS virus.

"I know there's a lot of people out there who probably are not going to like what I'm doing," Morrison said. "But they will have to listen to what I have to say."

Inside

Find out what the Collegian Editorial Board thinks of HIV-positive heavyweight Tommy Morrison's wish to return to the boxing ring to raise money for AIDS awareness.

● Page 4

His announcement came in the same Tulsa hotel where in February he confirmed he had tested positive for the AIDS virus and would retire with a 45-3-1 record.

At the time, the 27-year-old Oklahoman said he likely contracted the virus through promiscuous sex but also raised the possibility of having been infected during a bloody bout.

Morrison said he now firmly believes HIV cannot be transmitted during a fight.

"There has never been one documented case in boxing history that this has ever happened," he said. "Based upon this fact, I have decided to enter the ring for one last fight."

Morrison's lawyer, Stuart Campbell, said a number of fighters had expressed interest in fighting Morrison. He pointed to comments by a former opponent, Ross Puritty, as an example.

"I think HIV is not as easy to catch as everyone says it is," Puritty told the Tulsa World. "I don't plan to have sex with the guy. If the money is right, I'll fight anybody."

Campbell said some of the fighters expressing interest were either ranked currently or had been ranked. He would not identify them. Campbell also advised Morrison not to answer questions from the media.

At least one boxer expressed concerns about fighting an HIV-infected opponent.

"No, I wouldn't fight him for medical reasons," said recently retired heavyweight champion Larry Holmes. "If he didn't have HIV, I'd come out of retirement and kick his behind in a second."

Morrison's longtime promoter, Tony Holden, also has misgivings about a comeback. Holden did not attend the news conference and has not committed to promote any fight, which likely will take place by next spring.

"I personally think it was premature," Holden said.

Holden said if he was sure HIV could not be spread in the ring or even had a lot of research pointing in that direction, he would promote the fight.

"I just need to talk to some doctors," he said.

Questions also remain about where Morrison would be allowed to fight.

The National Centers for Disease Control have received no reports of HIV transmission through sports. But Morrison's positive test prompted boxing officials nationwide to call for mandatory HIV testing.

Week of events culminates in demanding endurance race

BRENT STOVER
staff reporter

It's the Boston Marathon of horse racing. Some might call it a Super Bowl for horse and rider.

It's the sixth World Championship for Equestrian Endurance, and it will be in Manhattan's backyard Saturday. The 100-mile horse race covers much of the Flint Hills, beginning and ending at the Rock Springs 4-H Center, in southern Geary County, near Junction City.

"These are some of the greatest athletes — human or equine — in the world," Margie Burton, Organizing Committee member, said.

Eighty-six horses and riders from 16 countries are slated to start the race. The race is not only an individual competition, but it is a team competition as well.

The teams consist of six riders, but only four count in the final scoring. Because it is the host team, the United States will saddle 12 horses. In the last World Championship in 1994 in the Hague, Netherlands, France captured the team gold, while Wichita native Valerie Kanavy won the individual title.

While this World Championship event has only been in existence for 10 years, the idea of endurance for horses began in the late 1800s with the United States Cavalry and Pony Express covering several hundred miles a day on horseback.

Kansas was at the heart of this horse travel, which was one of the reasons it was chosen to be host to this year's World Championships.

"We felt that it should come back to its roots," Burton said. "We won out over several countries because of that."

During the past 18-24 months, Burton and the rest of the Organizing Committee have been busy preparing for the race. One of the keys to getting ready was getting permission from landowners to use their property for part of the race course. Another step to the process was a pre-ride over the 100-mile course last October.

Strategy could be the main key in a race like this.

$3,450 in lab equipment lifted from department

SCOTT PHILLIPS
staff reporter

An estimated $3,450 worth of lab equipment was reported stolen from the Department of Anatomy and Physiology within the College of Veterinary Medicine, Annette Boddy, K-State Police records clerk, said.

The theft report was filed Wednesday, but the burglary was reported as happening Aug. 22, Boddy said.

The anatomy and physiology department was not sure at first whether the equipment was actually stolen or if someone had just borrowed the equipment.

"We've dispersed memos throughout the department asking that if anyone had borrowed any of the first-floor laboratory equipment to please return it as soon as possible," said Bonnie Thompson, anatomy and physiology office specialist.

The alleged theft included oxford pipettes, an adrenal drill, two fiber optic level lights, a vaporizer, pipette tips and other miscellaneous equipment, Boddy said.

There are no suspects at this time, Boddy said.

▶ COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE

New curriculum gives more options

BETH HUSTED
staff reporter

Agriculture students might be wondering what to expect from the recent changes in the College of Agriculture's curriculum. The college has approved, revised, combined or completely dropped courses from the present curriculum.

Students might also be worried about how this will affect them and whether they will have to take these new courses.

"No, actually it is a college-wide rule. When a student starts his education and enters a curriculum that is already in effect, he has the right to stay in that program if a new program is installed," said Larry Erpelding, associate director of academic programs.

"And sometimes, if he likes the newer program better, he has the option to select that program," Erpelding added.

The college decided it was time to change the course and curriculum requirements to meet new demands from the industry. Agricultural industries have been stressing the need for more and better educated students.

"K-State is on the cutting edge for trying to meet industry needs," Erpelding said.

In response to these demands, the college is also proposing to develop a master's degree in agribusiness. Some of these new courses in the curriculum changes are designed for the master's in agribusiness path of study.

24 HOURS IN REVIEW

NATION WORLD

• HOSTAGES KILLED AFTER STAND OFF. A gunman upset about a workers' compensation claim entered a law office Thursday and shot two attorneys, one fatally, then killed himself in a four-hour hostage standoff. The gunman showed up around noon at the first-floor offices of Danielson, Clark, Pumpian and Ford, and took 14 people hostage. The firm specializes in defending insurance companies against claims by workers injured on the job.

• ATLANTIS DOCKS. Ecstatic to be going home after a record six months in orbit, a beaming Shannon Lucid today threw her arms around Atlantis astronauts who docked with the Russian space station Mir. The first to reach Lucid after the hatches opened was John Blaha, her replacement on the orbiting outpost. They embraced, then floated off into Mir, chatting practically nonstop.

• TRIAL OF JAPANESE CULT LEADER. Testifying against cult leader Shoko Asahara, a former heart surgeon said Thursday he believed he was helping to save the world when he helped gas Tokyo's subways. Dr. Ikuo Hayashi has pleaded guilty to murder charges in the March 1995 nerve-gas attack on the Tokyo subway that killed 12 people and sickened thousands. He is the first top disciple to testify against Asahara, whose Aum Shinri Kyo cult once claimed about 40,000 members worldwide. Asahara is accused of nearly 20 crimes, including the subway attack, the murders of an anti-cult lawyer and his family, and of seven other people in another nerve gas attack in central Japan two years ago.

• AMERICAN TROOPS ARRIVE IN GULF. Although rhetoric has softened and tension eased, the American military boosted its presence in the Persian Gulf Thursday with more ground troops and some 75 warplanes to patrol Iraqi skies. Soon, more than 30,000 U.S. military personnel and 200 American planes will be in the region, most aboard three dozen ships in the Gulf. Some 200 American soldiers landed Thursday at Kuwait International Airport.

• BUS ACCIDENT IN INDIA KILLS 17. A bus skidded off the road in a northern Indian state Thursday, killing 17 people and injuring 55 other passengers. Of the injured in the accident in northern Jammu-Kashmir state, eight were in critical condition. The accident occurred when the driver lost control and veered off the highway and into a gorge.

• THREE ARRESTED IN AIDS MEDICAL SCANDAL. The president of an important pharmaceutical company and two of its former executives were arrested Thursday on suspicion of knowingly selling blood products tainted with the AIDS virus. The arrests came one day after Dr. Takeshi Abe, 80, a former government official, became the first person formally charged in one of Japan's worst medical scandals in years. From 1983 to 1985, 2,000 Japanese, mostly hemophiliacs, contracted the AIDS virus from blood that was not heat-treated to kill it. More than 400 have since died.

• KSHSAA BOARD REJECTS PLAN. The Kansas State High School Activities Association's governing body rejected Thursday a proposal by baseball coaches to let them coach their own children and their school teammates during the summer months. Instead, the KSHSAA Board of Directors instructed Executive Director Gary Musselman to develop a dialogue with the association's regional administrators to see if there is consensus on whether the KSHAA should have any summer restrictions on coaches.

• OLYMPIC BASEBALL TO GO PRO. The International Baseball Association this weekend is expected to open baseball to professionals for the Sydney Olympics in 2000. The IBA is having a special congress Saturday to vote on a change in its amateur-only rule and bring baseball into line with basketball, tennis, ice hockey and other sports with pros in the Olympics.

Once in a Lifetime

Celebrate your engagement and wedding in the Collegian

Your engagement and wedding are special moments in your life. You want to share your news with family and friends.

The Kansas State Collegian will help you share that news with your K-State family. For only $12 for an engagement or $15 for a wedding, you can put your annoucement in the Collegian's "Once in a Lifetime" special section. For an additional $5, you can also add your picture to your announcement.

"Once in a Lifetime" will run the first Friday of each month beginning in September. It will run on the following Fridays: Sept. 6, Oct. 4, Nov. 1 and Dec. 6. It will resume in February and will run the following Fridays in the spring semester: Feb. 7, March 7, April 4 and May 2. During the summer, the special section will run on Thursday, June 5 and Thursday, July 3.

The deadline for getting your announcement in the paper will be the Friday preceeding the publication date. The announcements will appear similar to the example shown.

Debt causes cuts in funding

YVONNE PEARSON
staff reporter

There will be cuts in funding of scholarships, GTA salaries, childcare programs, the Academic Assistance Center and other programs in the fiscal year 1998 because of an overestimation of $15,000 in the Educational Opportunity Fund.

Money was overestimated in the EOF because of incorrect transfers. Instead of funds going to EOF, they went into the reserves for contingencies.

"We were going off of what the University Budget Office tells us," Aaron Otto, chair of EOF and student body vice president, said at the Senate meeting Thursday night.

This has been going on for several years. Incorrect transfers totaling $7,994.37 took place between 1993 and 1996.

A cut of $12,000 will have to be taken from funding for services to get rid of the EOF debt. The biggest recipients to be affected will be childcare, academic assistance, scholarships, GTAs and grants. This cutback is to ensure this will not happen again in the future.

"I would like to stress that this has nothing do with the embezzlement," Otto said of the money that was taken from the Student Governing Association's foundation account by a University employee.

Otto gave a presentation of the EOF budget deficit to the senators, who will discuss it at a later date.

Senate also discussed voting on a new parliamentarian for the 1996-97 Student Senate term to replace the one who quit.

Aubrey Abbott, Senate chair, and Jill Hayhurst, Senate vice-chair, authored a resolution to approve Patrick Carney, arts and sciences senator, as the replacement parliamentarian.

Others argued there wasn't sufficient advertisement for students to know they could apply for the position.

A motion was made and seconded to discuss having a general student election for the parliamentarian.

Abbott took a vote on the resolution, which passed. There was dissent, however, about the validity of the vote.

"I want this body and interns to understand we have as a majority, an absolute, unconditional faith in our parliamentarians," Chris Avila, graduate senator, said of his decision to vote for open discussion of the selection process.

KXBZ-FM 104.7 and TW Longhorn's kicked off the B-104 Birthday Bash Thursday night at the Wareham Opera House in Manhattan.

Ten-gallon hats, along with countless gallons of beer, swayed and danced across the dance floor as country-music star Rhett Akins took the stage, celebrating B-104.7's second anniversary on the air.

"Rhett Akins has recently topped the country-music charts with three No. 1 songs. He's a great performer," morning-show disc jockey Brady Goodman said.

Opening up for Akins was David Kersh, who recently hit the charts with his new release, "Goodnight, Sweetheart."

Plans for the celebration have been in the making since February. A great audience and sponsorship are what make such events possible, Goodman said.

"What sets us apart from all other stations in Manhattan is our audience," Goodman said. "Unlike a lot of other stations, we have an incredibly active audience. They all want to be a part of the action."

By the number of fans attending the celebration, this probably won't be the last, Goodman said.

"They needed a station like us here in Manhattan, and they are showing us that they're glad we're here," Goodman said. "As long as people keep showing up, we'll keep throwing parties like this."

Not only has fan participation been phenomenal, but business sponsorship has been above par also, disc jockey Hoss Michaels said.

"This has been a great two years here in Manhattan," Michaels said. "Performers like Rhett are hard to come by, moneywise. Great sponsorship made it possible."

With the hard-driving, beer-drinking country music of Rhett Akins, those who attended certainly had an opportunity to throw down and get a leg up. For those who didn't attend, well, y'all missed out.

Teacher evaluations, money discussed by Regents

SPEED

▶ The Board of Regents approved the project list for the Crumbling Classrooms bond issue which will provide K-State with money to make campus-wide improvements from buildings to parking stall designators.

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Teacher evaluations, or the renovation thereof, were part of a proposal offered to the Kansas Board of Regents at its monthly meeting Thursday at Fort Hays University. Chris Hansen, K-State student body president, spoke on behalf of the Students' Advisory Committee.

Hansen distributed an executive summary sheet and expanded on the contents in his report. First was the subject of modifying the present TEVAL system.

"It's our effort to publicize important information while maintaining faculty privacy," he said, "but still provide the students with information."

The basic proposal suggested evaluation forms be divided into two parts: one part available to students and faculty, and the second used by faculty only.

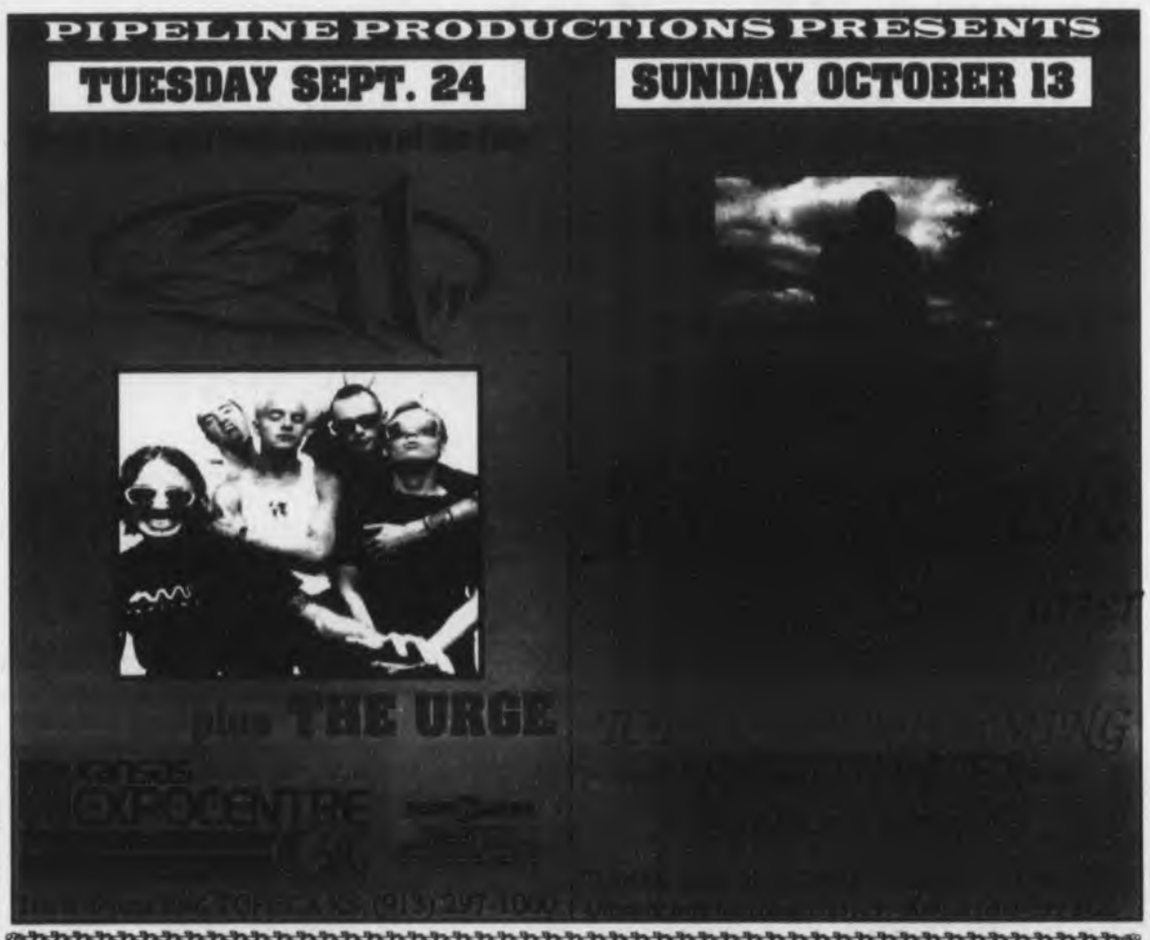
"I would characterize the faculty reaction as good so far. We want their feedback. We want them to take us seriously," Hansen said.

The student senates at all six institutions passed the initiative. It made it through all the senates without too much trouble, he said.

Money was still a big discussion topic before the meeting was adjourned. The board approved the project list for the system-wide Crumbling Classrooms bond issue.

"The real issue today is for you to approve the list of projects so we can use our power to prove our credibility," Warren Corman, Regents director of facilities, said.

Corman said the process involved the work of a multitude of staff at various levels. The law was signed by Gov. Bill Graves less than six months ago, making the October bond issuance remarkable, Corman said. K-State will reap about $32 million from the sale of the revenue bonds. The money means K-State can fulfill the state fire marshal's code requirements and meet the terms of the Americans with Disabilities Act.



On campus, several buildings need to be brought into compliance with the act. These include buildings ranging from the veterinary medicine buildings to Kedzie, Willard, Waters and Seaton halls.

The buck doesn't just stop there, either. Part of the money goes for campus-wide improvements. These include curb cuts, parking-stall designations and restroom modification.

Changes necessary to ensure fire safety include automatic smoke and fire alarms, electromagnetic door releases and modern sprinkler systems. Since many buildings on most campuses are older, these are primary targets for concern. Extensive revisions to these structures are expensive yet necessary.

Along with all the work provided for with the bond issue, plans not dependent upon the bond money are afoot for other changes at K-State.

K-State received approval to amend its fiscal year 1998 capital-improvement plan. One addition is the purchase and installation of a prefabricated metal storage/equipment shed at the Kansas Testing Laboratory for Civil Infrastructure and Highway Research. The $500 cost of the building will be paid for by research overhead funds.

It only takes one photo.

Be a part of K-State history.

The Royal Purple yearbook and Blaker Studio Royal will be taking portrait pictures according to the schedule below.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Morrison bout could do more harm than good

Tommy Morrison might well be defeating his own purpose.

He announced Thursday that he will step into the ring one more time to raise money for children with AIDS.

An admirable cause, right?

But by participating in one of the bloodiest sports he might, in fact, be spreading the disease.

WHY WE CARE

Tommy Morrison's decision to box again for charity has admirable intentions behind it, but he could harm more people than his opponent.

In February, Morrison announced that he had tested positive for HIV and retired from the sport of boxing.

As of this time he has no date, no site and no opponent, but if he does find an opponent, he said he feels confident HIV cannot be transmitted during a fight.

Hello?

Where has Morrison been during all of the AIDS lectures and educational efforts to prevent the spread of the virus?

Surely, he knows AIDS is transmitted through blood and bodily fluids. Surely, he knows there is a lot of bloodshed in the majority of boxing matches.

Some might argue that if the opponent knows that Morrison is infected, that is his own decision.

Yes, that is true. But in making that decision Morrison's opponent is deciding to potentially expose whomever he chooses to have future sexual relations with and those who have to clean up his wounds.

The opponent is not the only one at risk.

We commend the sentiment behind Morrison's announcement though.

Using his celebrity status to raise money to research and potentially find a cure for the disease is indeed admirable and should not go unnoticed.

But there are other ways to go about it, without putting people at risk.

Morrison could rally other boxers to have a charity bout. He could sponsor a boxing clinic or match. He could work the lecture circuit to educate people on prevention of AIDS.

However, if Morrison does choose to go through with the fight, there is only one way to minimize risk: Call the fight the second the first drop of blood is spilled.

Unless that happens, we fear that Morrison might further spread the disease that he is trying to stop.

Getting a good job doesn't always mean you will make good money

MY

Jeremy STEPHENS

On Monday, the All-University Career Fair came to town.

As hundreds of employers descended upon K-State to recruit for their respective companies, and hundreds of students flocked to the K-State Student Union in an attempt to be recruited, an idea struck me.

I was there too.

I talked with many of the employers.

I saw others talk with employers, and I saw some of the employers talk with the other employers.

It was almost one big, happy family.

But the one thing that always strikes me as odd is the rush to get a good job.

It seems, all too often, that good is defined as the salary that accompanies the work.

Except in rare cases, nothing could be farther from the truth.

I have been told that a good job will pay about $27,000 right out of college.

This might seem like a substantial amount of money to people who have made a living, so far, off of waiting tables and working at retail outlets.

College students generally fall in this category.

However, there is more to a job than money.

In the past, I believed getting a good salary in a plush building, in a downtown metropolis, would indicate that I was off to a good start.

Not true.

I believe that the real value of a job lies in whether you look forward to going to work when you get up in the morning.

This might sound overly simplistic, but it's true.

Even if you take a job that will pay over the average salary, if you dread going to work in the morning, it is not worth it.

The funny thing about this whole issue is that no one will ever say that they took a job just because of the money they make at it.

> "If through the course of hard work and effort, a person succeeds and is rewarded by making money, there absolutely nothing wrong with that."

On the other hand, there is nothing wrong with making money.

There's not even anything wrong with making lots of money.

Those that berate others for making too much money or those who attempt to reduce the amount of money others take home, often claim money doesn't matter.

Yet their actions indicate otherwise.

Just because others are making a certain amount of money does not mean they are evil.

It simply means they are making a certain amount of money. These concepts are often confused.

If, through the course of hard work and effort, a person succeeds and is rewarded by making money, there is absolutely nothing wrong with that.

However, those who are obsessed with money are the least likely to ever make much of it.

As for the people who try to take away from those who do succeed, they are confused.

These people claim they are serving some good through their efforts of giving other people's money away.

Again, nothing could be farther from the truth. If money didn't matter to these people, why should they be in such a desperate haste to redistribute it?

No one has tried to make an equitable distribution of leaves, but according to some of these people, leaves are more valuable.

The strange thing is that more good would be accomplished by letting people spend their own money.

The bottom line here is priorities.

Whether your top priority is making money or giving other people's money away, your world view is out of balance.

Money is a strange thing.

It only gives you peace when you have it.

Think about these things.

Life is short.

Enjoy the ride.

Aunt Flo doesn't come to visit alone; she brings PMS

Page GETZ

The chorus of gossip and Cheeto-chomping clashes with the buzz of caffinated newsroom flies. I can hear every door on campus creaking open and slamming shut, every chair shift and screech. Every voice echoes in a clamor reminiscent of junior high school boys competing for spit-wad fame.

Every flash of the cursor devours my concentration and makes the blank slate blanker. Suddenly a fly lands on my Diet Coke, and I'm ready to drop out of school and leave the country.

There are 150 symptoms associated with premenstrual syndrome, and I'm sure I have all of them.

According to my thesaurus, I'm on the verge of the curse, the plague, the monthlies, old faithful, a visit from Aunt Flo, the weeping womb, the grannies, the curse of Eve, the rag, the monthly bill, the wet season, the dog days and the red flag.

I'm under the weather, falling off the roof and most offensively, I'm too wet to plow.

Pliny the Elder believed contact with a menstruating woman turned wine sour, destroyed crops, dulled mirrors, steel and ivory, killed bees, rusted bronze and iron, and possessed dogs.

Much has been written historically (almost exclusively by men) about the perils of men subjected to menstruating women. From the Bible to medical books, most of these theories appear to be no more than a justification for misogyny and rationalization for women's oppression.

Some South African tribes believed that if a menstruating woman drank milk, that cow would die.

The Dieri of Central America believed if a woman ate fish or bathed in a river, the fish would all die, and the river would dry up.

In the Jewish Orthodox tradition, according to the Niddah laws in Leviticus in the Bible, menstruating women were not allowed to touch their husbands, to touch anything their husbands touched, to eat with their family or to sleep in the same bed because they were considered unclean. This segregation continued for seven days after menses was over. For those seven days, the woman had to wear white, sleep on white sheets and clean the inside of the vagina with a cloth twice a day to insure that it was clean.

> "According to my thesaurus, I'm on the verge of the curse, the plague, the monthlies, old faithful, a visit from Aunt Flo, the weeping womb, the grannies, the curse of Eve ..."

Also Orthodox Jewish women were expected to avoid looking attractive so as not to be a temptation to the husband, because she was so sexually powerful during this time.

During menses, Muslim women weren't permitted to pray. Hindu women weren't allowed to even think of gods. In Bali, women couldn't enter a temple in their own home.

Among Monotheistic Zorastrians, women had to live in isolated huts and were fed very little which had to be served to them from three feet away and only on metal, so as not to contaminate the server.

Dry dust was laid on the ground so that she wasn't directly touching the elements, and she had to wear polluted clothes or those worn by the dead or a woman who had given birth to a stillborn.

They were not allowed to even look outside of the hut because their eyes were said to defile anything they gazed upon.

Ethnocentric and androcentric bias seemed the only recipe for determining the causes of menstruation.

Scholars claimed that people with darker complexions, as well as people closer to the equator, menstruated and matured younger.

Incidentally, they also believed the younger a woman began menstruating, the more impure she was.

Second-century Galen believed that menstruation was the discharge of excess fluids unused because women, being confined to the home, didn't participate in any real labor.

Avicenna, an 11th century Arab physician, and Regnier de Graaf, 17th century, claimed the womb was weak and defective and therefore leaked.

In 1931, Dr. R.T. Frank prescribed bloodletting — following the old tradition of Victorian treatment of leeches, purgatives and forced medicines.

But nowadays, we are so much more advanced, we treat extreme symptoms of menstruation with progesterone, which can cause breast tumors, cervical cancer and may be addictive.

To date, scientifically we know as much as Pliny did about the cause of PMS.

Many of these accounts of multicultural approaches to menstruation have been criticized as being manipulated because of the European puritan bias in studying and interpreting other cultures.

It also stands to reason that these male scholars, as beneficiaries of patriarchy, had no incentive to publicize the sacred and empowered status of women in other cultures. Or, God forbid, civilized women might not appreciate the comforts of industrial patriarchal oppression. In Audre Lorde's words, "The master's tools will never dismantle the master's house."

Obviously it made more sense to depict all other cultures as being barbaric savages who dragged their women by the hair and locked them away during menstruation, which in some cases was true. But this was not the universally exclusive perspective on menstruation.

In Clarissa Pinkola Este's "Women Who Run with Wolves," she studies tribes from North, Central and South America and some Slavic tribes. Historically women were considered to have a heightened awareness during menstruation. This energy was so powerful, it was said to disrupt the powers of the Shaman.

But women were not excluded. They practiced a meditative solitude because the membrane between the conscious and unconscious mind thins to invite conversation between the self and the wild soul.

In modern day, these tribes equate the negative symptoms of menses with the neglecting of this sacred introspection.

In England, in the 1980s, two women were released on probation for homicide charges, based on the defense that they were suffering from the almighty, uncontrollable powers of PMS.

One of these women, 29-year-old Sandie Smith, already had an extensive criminal record including another manslaughter charge.

What an opportunity for patriarchy! Suddenly women are reduced to helpless creatures at the mercy of our hormones again! Enough feminism and meditation and Midol! Bring out the leeches!

Professors making $3 million?

Editor,

Forgive me for chuckling, but I believe the "You Speak" question on page one of Thursday's Collegian is a bit odd. Imagine the tuition. What I am really interested in is where on earth do professors receive executive salaries of $3 million? I would like to apply! Perhaps President Wefald's efforts to boost faculty salaries are working in ways we do not understand. But the capping of salaries/pensions of executives who head up companies in which the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association-College Retirement Equities Fund hasshares ... now that is a different matter.

Alumnus gives Senate and livestock judging team kudos

Editor,

As a proud K-State alumnus from the College of Agriculture who bleeds purple, I was elated to read in Monday's Topeka Capital-Journal that the K-State Student Senate was considering a bill that called for a sign on Interstate 70, recognizing the two consecutive national champion livestock judging teams. I guess the third time was a charm. As a fireball Aggie myself, I had written bills in the Senate during the past two years that did just this. While I was told by various folks on campus that a sign on the interstate was not to the liking of some other folks on campus, we persisted but unfortunately hit a brick wall each year. I am very pleased that this year's student senators were successful in their efforts on behalf of the livestock judging team.

These teams are a source of great pride for K-Staters across Kansas. They also act as a great recruiting tool for the College of Agriculture and the University. Students competing on the team sacrifice a great deal of time and resources to represent K-State with honor and excellence. I am glad the University has finally seen fit to recognize them as they should be. When any academic competition team achieves a national championship, let alone two in a row, this University should be proud to recognize that high honor and the hard work of both the students and the faculty who help them to attain that goal.

After three years trying to get this recognition for two outstanding teams of student competitors, I eagerly look forward to driving past those signs and thinking back to my days at K-State with pride and unwavering support for the students and the faculty who helped them.

Thank you for this opportunity to express my thoughts.

Reader feels outraged at theft, intrusion on property

Editor,

During the past few days there has been something that's been eating away at me. I had some personal property stolen from my front porch. Yes, I am a student. I live in a regular little house just 1-1/2 blocks from campus. The stolen item was a plant. To most people I'm sure this will seem like no big deal, but to me it is.

How dare someone walk up to my front porch and steal my plant? Do people have such disrespect for other people's property they stoop so low to steal a plant? Yes, it was a beautiful plant, and maybe I shouldn't have hung it outside, but I cannot be to blame.

My only hope is that whoever stole it is enjoying it. I hope the culprit wasn't some stupid kid who took it and destroyed it. Sure, this sounds a little demented, going on about some plant like it was a pet that was stolen or something. But it just burns me to think someone stole it for the fun of it and threw it away.

I come from a small town in central Kansas where people don't expect their hanging plants to be stolen, let alone other property they may have on the outside of their house. Why can't this apply to larger towns as well? I've always thought of Manhattan as a friendly, college town with little crime of any sort. Maybe I should start watching my back a little closer. You don't know who's out there or what terrible things they're thinking about.

Wildcat fans are not savages

Editor,

Upon reading Shana Newell's column in Wednesday's edition of the Collegian, we were astounded with the lack of respect and credit given to the outstanding students of K-State. Ms. Newell seems to be under the impression that all K-State football fans are savage, rude, brutal and primitive. We have attended every home football game at K-State for the previous four years and resent her misguided accusations. Although we do support the Cats in a vocal manner, it is with cheers of encouragement and praise. With ICAT having a record-breaking year and overall season-ticket sales the highest they have been in K-State history, it leaves a bitter taste in the mouths of many K-Staters to hear Ms. Newell say, "K-State football fans — you suck!" We would like to remind Ms. Newell that a handful of egregious outbursts does not in any way reduce all K-State football fans to savages.

And as far as quarterback Brian Kavanagh is concerned, we are sure he is man enough to handle some constructive criticism. One thing he doesn't need is for you to print in the paper, read by the entire student body, that he is overrated and cocky. We are of the opinion that Kavanagh would rather suffer the verbal ridicule of a few drunken fans than be compared to a certain pudgy, unemployed, former K-State quarterback by the least accurate sports writer on the Collegian staff, boasting a dead-last 61 percent college football prediction rate. If there is any Division 1 football player who cannot cope with a few heckling fans, then they should go get misty-eyed in Norman, Okla., with Eric Moore.

FDA redefines safety

Editor,

After reading the Associated Press article about RU-486, I soon realized that this pill results in the death of a baby and apparently has no short-term effects on the mother. What dictionary did the Food and Drug Administration use to get its meaning of safe? I believe the Associated Press has made an error. It should read "FDA deems RU-486 50-percent safe," or "FDA deems RU-486 an effective poison." Putting this pill on the market will be just one more of the many mistakes made by the Clinton administration.

Reader says campus safety is more important that football

Editor,

I am writing this letter in response to Wednesday's front page article about David Damon's return to K-State. What can I say other than I am completely appalled and disgusted by judge George Scott's obvious lack of care for the law? Does he not care that a student of K-State was sexually assaulted by an obvious felon? The felon in question is Mr. David Damon of the K-State football team. I don't know if Scott knows this or not, but Damon has a criminal record on seven different charges in the past several years. Most of these consist of drug charges as well as sexual assault charges. Damon has repeatedly proved himself to be a threat to the community and should be jailed. Unfortunately, there is nothing we can do about Damon's presence on campus other than hope Coach Bill Snyder does not allow him back on the football team. In a perfect world, we would not even have to worry about people like Damon, but we do not live in a perfect world. We live in a world that judges you on how good your college football team is.

And as a result of this, Snyder will more than likely allow Damon back onto the team, because all Snyder cares about is his football program. It doesn't seem to matter to him that a former player of his brutally took advantage of an innocent bystander. Snyder would rather believe the female to be wrong and that his player was innocent because he is a football player. I have only one question to ask you Coach Snyder — what if it would have been your daughter, wife or sister who Damon assaulted? If you are like most people, you would like to see Damon get punished for what he had done.

Unfortunately, Damon was never punished. He was simply slapped on the wrist and told that everything would be OK because he is a football player. Well, if this practice is continued, how can we stop it if it happens again? Will we turn into another Nebraska who has a whole football team consisting of criminals? I don't know about anyone else, but that is not the image that I want portrayed for this great institution. I just want it to be made known that there are some people out there who want to see justice done and have Damon kicked out of our school for good. This is so, because we value the image of our institution and the importance of campus safety over the national ranking of our football team. In the end, no one will care about how good our football team was. What people will care about is that we were better than to have a known criminal on our team simply to further our football program.

Snyder, Wefald should not let Damon on team, in school

Editor,

Appalled. That is the only word that came to mind when I read the article about David Damon in Wednesday's Collegian. I thought this whole situation was resolved when the University made the decision to kick him out of school.

I got a big lump in my throat when I read the article. Coach Bill Snyder, what is going on in your mind? You have built a great program here at K-State. How can you even think about letting this guy play ball? Let me refresh your memory. It's November 1994, and one of your precious ball players assaults a woman on a residence-hall elevator. Is that OK with you?

What would you do if that was your wife or daughter? Would you pass it off as if everything was OK? Hell no! You'd have his head on a platter along with something else!

What makes the victim in this whole ordeal any different? Don't victims have rights? When Damon assaulted that young woman, he not only disgraced himself, but he disgraced this University and his team.

Snyder, you have got guts to even consider giving this guy another shot at football, let alone even considering giving him a scholarship. I am glad you feel he's done some positive things in terms of maintaining his education. Maybe that is a way for you to justify his actions. I would like to plead that this University, when given its day in court, get this guy out of our school. President Wefald, I read a sexual assault policy that you signed, and it sounded like zero tolerance. You need to stand up to the decision that you made and ensure that this doesn't happen anymore.

As president, don't you have any influence on the way things are done, or are you simply going to sit there and let all of this transpire? I certainly hope not! By the way, by any chance is judge George Scott a donating member of the K-State Alumni?

Gordon not expected to play

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

When K-State lines up against the Rice Owls at Rice Stadium in Houston Saturday, don't expect to see cornerback Joe Gordon anywhere but on the sidelines.

"We will not play Joe this weekend," Coach Bill Snyder said.

A two-time first-team all-Big 8 selection, Gordon suffered a broken left leg during an informal passing drill just before fall practice began in August. At the time of his injury, it was predicted he would not return until Nebraska comes to Manhattan Oct. 5.

That prediction appears to be true, and Gordon does not seem too happy with the outcome.

"It would depend on what the doctors said, but if I had it my way, I'd be playing," he said.

What the doctors say, Snyder said, is Gordon is not at 100 percent.

"If we needed him, I would consider playing him," Snyder said. "But that certainly isn't the case, and I wouldn't want to put Joe in any danger of injuring himself more."

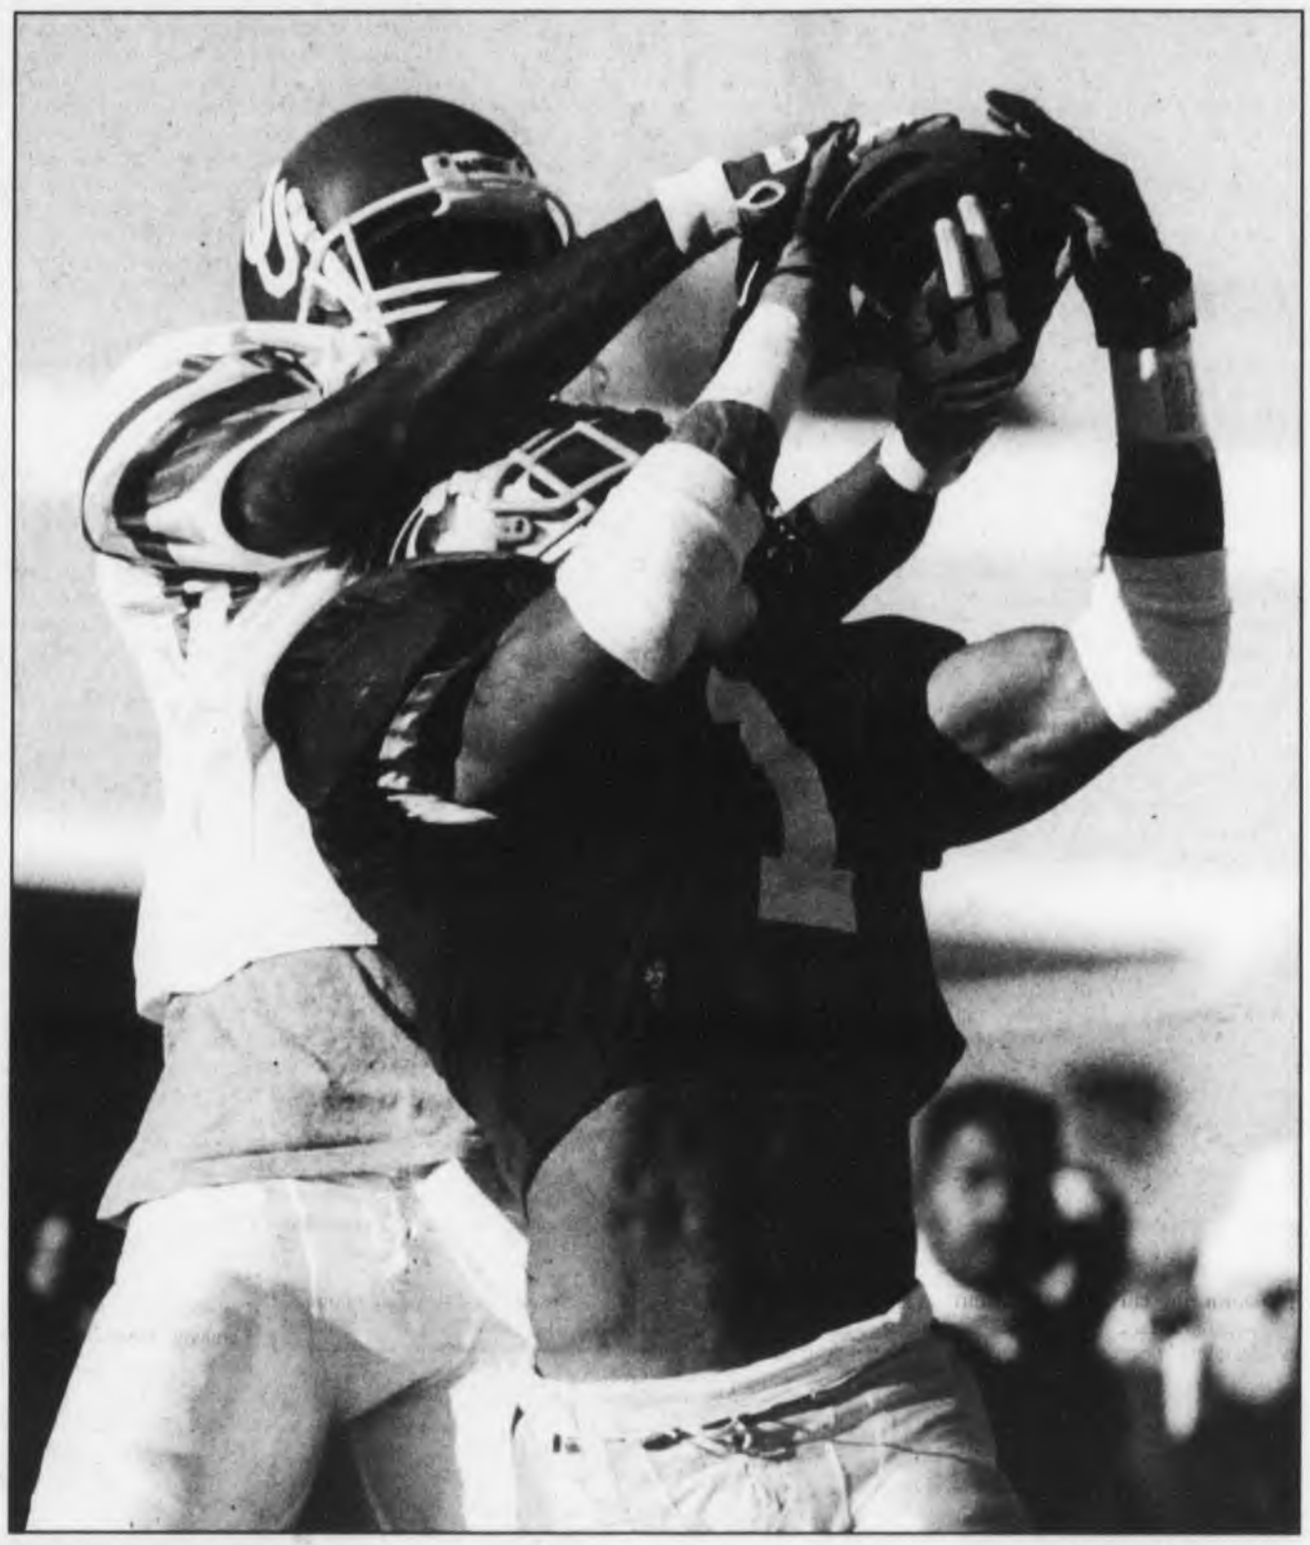
Replacing Gordon in the secondary has been freshman Lamar Chapman. Junior Chris Canty has taken over Gordon's role of covering the wide side of the field while Chapman has replaced Canty on the short side.

Canty was a consensus first-team all-American last season and brings the much-needed leadership to the field with Gordon on the sidelines.

When he returns against Nebraska, however, Gordon said he expects to take over the wide-side duties.

"Unless the coaches feel that Chris should be out there, I will cover the wide field," Gordon said. "But they haven't indicated anything to me, so I'm planning on covering it."

Even though Canty is the sole veteran leader on the field, Gordon has not failed to live up to his responsibilities as a team leader on the sideline. During practices he talks with both Chapman and Canty's backup, Demetric Denmark, giving each advice on how to cope with various situations that arise during the course of a game.



"Both have tremendous ability," Gordon said. "I've just been working at calming them down. But I think they're both doing a terrific job. There's been no drop-down in the secondary."

In three games played, Chapman and Denmark have combined to break up 17 passes. Chapman, who has started all three games, has 17 tackles to his credit, seven unassisted. Denmark has brought down the opponent seven times, six times without an assist.

Canty has contributed an interception and has broken up three passes while tackling 13 times, 11 of the tackles unassisted.

What does the consistent productivity in the secondary mean for the Wildcats when Gordon does return?

"It'll give us a sense of security," he said. "We know that if they line up six wide receivers off the bench, we know we have guys out there who can handle it, who can step up."

Consoling Bono, Irvin, other celebs is tough job for any columnist

(Editor's note: Shane was found sniffing some Bond White Liquid Paper, so these letters might be fictitious.)

We are about a month into the school year, and already the letters have started to pile up. Since some of these individuals took the time to write me, I feel they deserve a response.

Dear Shane,
Something strange is going on here in Kansas City. Since I've returned to Kansas City, this Kansas City Star columnist has been on my back. It's either been my taste in food here or my performance on the field. But after my performance against the Seahawks, he has done nothing but praise me. He even said I was one of the best in the league in crunch time. What is going on here? Does he have an ulterior motive?

MY

Shane MCCORMICK

Steve Bono quarterback, Kansas City Chiefs

Dear Steve,
Don't worry. I don't think there is a big conspiracy here. As soon as you have an average performance in a loss, you will be crowned as one of the worst in the league by this columnist. He kind of likes to jump from side to side. If it makes you feel any better, I've always thought you're just an average quarterback, and I still do.

Dear Shane,
I'm getting tired of scrubbing bathroom floors in hospitals! Mowing grass and picking up trash is not for me. You wouldn't believe the dust and dirt I've gotten on my fur coat! I'm tired of watching my 'Boys struggle through games and losing. What can be done to remedy this problem?

Michael Irvin, a.k.a. the Cowboy of the Night wide receiver, Dallas Cowboys
Dallas Community Hospital

Dear Michael,
Well, I think you need to have a couple of words with Mr. Switzer. Tell Barry to pull those pacifiers out and get on these players. I mean, I've seen better tackling out of peewee football than I did against the Colts. The Cowboys blew an 18-point lead against the Colts. The largest lead a Jimmy Johnson team ever blew was an 11-point lead in 1991. Not only does Barry not discipline this team, but he also doesn't keep them focused. Anyway, good luck on finishing your 2 million community hours. I'll be there in Irving to see your debut against the Cardinals.

Dear Shane,
We can't believe the Jets-Giants game was scheduled this year! I mean we don't even want to show this game regionally! No one is going to watch this game, it is between the two most pathetic teams in the NFL. We just had to vent this frustration out to somebody.

Fox studios

Dear NBC,
I know you want to get out of this game worse than Bill Snyder wanted to get out of the Indiana State game, but this is a huge game! I don't think you realize how big a game this game is. This game is being dubbed the Peyton Bowl. Whoever loses this game has the lead in the Peyton Manning Sweepstakes. It is a very pivotal game for both teams!

Dear Shane,
Did you catch my first touchdown a couple of weeks ago against the Colts? I let everyone see my endzone celebration. Did you like it?

Keyshawn Johnson wide receiver, New York Jets

Dear Keyshawn,
I know you don't have much to celebrate in New York. But come on, show a little class. I mean you looked like a darn chicken with his head cut off! And Keyshawn, get rid of that No. 18. Get a number in the 80s. This isn't college anymore.

Dear Shane,
I need someone to give me a real challenge in the ring. I mean, I didn't even break a sweat in my fight against Bruce Seldon. I accidentally breathed too hard and knocked him down two times. Do you have any suggestions?

Mike Tyson heavyweight champion

Dear Mike,
First of all, you need to find some better actors in the ring to fight. Seldon's performance was the worst display of a dive I have ever seen! Mike, if you want to fight a real opponent, I've got one for you. I call him the German Giant. His name is Axel Schultz. He's big and powerful, and he has a rock-hard chin. You might remember he was the fighter who got cheated out of a victory against George Foreman. But the best thing about Schultz is no matter how much money is offered, he won't take a dive.

Netters place winning streak on line on road

sports writer

The K-State volleyball team will try to keep its five-match winning streak alive against Iowa at 5:00 p.m. today and Colorado State at 5:00 p.m. Saturday in the Nebraska Invitational.

However, the Wildcats, at 10-1, are off to their best start since 1977. But they won't have it easy this weekend.

Iowa comes into the tournament at 5-4, but it might be on a roll after wins against Tennessee, Miami and Kansas last weekend in the Hawkeye Classic.

> "You don't see basketball teams playing two games a day. One match a day gives you time to recover ..."
> • JIM MOORE
> K-STATE VOLLEYBALL COACH

Colorado State, the No. 21 team in the nation, brings an 8-1 record into the invitational.

The Rams will be looking to keep a six-game winning streak alive.

The weekend's matches are the last before K-State opens Big 12 play next weekend against Colorado and Nebraska.

Coach Jim Moore said the Nebraska Invitational should prepare the Cats for conference play.

"This weekend we have two tough matches, which is similar to a conference weekend," Moore said. "They're matches we need to win."

Coming off last weekend's 4-0 boost in the K-State Invitational, Moore said part of his team's success could be due to its blocking.

"We've been doing an OK job of blocking," Moore said. "We need to do even better. The key to blocking is keeping your eyes open."

Another key for K-State this weekend is going to be its serves. As a team, the Cats have 97 aces, but 127 errors.

"I wouldn't mind the missed serves if we were serving tougher," Moore said.

"We're not serving tough enough. If we had 200 misses and 300 aces, I could care less about our serving."

After playing two matches each day of the two-day K-State Invitational, playing one match a day at Nebraska's invitational is more to Moore's liking.

"All the good teams only play one match a day," Moore said.

"You don't see basketball teams playing two games a day. One match a day gives you time to recover both physically and mentally."

Iowa meet allows 2 Wildcats 1st opportunity to play

■ The Northern Iowa Classic will be the first collegiate appearance by two Cats

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

The K-State women's golf team will hit the links Sunday for the second time this season. The Wildcats will travel to Cedar Falls, Iowa, to participate in the Northern Iowa Classic.

The squad finished in 11th place in the first meet of the season at the Chip N' Invitational. In that meet, the team lost the services of junior Desiree Simmons. Simmons will not be participating in this weekend's action.

> "I just try to emphasize that this is still just a game of golf. I just try to tell them to concentrate on what they have to do"
> • KRISTI KNIGHT
> K-STATE WOMEN'S GOLF COACH

"She's got some ligament damage in her elbow," Coach Kristi Knight said. "She has sat out this whole week."

With the absence of Simmons, the team will have sophomore Jennifer Omohundro and junior Danielle Hernandez making their first appearance of the year.

As a freshman last season, Omohundro played in three of K-State's meets. Hernandez will be making her collegiate debut.

"I just try to emphasize that this is still just a game of golf," Knight said. "I just try to tell them to concentrate on what they have to do, not that this is their first meet."

The course will not be too unfamiliar to one Cat this weekend. Junior Ann Slater is from Cherokee, Iowa, and has played the course before.

"We will lean on Ann during the qualifying rounds to find out how the course plays," Knight said.

Despite her familiarity with the course, Slater said she knows what she has to work on.

"I've got to work on my decision-making skills," Slater said. "I need to learn to know when to play it safe or be aggressive."

Knight said course management is something the whole team struggled with in its first meet.

"For the most part, everyone struggled with their decision making," Knight said.

"We made a lot of other scores, like triple bogeys, on a lot of holes."

With seven teams in the tournament, Knight said she is confident in the team's ability.

"I'll be looking for someone on our team to be competing for the individual title," she said. "I also expect us to definitely be competing for a team title."

Movie lacks plot, depth

ASSOCIATED PRESS

With his bombastic delivery and penchant for bestowing nicknames, Chris Berman, the new voice of "Monday Night Football's" halftime highlights, would do best at saying it out loud:

"Director Walter 'He's Going Down Hill' fails to strike pay dirt with his latest attempt, 'Last Man Standing,' despite the best efforts of star Bruce Willis. On the heels of his last movie, 'Wild Bill,' Hill COULD ... GO ... ALL ... THE ... WAY ... backbackbackbackback ... to the blackboard."

It is time for a new game plan, because the last two haven't worked.

Hill calls his newest film a rather free adaptation of Akira Kurosawa's 1961 samurai epic, "Yojimbo." Let's just say it was extremely free. The director, who also wrote the screenplay, changes the setting from 1860s Japan to a fictional west-Texas border town during prohibition. This time, the competing gangs are two organized-crime mobs — one Italian, the other Irish — battling for control of the booze trucked from Mexico.

Into this virtual ghost town called Jericho, which is down to a double-digit population, enters a man, Willis, who offers little about himself and says his name is John Smith. Before he can even park, he's confronted by members of one of the gangs who smash his car's windshield, headlight and slit a tire. Guess he's staying a while, even though the town mechanic is one of the few people left.

After the corrupt sheriff tells him he's on his own, Smith goes to the gang's headquarters — and not to discuss auto-body work. Guns blaze, and Smith kills the mob's top gunman and has everyone else ducking for cover.

Soon, he's caught in the middle of the gang war. So he plays both sides against the middle and keeps changing sides, with his services going to the highest bidder.

But while our anti-hero claims to lack a conscience, he apparently has a heart. Or maybe it's an Achilles heel, for he goes soft on a woman who's being held against her will as mistress of one gang boss, eschewing his mercenary ways to liberate her.

To his credit, Willis departs from his usual glib characterizations, such as John McClane in the "Die Hard" movies or David Addison in TV's "Moonlighting."

But other performances amount to repetitive annoyances.

Bruce Dern, as the sheriff, seemingly with the soul of a slithering salamander, has offered this spin on a role once too often. Christopher Walken (a little Talking Heads music, please) plays another variation of a psycho killer.

And as a bar owner, William Sanderson — remembered best on the second "Newhart" sitcom as one of three brothers who seemed as though he sprang from an Appalachian spring — looks grungy and sounds twangy and any moment you expect him to introduce, "my brother Darryl and my other brother Darryl."

'60's music strong and still going in the '90's

MATT BASLER
staff reporter

Many people probably did not know Jimi Hendrix was in the U.S. Army before becoming a 1960s rock legend.

This is one of the many interesting facts presented during "'60s Rock ... When the music mattered," by Barry Drake.

The presentation, sponsored by the Union Program Council Special Events Committee, was in Forum Hall.

It packed the whole decade of the '60s into almost two hours.

The speaker, Barry Drake, has been called a walking encyclopedia of music history.

Every since he bought his first rock 'n' roll album in 1954, he has been hooked.

Drake grew up in New York City and has heard every band from Buddy Holly and the Crickets at the Brooklyn Paramount to Jimi Hendrix and Janis Joplin at the 1967 Monterey Pop Festival.

Drake started off the night by explaining why the music of the '60s was needed so bad.

"The '60s were a tough decade, and many people relied on the music to get them through," Drake said.

Drake cited issues such as the Vietnam War, the civil-rights movement and the assassinations of President John F. Kennedy, Bobby Kennedy, Malcolm X and Martin Luther King Jr. as important themes behind much of the music that was written.

When people got tired of dance music, they turned to folk music, Drake said.

Drake said this is when Bob Dylan became popular.

People enjoyed Dylan because, for the first time, someone brought lyrics to the music.

All of this came to a halt in 1964 when music felt another change.

This was the year of the Beatles and the beginning of the British Invasion.

Drake said the Beatles became popular in England before they came to America.

He explained how Capitol Records didn't think the Beatles would make it.

However, after the Beatles played on "The Ed Sullivan Show," there was no looking back, Drake said.

The Beatles laid the foundation for other bands to join the British Invasion.

Bands such as the Rolling Stones, which had a rougher, more rebellious attitude, were hits in America, Drake said.

Drake continuously gave the crowd tidbits of music trivia.

One example was how Keith Richards of the Rolling Stones came up with the riff in "(I Can't Get No) Satisfaction."

One night, Richards was trying to play Roy Orbison's "Pretty Woman" on the guitar.

Once he figured out the riff, he turned the notes upside down to create the introduction to "(I Can't Get No) Satisfaction," Drake said.

Drake explained that both British and American groups were together in the progressive rock movement.

"Even the Beatles joined in the hippie movement," Drake said.

Beatles albums such as Rubber Soul and Revolver were early remnants of hippie rock and helped introduce the growing drug culture of the '60s, Drake said.

Once the drug culture and hippie movement arrived on the rock 'n' roll scene, performers like Jefferson Airplane, Jimi Hendrix, the Doors and Janis Joplin began to become popular.

Drake said the music of the '60s was popular, because everyone wanted to have something to believe in.

"The '60s audience was a united audience," Drake said.

Drake said the '60s music scene went out in style with Woodstock in August 1969.

Although Drake said these three days were filled with rain, mud and 400,000 people, the music captivated a generation that will never be known again.

"The music of the '60s has never gone away," Drake said.

Course riddled with tough obstacles

JACQUELINE BONE
staff reporter

One hundred miles of native flint and rim rock, rain-sliced hillsides and thick brush await the competitors in the 1996 World Championship Endurance Ride Saturday.

Horse and rider are challenged to conquer this trail, testing the endurance of not only the equine athlete, but the human athlete as well.

The 100-mile course is expected to be completed by the first rider in about nine hours.

The trail winds across more than 35 landowners' properties in Geary County, said Martha Gillespie, co-chair of the General Management and Headquarters Administration Oversight Committee.

Landmowers were sent a response card asking whether they wanted to participate in the event, said Randel Raub, Trail Sub-Committee chairperson and Vet Check and Trail Oversight Committee co-chairperson.

"We went visiting door-to-door," Raub said.

Raub said he looked at a map of the area and laid out a preliminary trail. He tried to find the path of least resistance — the one with the fewest land-owners.

The trail comes within about 10 miles south of both Junction City and Manhattan.

The terrain has a certain element of danger, especially because of the native rock and washouts down hillsides, Raub said.

"We had a broken collarbone, broken ribs, a broken arm, stuff like that last year," Raub said of the preliminary ride conducted last October. "But we had no serious injuries to horses."

The sport of endurance racing evolved from the Pony Express and U.S. cavalry.

Kansas was chosen as the endurance race site mostly because of the state's rich history in these events. Fort Riley is the last army base to have a mounted cavalry still active, which adds to the significance of this site, Raub said.

Veterinary medicine students, animal science graduate students and people from Lawrence, Wichita, Salina and Topeka were involved in construction of the trail.

> "It's beautiful country. Some places out there, there's nothing for quite a ways."
> • RANDEL RAUB
> TRAIL SUB-COMMITTEE CHAIR

Raub said he thought the people were great.

The construction of the 100-mile trail began in February 1995, Raub said. The actual laying out of the markers and posts began last September.

The trail was constructed by placing ribbon markers on bushes and trees. In the absence of trees, the trail workers constructed T-posts. These posts have a 10-foot piece of PVC pipe with wire running through it and ribbon tied to the ends.

"The riders need to see the markers from site to site," Raub said.

Generally they are placed about one-eighth to one-tenth of a mile apart, depending on the terrain, Raub said.

The land the endurance ride covers is not just treacherous rock and rut-hiding shrubs. There are also rolling hills and streams.

"It's beautiful country," Raub said. "Some places out there, there's nothing for quite a ways."

RACE

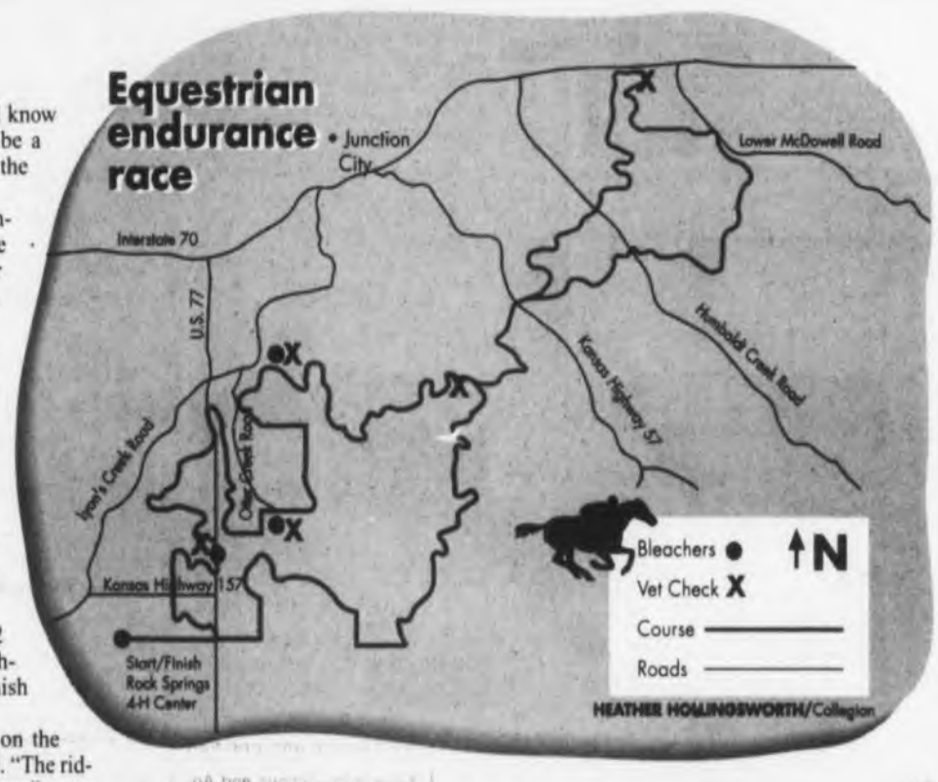
"Each rider must know the terrain and know their own horse," Burton said. "It could be a fast race if they get off and run down the hills."

Most of the race will be at a trot or canter, Burton said. However, it won't be uncommon for riders to dismount their horses at certain points in the race and run along beside them, she said.



There will be six veterinary check points along the trail, with the first one 26 miles into the race.

The riders are limited to 30 minutes at each check point to get their horse ready to see a veterinarian. The vet will then go through a series of inspections to make sure the horse can continue with the race.

"The vet makes the decision whether or not a horse can go on," Burton said.

Officials expect the race to take 9-1/2 hours to complete, depending on the weather conditions. Most horses are able to finish the race.

"The entire emphasis in this sport is on the health and safety of the horse," Burton said. "The riders want to push the horses but not hurt them."

Officials are expecting about 10,000 spectators for all of the week's festivities, which kicked off Wednesday.

Post-time for the race is 7 a.m. The first riders are expected to cross the finish line at about 4:30 p.m.

Trade show provides visitors equine-related product mall

Back stories and schedules for the World Championship Equine Endurance Event can be found in the Collegian archives.

DAVE KATZER

Imagine a mall for people who love horses. That is what the trade show at the World Championship Equine Endurance Event, on the grounds of the Rock Springs 4-H Center is like.

About 45 white tents are housing equine-related products and exhibits. The week-long festival will give spectators access to product representatives ranging from aluminum horse trailers to western clothing.

Belinda Skiles, trade-show coordinator, said there are activities for everyone.

"We have a lot of things that are related to horses, but there is also some very nice, up-scale clothing here," she said.

Troy and Karody Flaharty, co-owners of S&F Custom Cowboy Gear in Brookville, said they believe the show gives them a good market opportunity. Inside their tent consumers find cowboy-oriented gifts. Anything from handmade bits and spurs to Native American jewelry is available.

"We have had a lot of business from foreign people. They can't get these types of things at home, so it's been a good market for us," Karody said.

Skiles said not all the exhibitors are selling products.

"We have a lot of sponsors who are trying to promote, not necessarily sell products," Skiles said.

Skiles said the show's only problem had to do with the weather.

Rain and wind have presented small problems.

"We had some wind. The tent company is from the South, and I don't think they realized how much wind we can have here in Kansas," Skiles said.

Family business reveals western artistic talent

DAVE KATZER
staff reporter

True artistic talent is rare. Even more special is when art is the family business.

That is the case for Ken and Judith Mackey of Cottonwood Falls, who are exhibitors at the High Plains Art Festival.

The art festival is one of the many activities scheduled for the World Championship Equine Endurance Event at Rock Springs 4-H Center.

The couple, married for 35 years, took a break from their two art galleries in Cottonwood Falls to participate in the festival.

"We generally stick to the gallery shows, but we do a few shows. We did not want to miss this one," Judith Mackey said.

The Mackeys' exhibit is oriented to the Flint Hills and western lifestyle. Sprawling landscapes and rustic western scenes adorn the walls of the booth. Handcrafted spurs, boot jacks and hat racks, gleaming with metallic accents ,add to the western theme.

The two work out of individual galleries at the present but plan to remodel and move the two galleries into a single building within the year.

"I think creating a single gallery will be very beneficial to us because we won't spend so much time managing the galleries. We'll have more time to produce," Judith Mackey said.

She specializes almost exclusively in oil paintings. Her work was selected for the cover of William Least Heat-Moor's book about Midwest art and culture titled "PrairyErth." She has had original paintings sell for $3,500.

Painting western, historical and landscape scenes is the artist's passion, Judith Mackey said.

"I've been painting the Flint Hills for over 30 years. Landscapes are probably my favorite," Judith Mackey said.

Ken Mackey, new to the art world, doesn't use a canvas and brush for his work. He uses wood and metals. Though he has created for about two years, Ken Mackey is diverse in his production.

"I make spurs, boot jacks, hat racks and western jewelry," Ken Mackey said.

K-State research powers cars with fuel made from soybeans

KARI BROWN
staff reporter

K-State researchers found a way to turn one of Kansas' grain crops into a tank of alternative fuel.

Through a grant from the U. S. Department of Agriculture's energy program, K-State began the search for a diesel fuel. The search began in the 1980s, when the government feared an energy crisis would arise.

"We are developing technology for the future," said Stanley Clark, head of biological and agricultural engineering.

The University is researching different agricultural applications in case there is a fuel shortage. A fuel shortage could cripple agriculture, he said.

The soy-based diesel runs current diesel engines without modifications. It can be substituted with regular diesel fuel. A plentiful crop of U.S. soybeans makes this crop economical to use, Clark said. Environmentally, soybeans are a renewable resource compared to petroleum-based diesels.

Processing the fuel is easy, Clark said. Soybean oil goes through transesterification, a process that is used to alter the oil's properties. Alcohol and catalysts are added, and glycerin is emitted as a by-product. The finished product of the process is soy-ester.

Soy-ester is thin, like diesel fuel. However, additives are included to improve the fuel quality. Ester fuels have more potential than mixed fuels do, Clark said.

"We paid a lot of attention to fuel properties to match them," Clark said.

The alternative fuel has been tested extensively for performance, power, efficiency and emissions.

"Performance matched up very close to diesel," Clark said.

The tests were conducted with three different alcohol types for more than 200 hours in a modern turbo-diesel engine.

After the tests, an outside laboratory tore down the engines to check for signs of pollution, contamination, wear and carbon build-up. The engines were clean, Clark said.

The soy-diesel is being used in fleet testing to see if it is economical. Nebraska and Missouri are working with the bio-diesel. Nebraska is using blended diesel based on soybeans in part of their state-operated cars.

The public probably won't see the soy-based diesel in the near future because of production cost.

"It's not economically viable, but it is on the shelf and ready to go whenever we need it," Clark said.

"For women that can go to a doctor in their county, that's a lot better than having to go to Wichita," Mayberry said. "If you live clear up by Colby, you have to go to Wichita or Denver, and that's really expensive."

RU-486 also has benefits for other women, Mayberry said.

"Not just for rural women, but any women, it gives you more choices," she said.

By providing education on contraception, NOW hopes to help give women these choices.

"For a lot of women in NOW, it's like, give us options so we don't have to keep getting ourselves into corners and having to dig ourselves out," Mayberry said.

Some students think that the FDA's decision was too hasty.

"The approval of this drug has been a political issue," said Laura Ziegler, president of Students for the Right to Life and sophomore in wildlife biology. "They haven't looked at the scientific evidence in their considerations."

Ziegler said FDA rules mandate a drug given to a pregnant woman must heal the woman and not harm the child.

This drug does not comply with this, because it kills the child and harms the mother, she said.

"I think a lot of women will be hurt by this drug — bleeding, emotional side-effects," Ziegler said.

She didn't agree with Mayberry that RU-486 will make abortions easier for a rural woman to obtain.

"I don't think it would increase the accessibility, because she would still have to be in contact with her doctor on a pretty regular basis," Zeigler said.

BOXER

At that time only Arizona, Georgia, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington and Puerto Rico required the testing. Since then, at least four other states, including New York and New Jersey, have begun mandating HIV testing.

Morrison learned he had the virus after a test came back positive before February's scheduled fight against Arthur Weathers in Las Vegas. Oklahoma boxing officials said he remains on medical suspension in Nevada.

"We would have to honor that," said Becki Andre of the State Professional Boxing Advisory Board.

Morrison said his visits with children who have the virus and the need to raise adequate funds to help them through his Knockout AIDS Foundation prompted his decision to fight again.

"I have seen them rejected, shunned in their communities and schools," Morrison said.

"Being rejected is probably more emotional than actually having the virus itself."

Holden would not say how much money has been raised by the foundation but said there have been no significant fund drives.

CURRICULUM

The college has submitted a proposal, which has already been approved by the College of Agriculture faculty. Next, it will go to the General Education Implementation Task Force. After approval there, it will go to Academic Affairs and then to Faculty Senate.

There are 29 total course changes. These changes might affect other areas, such as the College of Business Administration, Department of Economics, Department of Civil Engineering, Department of Statistics, Department of Foods and Nutrition, Department of Mathematics and the Department of Biochemistry.

Students should note there are some courses in the new curriculum that will combine old courses. Also some courses have been completely dropped from the curriculum. However, most of the courses being dropped have not been offered for several semesters, and none of them are required courses.

Adviser leaves Foundation after 17 years

JANN STOUGH
staff reporter

One of the KSU Foundation's top fundraisers has resigned.

Mark Moore, former Foundation president, left only six weeks after being promoted to the position of presidential adviser for major gifts.

"Moore was given the position of presidential adviser to help solicit financial support from the Foundation's top donor level," Melissa Hayes, communication relations administrator, said.

Moore's resignation was official Aug. 31. He had been with the Foundation for 17 years. For the last 3-1/2 years he served as president.

The Foundation has been restructuring since the retirement of Art Loub, president of the Foundation prior to Moore, said Gary Hellebust, executive vice president and chief operating officer of the Foundation.

As part of the re-organization, Moore was placed in the position of presidential adviser and Hellebust assumed his new role as CEO. The offices of president and presidential adviser for major gifts have both been dissolved through the Foundation's restructurization, which took place after Moore resigned.

"Gary is now working on a staffing plan to increase employees on the fundraising side to fill the hole that Mark left," Hayes said.

Hellebust is conducting a national search for a chief executive officer. He said he hopes to fill this position by Dec. 1.

The Foundation will benefit from the re-organization by centralizing its focus on constituent development and responding to the priorities of the University more quickly, Hellebust said.

Moore could not be reached for comment.

Politicians learn about research, funding at K-State

ALLISON WOODALL
staff reporter

U.S. Senate candidate Jill Docking stopped in Manhattan last Monday to campaign and visit the old stomping-ground of her opponent Sam Brownback, 1979 K-State agricultural economics graduate.

U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman was on hand to support Docking.

The campaign stop began with a tour of Throckmorton Hall and marked the first time Glickman had visited Throckmorton since its completed expansion in 1994.

Glickman had the opportunity to view research results from the Wheat Genetics Resource Center, for which he helped secure $100,000 of federal funding in 1988.

"This building represents one of the premier facilities in the world," Glickman said. "Last January I was visiting a university in India. They were talking about the agricultural research being done here at K-State."

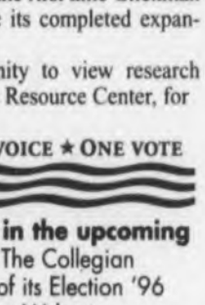
Docking was also pleased with what she saw.

"In Congress, defending funding is often resonant of the program's success," Docking said. "We all have our own turf to protect. Frankly, I'm not worried about your turf. You're doing a great job."

Docking said she could not guarantee any program's funding if elected but said she would make it a priority to protect funding for K-State research programs.



By educating Docking and Glickman, the College of Agriculture believes the visit will be beneficial for K-State.

"Our main purpose is to demonstrate for them what we do here," Gerry Posler, professor of agronomy, said. "Then when we are asking for funding, they have a

Daughter edges out mother in final race story by Brent Stover

WHO

▶ Danielle Kanavy riding Cash edged out her mother, Valerie Kanavy, riding FireNgold, to win the 1996 World Championship Equine Endurance Race.

It was a hollywood ending. Together, mother and daughter rode off into the sunset, not to mention the history books.

The scene was the Flint Hills at 7:22 p.m. Saturday. The actresses were Wichita-native Valerie Kanavy and her daughter, Danielle Kanavy. The occasion was the 1996 World Championship for Equestrian Endurance.

With the sun going down behind the hills in the distance, Valerie Kanavy and Danielle Kanavy and their horses, FireNgold and Cash, raced down the final stretch of the 100-mile horse race with the world title on the line.

The end result was Cash edging FireNgold by a nose and Danielle Kanavy edging her mother for the Championship.

Mary Lutz, assistant director of endurance for the U.S. Equestrian Team, was left almost speechless by the results of the race.

"It's fabulous. What could be better," Lutz said.

"To see those two come across like that ... . Don't get me started because you'll get me weeping."

Valerie Kanavy won the individual gold in 1994 at the last World Championship event, riding Cash, the horse her daughter rode this year.

"I'm still a winner. She won on my horse. And I think it was a tie anyway," Valerie Kanavy said after the race.

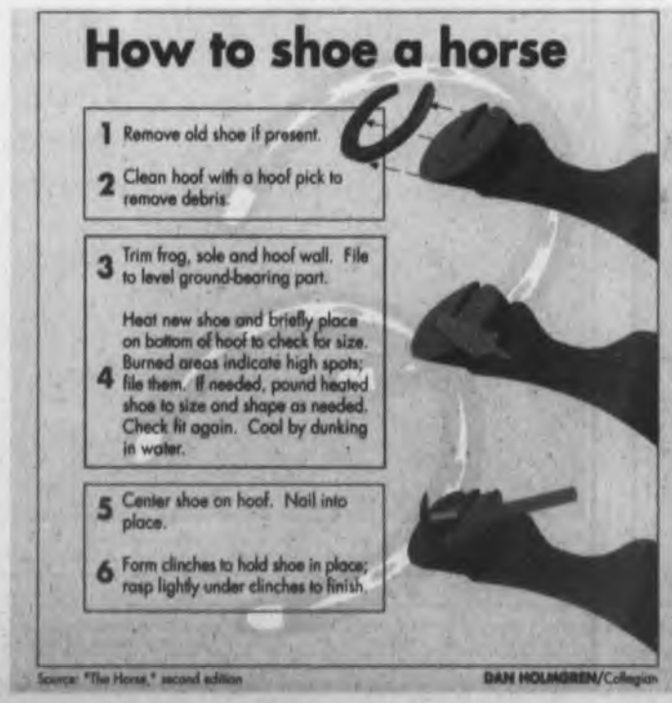
The two riders from Port Valley, Va., rode together the entire race and broke away from the rest of the pack about halfway between the third and fourth veterinary checks.

There were six vet checks, with the final one coming just seven miles from the finish line. When both riders left the final vet check, they were alone with Danielle holding a slim one-second lead.

"I don't think there's a horse here that can beat either of those horses to the finish," Valerie Kanavy said. "So even if they caught us, we thought we could outrun them."

Danielle has been riding horses since she was five and has been riding competitively since she was eight.

"It's a little girl's dream come true," Danielle Kanavy said.



Not only did the United States capture the individual title, but it also came away with the team title, defeating the defending champion French team.

The U.S. team didn't have enough horses finish at the '94

Farrier demonstrates new shoeing style that calls for sitting down on the job story by Jacqueline Bone

The farrier bent over the horse's newly shod hoof, sweat pouring down his face. An exasperated sigh escaped him as he stared at the other three hooves waiting to be trimmed, filed and fitted. He spotted a cement block holding the stall door open and got an idea.

Benny Smith, a Native American Cherokee and longtime farrier, invented a style of horseshoeing that gives new meaning to sitting down on the job.

Smith led a demonstration at the 1996 FEI World Championship Equine Endurance Event last weekend.

Smith put his first set of horseshoes on when he was 12 and began sitting down to trim and shoe horses' hooves about 25 years ago. He says he learned this style out of necessity. He taught himself after purchasing a pony for his children. He had to keep the pony's feet trimmed, and the strain of farrier work was too much for his back.

> "First, I dug up a cement block. Next I got a bucket. Next I got a bench. It made it very convenient. You can shoe at leisure."
> ● BENNY SMITH
> FARRIER

"First, I dug up a cement block. Next I got a bucket. Next I got a bench. It made it very convenient," Smith said. "You can shoe at leisure."

Smith says the style is more comfortable for the horse. He puts the horse's legs in a more natural position, making them more at ease. He also says the position he is in is much more comfortable.

"When you do work in a comfortable position, you do a better job," Smith said.

This began as a hobby for Smith. He didn't advertise his talents, but people soon began to hear about him. Now he does farrier work about every day.

"Now I do it to support my horse habit," Smith said.

• VMI ADMITS WOMEN CADETS. Virginia Military Institute opened its barracks and parade grounds to women Saturday, retreating from 157 years of male-only tradition as the price of keeping its public funds. The VMI board voted 9-8 Saturday to admit women by fall 1997.

• DEBATE SCHEDULE DECIDED. President Clinton and Republican rival Bob Dole will face off in two debates this fall without Ross Perot, the two major-party candidates decided Saturday. Dole and Clinton agreed to debate Oct. 6 in Hartford, Conn., and Oct. 16 in San Diego.

• KACZYNSKI DIARY FOUND. For nearly 20 years, prosecutors say, Theodore Kaczynski sat in his remote Montana cabin and penned entries in a long, detailed diary that described each and every one of the 16 bombings committed by the Unabomber. The government plans to use the diary to convict Kaczynski of sending mail bombs to people around the country since the 1970s. The diary was discovered by federal agents following his April 3 arrest.

• U.N. GENERAL ASSEMBLY IN SESSION. During the United Nations General Assembly this week, members will decide leadership and budget issues. The United States is responsible for almost half of the $2.9 billion that member states owe the United Nations, and it wants Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali to be replaced. President Clinton addresses the General Assembly Tuesday. Washington has won virtually no public support for its high-profile campaign to replace Boutros-Ghali when his five-year term expires Dec. 31.

• HUSSEIN REFUSES TO RECOGNIZE NO FLY ZONES. Saddam Hussein lavishly praised his army for liberating part of northern Iraq and firing at U.S. warplanes patrolling the skies Sunday. Saddam said he no longer recognized the no-fly zones that a U.S.-led alliance has been enforcing. But he didn't say whether Iraqi forces would resume firing missiles at American and allied warplanes, a move that almost certainly would lead to renewed confrontation with the United States.

• CASTRATED RAPIST RELEASED. Against the objections of the victim's family, Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee ssaid he will free a convicted rapist who was castrated by masked men while awaiting trial. Huckabee said DNA testing does not link Wayne Dumond to the crime, and the mutilation was punishment enough. Dumond, 47, was sentenced to life in prison plus 20 years after being convicted of kidnapping a 17-year-old girl from her home in 1984 and raping her. In 1985, while Dumond awaited trial, two men in stocking masks broke into his home, tied him up and castrated him with fishing line. The intruders were never caught.

• YOM KIPPUR CELEBRATED IN ISRAEL. Shops closed, public transportation came to a halt and most Israeli Jews stopped eating and drinking Sunday evening for 24 hours of soul-searching and prayer on Yom Kippur. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu called for national unity, making a rare reference to the assassination of his rival, Yitzhak Rabin, a year ago. Yom Kippur, the Jewish day of atonement, culminates 10 days of repentance that began with Rosh Hashana, the New Year, on Sept. 14.

Israeli radio and television stations went off the air Sunday afternoon. Public buses in Jerusalem and Tel Aviv stopped running and air traffic to and from Ben Gurion International airport ended at 1 p.m. Services were to resume when Yom Kippur ends at Monday sundown.

• NEBRASKA LOSES TO ARIZONA. In a state where college football fans had forgotten what it's like to lose, the unthinkable happened. Nebraska was not just beaten, but blanked 19-0 by Arizona State on Saturday night, leaving Cornhusker fans to wonder what went wrong. Nebraska had won 26 straight games and lost only once in the last three years. It had been more than 2-1/2 years since the team lost, almost four years since it happened during the regular season.

In addition, the overestimation in the Educational Opportunity Fund was attributed to the incorrect transfers that took place. The transfers did not cause the overestimation.

*Offer expires October 11, 1996. No payment of interest or principal will be required for 90 days. Interest accruing during this 90-day period will be added to the principal and will bear interest, which will be included in the repayment schedule. For example, the month of May 1996 had an interest rate of 12.15% with an Annual Percentage Rate (APR) of 13.01%. A monthly payment of $12.86 for the Power Mac 5260 system is an estimate based on a total loan amount of $1,913.83, which includes a sample purchase price of $1,799 and a 6% loan origination fee. Interest is variable based on the Prime Rate as reported on the 5th business day of the month in The Wall Street Journal, plus a spread of 3.9%. Monthly payment and APR shown assumes deferment of principal and does not include state or local sales tax. The Apple Computer Loan has an 8 year loan term with no prepayment penalty and is subject to credit approval. Civil War re-enactors entertain at equine event

staff reporter

Men dressed up as Union soldiers from the Civil War were at the 1996 FEI World Championship Equine Endurance Event on Friday, displaying heritage and history from the 1860s.

The group soldiers are known as the 2nd U.S. Dragoons, Company C. Dragoon is a French word that means heavy cavalry. There are about 20 men in the group, which has members from Topeka to St. Louis. Only six were able to make the trip to Rock Springs 4-H Center.

The soldiers set up camp at the festival with authentic-looking tents and equipment from the Civil War period. The camp was in the middle of the festival, allowing the crowd to interact with the soldiers.

The company also demonstrated how horses were used as transportation for the cavalry. They performed two exhibitions showing how soldiers dismounted horses to go into battle.

The soldiers rode in groups of four. Three soldiers would dismount and connect the four horses together with leaders. The fourth rider would take all four horses away while the three soldiers entered the battlefield.

Dave Smith, a member of Company C from Rolla, Mo., said the group does one show a month, but the group has had shows the past four weeks.

Company C also does battle re-enactments at some events, but more companies have to be used to make the battles realistic.

The demonstrations and battle re-enactments have given Smith a greater understanding of Civil War history.

"The men and women who built this country had amazing powers of endurance," Smith said. "When you see the cost in blood for our country, you get a sense of what precious heritage we have."

Company C wants to exhibit those amazing powers and give its audience a feeling of what it was like to be a soldier in the Civil War.

K-State personal pages relocate

LILLIAN E. BEEBE
staff reporter

Personal pages on the K-State World Wide Web site will soon be booted off and onto their own site.

"We are taking a scarce resource and allocating it in a reasonable way," Elizabeth Unger, vice provost, said.

The change will distinguish sanctioned University pages from personal pages.

Increased access to controversial and popular Web pages has slowed down access to other official and personal pages, Ramsey said.

The personal-pages site will have its own server which will tentatively be working Oct. 18, Timothy Ramsey, Unix system administrator, said.

The design and function of the pages will not change, just the location, said Ken Conrow, interim director of Computing and Network Services.

"The changes should all be transparent to the user community," he said.

It is a way of underscoring the difference between official and personal pages and protecting free speech, he said.

Officials are also considering limiting access to popular pages. Daily quotas will be set for pages, and once the quota is met, the page will be turned off until the next day.

It is one way of controlling the load so the server doesn't become overloaded, Conrow said.

No date has been set for initiating the quotas.

SGA discusses allocation of projects fund

ANDREW FRANCIS
staff reporter

Campus safety was the focus of a Student Governing Association committee meeting last night.

The Governmental Relations Committee, a standing committee in SGA, discussed how the City/University Projects Fund should be allocated.

The fund was created when Manhattan annexed K-State June 1, 1994. Sales-tax revenue from the K-State Student Union, athletic ticket sales and McCain ticket sales are put into the fund and put towards improving the city and campus.

Aaron Otto, student body vice president, gave the committee suggestions on how he felt the fund should be allocated.

Continuing to improve lighting around campus was the main priority of the committee. The fund has been responsible for improving the lighting around campus since the fund was established.

Improving surveillance cameras in campus parking lots was also a concern for the committee. Upgrading recording equipment and possibly increasing the number of cameras could help police prevent and solve crimes, committee members said.

The committee also wants pedestrian and traffic safety to be improved by adding more crosswalks and traffic lights.

Tracey Mann, chairman of the committee, will draft a bill that will be introduced to Senate. After the Senate reviews the bill at its first reading, the committee will make a final revision of the bill.

Any doubts about the future of the Walnut Valley Festival were diminished Saturday night in Winfield.

During a concert featuring John McCutcheon and Tom Chapin, the two called the festival directors, Bob and Kendra Redford, onstage to commemorate the 25th anniversary of the festival. It was then that Bob Redford announced Winfield would see more years of the festival.

"It's your party, and we plan to be at the next one, right here," he said.

> "It's your party and we plan to be at the next one, right here."
> • BOB REDFORD FESTIVAL DIRECTOR

The announcement ended months of speculation from fans as to whether the festival would continue.

Bob Redford has experienced health problems in the past two years and has undergone surgery for cancer. He also has a mild form of diabetes.

The Redfords' intention is to let their son Brian take a more active role in the festival preparations.

"Kendra and I are going to do our best to fade back a bit," Bob said.

Bob's dedication to the festival has been apparent to his peers throughout the last quarter-century.

"Anyone who knows Bob knows he will probably never go away from the festival. It's a part of his life." Rex Flottman, media spokesman for the festival, said in the Walnut Valley Association Voice newsletter.

During the concert, Bob also took time to thank the 1,453 people it took to make the festival run.

This year's festival brought in about 15,000 attendants, shattering the preceding record of 14,080, set in 1980.

ATTENTION STUDENT FOOTBALL SEASON TICKET HOLDERS

Get an Apple Computer Loan. Get a Mac. Don't pay for 90 days.

K-State Student Union Bookstore 532-6583

Free one-year Apple warranty.

Offer expires October 11, 1996. No payment of interest or principal will be required for 90 days. Interest accruing during this 90-day period will be added to the principal and will bear interest, which will be included in the repayment schedule. For example, the month of May 1996 had an interest rate of 12.15% with an Annual Percentage Rate (APR) of 13.93%. A monthly payment of $50.23 for the Power Mac 7200/120 system is an estimate based on a total loan amount of $3,925.53, which includes a sample purchase price of $2,707 and a 6% loan origination fee. Interest is variable based on the Prime Rate as reported on the 5th business day of the month in The Wall Street Journal, plus a spread of 3.9%. Monthly payment and APR shown assumes deferment of principal and does not include state or local sales tax. The Apple Computer Loan has an 8-year loan term with no prepayment penalty and is subject to credit approval. Monthly payments may vary depending on actual computer system prices, total loan amounts, state and local sales taxes and a change in the monthly variable interest rate. ©1996 Apple Computer, Inc. IN OUR OPINION

Coverage might be result of lack of communication

There have been a lot of heavy charges brought against some fairly important people and groups at K-State lately.

David Damon, Mike Stoops and Lambda Chi Alpha have made headlines in a less-than-positive light recently.

Maybe you think we're being too hard on these people. Maybe you think we're being unfair, indicting them in the press.

WHY WE CARE

The Collegian wants to hear all points of view on any given issue, but we need you to take an active role in voicing your opinions.

And maybe you feel like the coverage of the stories has been one-sided.

But in the majority of the cases, the accused have refused to tell their side of the story, sometimes for legal purposes, sometimes because they don't feel a response is required.

We at the Collegian want to represent the views of all students. We are the voice of the students — or at least we try our very best to fulfill that job.

You know the cliché "The squeaky wheel gets the oil"? Well, in life, and especially in the newspaper business, there is more than a little truth to that. The squeaky wheel in the case of the newspaper is the source, the one who talks to us.

Those who don't talk don't get their point of view heard.

But we want to give them and you a chance. Don't forget that everyone has the right and sometimes the responsibility to write a letter to the editor.

We care about every side of the issue at hand. If you think we're unfair, tell us. If you think we are right on the money, tell us.

This is your paper, too.

Now, if we get bombarded with letters that all say basically the same thing, we can't run all of them. But we'll do our very best to make sure all points of view are represented.

When you do submit such a letter, we edit it. We won't change the meaning of the letter. The only things we fix are spelling, grammar and punctuation, and we edit for length.

Many times people have a problem with the last part. Yeah, it's frustrating to see only a part of your hard work published, but you have to understand there is only a limited amount of space we have to work with.

We welcome all viewpoints. We don't just represent the accusers, but we want to represent the accused.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera L. Tank at (karolyi@ksu.edu).

Columnist examines organ donation, mortality and future funeral plans

MY

Mary Renee SMITH

The worms crawl in, the worms crawl out, the worms play pinochle on your snout. Sing along. (If anyone out there knows the next verse, please e-mail it to me.)

You are going to die. Someday worms and other parasites will run amuck on your corpse. (Sorry, I know that is a rather graphic description, but it has been a rough morning.)

Your mortality is not the first thing you think about in the morning, I hope. Most people avoid the subject unless they absolutely have to think about the big sleep.

Last week, I got my new license and had to ponder my eventual demise. My driving is not bad; I had to find two people willing to sign the organ-donor statement on the back of the license.

The uniformed woman with the shiny badge at the driver's license place recommended I have two members of my family sign as witnesses to my wishes to have my organs donated after I die.

I thought about my mother signing. After all, she brought me into the world and raised me for a number of years, and technically half of what I am is her.

My dad has the same claim to my organs, but he lives in Florida. That makes it difficult for him to sign my license. My dad is also a bit more emotional about me. I don't think he could give away my organs — not that he would keep them in a jar on the dining-room table or anything.

I decided to give the responsibility of handing out my insides to my boyfriend and my sister. My boyfriend is closer and more attached to my organs than anyone else. My sister is waiting for me to die so she can have my computer and my vacuum cleaner.

I chose them because they would obey my wishes and give my organs to anyone who wants them.

I'll be dead. I won't be needing my innards anymore. Take my corneas, please! People who hold onto their organs after they die are fascists.

Does anyone really follow the wishes of the dead person? How is the dead person going to know? If it were my wish that my closest friends and family shave off their eyebrows and wear red dresses while singing the national anthem at a rugby game in remembrance of me, would they do it?

People usually hate going to funerals, so I have figured out a way to bring in crowds to my memorial.

> "I'll be dead. I won't be needing my innards anymore. Take my corneas, please! People who hold onto their organd after they die are fascists."

Instead of sending flowers or donating money to my favorite charity, everyone can send money to the funeral fund. Everyone coming will be given a number, and during the service a number will be drawn. The mourner with the winning number gets the money from the fund.

I will also ban anyone from saying the phrase "at least," as in "At least she died quickly" or "At least she lived a long life" or "At least she's not suffering anymore."

The thing about death that bothers me the most isn't the dead person. It's all the people left over. Obituaries describe them as survivors.

My best friend Tim died a few years ago. He knew he would die at home and joked the obituary would read this way:

Timothy Albert Bedwell died at his home Tuesday. Survivors include his mother, father, sister and cat.

He said the obituary made it sound like a bomb hit the house and Tim was killed, but the survivors were ....

I like Tim's attitude about death. He had cancer. He knew he was dying, but he had a sense of humor. The last party he had was at Halloween. He came dressed as the Grim Reaper.

Tim chose to be cremated after his death, as opposed to being cremated before death, which would hurt.

I want to be cremated. Please, I beg of you, no open-casket funeral. That is too morbid — dressing up a dead body so you can put them in a box and look at them. Burn me up, and spread me around. If you can get Madonna to rub my ashes all over her body, goody, goody.

We spend so much time anticipating and celebrating so many other parts of our lives. Graduation parties, bachelor parties, wedding receptions and baby showers are all planned well in advance.

I think it is about time we start planning our deaths and funerals, too. Maybe we should send out invitations to our memorials with the date and time to be announced.

Confessions of a Wheel-watcher

MY

Shana NEWELL

There needs to be a support group for people addicted to the game show "Wheel of Fortune."

My mom and I should probably be the first to sign up. We're addicted. In fact, we're so addicted we decided to see a live version of the game at Starlight Theatre last Friday night. In essence, we were trying out for the opportunity to be on the real version of "Wheel of Fortune."

There was no Pat Sajak. No Vanna White appeared to turn letters on the board as they were lit one by one.

It began with our finding our seats. That was a mess simply because we couldn't find them. The crowd was too thick.

Then we waited 45 minutes for the host, Bob Eubanks, former host of "Newlywed Game" and "Card Sharks."

Friday night, he was the host of the traveling "Wheel of Fortune." While we waited, the audience was entertained with videos of memorable "Wheel of Fortune" episodes and commercials for some new cable network to be called the Game Show Network. That's all the event was — a grand marketing scheme for the promotion of the new network.

That realization actually detracted from the fun of the evening. But the things I didn't expect to enjoy, or even experience, more than made up for the marketing.

Eugene was a Forrest Gump wanna-be. The yellow polyester pants with a red and yellow plaid blazer and obnoxious tie gave him away. The massive sticker placed on his left lapel, "Hi, I'm Eugene," made him even more conspicuous.

He sat only two rows behind my mother and me. He was loud and irritating, and his laugh grated on my nerves. We thought our prayers were answered shortly before the event began, because an usher moved Eugene. It turns out he and his wife were sitting in the wrong seats. They were just trying to get closer to the action — or closer to making a scene in the hopes they would be chosen.

Unfortunately, he only moved down a couple of seats. We were still within shouting distance of him.

Betty was sitting in front of us with her husband. A sweet, kind older lady, Betty was what I know my mother and I will be one day. She most assuredly never misses "Wheel."

She turned and talked with us for a while about the game show, about the rain, just about anything.

And then it started. One of Kansas City's local radio personalities — I don't remember her name — introduced herself and thanked the sponsors. It turns out she would be the first of two Vannas.

Then the producer of the traveling show came out. He was entertaining because he was comical. He told the audience members what the show expected from them, how the tryout worked and when to clap. The show was being filmed, so there were little things for him to tell us. But most importantly, he instructed us on the proper way to spin the wheel.

And then Bob Eubanks appeared. He looked good. Really good. If I were older, I would consider accosting the man. I don't know what he's done, but not being a host on television game shows in recent years has been good for him.

Bob introduced Tennessee, a people-finder. Tennessee would be responsible for searching out two people from the audience, while Bob would single out one for each round. There would be six rounds — 18 people.

Unfortunately, mom and I never got the chance to stand on stage and throw luck to the wind.

But Eugene did. The most obnoxious person in the stands, and he gets picked. Forrest had moved to another section after the first two rounds, hoping to be in Eubanks' sight. He succeeded. I've got to give him credit for that.

"I'm just so excited," he said, over and over, in his best Forrest Gump imitation. I just hope that's not the way he really talks. I really, really hope that's not how he dresses.

Betty got chosen, too. Our little section was standing and screaming and waving and smiling. I was standing on my seat waving my arms wildly. I felt like I was trying to get picked up off a desert island by a rescue plane.

I caught Bob's eye. I will swear on the future of "Wheel of Fortune" that Bob and I made eye contact. But my being chosen wasn't in the cards. (No pun intended.) But Betty, sweet Betty, who was sitting right in front of me, was picked.

She was so surprised. Betty had even turned around and was trying to congratulate my mother or me — she wasn't sure which — because she was so sure she hadn't been picked.

She didn't win her round. But she had a great showing, as did most of the other contestants, almost all of whom were in their mid- to early 40s or 50s. Only two were my age. One of them, Jennifer, won the entire thing. But she earned her chance to win by pure luck.

We were all given cards with numbers. Hers was the winning card, so she was a contestant in the final round. She won the round, so she will be given a trip to Hollywood to try out for the real version of "Wheel.".

Maybe one day, my mother and I will get the chance to prove we are great "Wheel of Fortune" puzzle-solvers.

Until then, I'll just cherish being a wheel-watcher at home with my mom. While sitting in Starlight Theatre, I realized it didn't matter if we got the chance. I just enjoyed doing something with my mother. That's a memory I will always have. And it beats asking for a vowel anyday.

Fortmeyer column unfairly bitter toward campus groups

Editor,

It seems that in his senior year, Collegian columnist Russell Fortmeyer, has come out of his shell, so to speak, expressing hostile, pent-up sentiments that have no doubt been festering in his soul since his early days at K-State.

Has Mr. Fortmeyer been blinded by the sun, like some Camusian hero? This must be the case, as he's clearly lost his equilibrium, judging from his cynical, unfounded pot shots at decent organizations.

As a member of one of the elitist enclaves that Fortmeyer attacked — Silver Key — I'd like to set the record straight.

First of all, Silver Key sophomores did not and do not camp out in front of the K-State Student Union for the sole purpose of "reminding (the) ignoranti that homeless people exist."

The purpose of the whole event was and still is to raise money for the homeless. Fortmeyer should know by now that donations to any disadvantaged group are usually greater when a challenge is involved.

This is why there are community events such as walk-a-thons and, at the elementary level, Jump Rope for Heart programs.

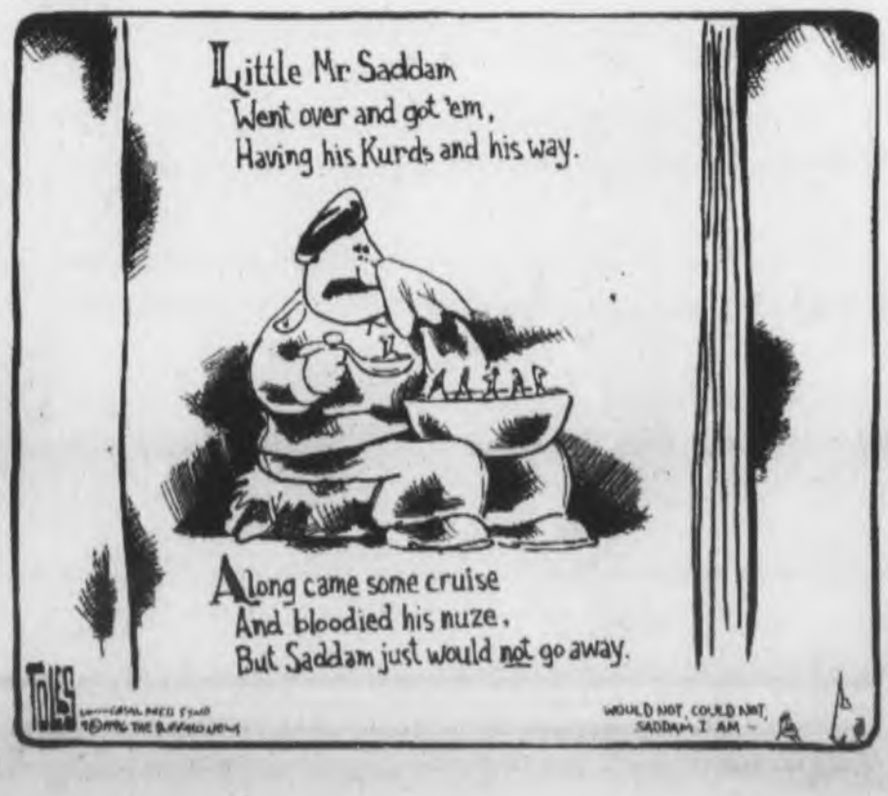
People are generally more willing to donate when they can see a serious commitment by the organization in question.

Silver Key also commits itself to grassroots projects such as helping freshmen move into the residence halls. The Collegian didn't write about this event, and we at Silver Key could care less.

What we got out of that project was simply a good feeling, not a résumé-builder.

As to the elitist composition of student organizations, it appears Fortmeyer has been blinded again. He makes some nasty generalizations about organizations like ours, yet he obviously hasn't met too many of them. If he had, he'd note that many Silver Key members are "the common student who attends class, has a night job and studies ... " — the same person he feels is so inadequately represented in the ranks of the elite.

Fortmeyer is probably wondering why Silver Key limits its membership. There is a perfectly logical and practical reason for this: commitment.



A lot of people can sign up for a club or say they'll do something, but with all the broken promises in the world, who knows who's telling the truth and who's lying?

By checking out references and asking a variety of questions targeted toward community interest and personal motivation, Silver Key can select a good group of people — not the tactless self-promoters Fortmeyer seems to be alluding to.

We are assured of gaining members with solid academic and community records and a passion to get things done.

Drafting off to sleep

Seaton studios become architecture students' 2nd home

• story by Brandi Hertig • photos by Darren Whitley •

Deep into the wee hours of the morning, fourth-year architecture students in Seaton Hall are building a future.

The College of Architecture requires students to take eight different design studios at K-State. The K-State undergraduate catalog describes studio as being 12 hours per week. Those 12 hours are only the actual hours spent in class.

Time spent in studio averages about to be about 91 hours per week, said Anders Henningsson, fourth-year student in architecture.

"Your life becomes studio," said Kim Murphy, fourth-year student in architecture. "You have to love what you do. You have to love being in here in order to do it, because the curriculum is just too intense for people just to slack off and get through."

During studio time, student projects are critiqued, and students spend time doing research in the library.

After class time, students work on their projects or their homework. The fourth-year students' theme in studio this year is "Buildings: Machines." They are exploring how architecture functions as a machine. The students are given the basic requirements about a building. It is then their job to interpret what kind of feel the building should have to it.

"It's like a search for deeper meaning," Murphy said.

The key to being good designers is continually developing their skills, Brent Crittenden, fourth-year student in architecture, said.

People aren't born natural designers.

"We build models, look at them, then rebuild them," he said.

The studios in which the students work have become their homes. Many use their homes as merely pit-stops on the road of architecture life.

"I go home to eat, sleep and shower," Henningsson said. "Last semester I spent 15 nights in a row in studio. I slept on the floor."

Murphy said her roommates don't know her.

Being in an enclosed space for so long sometimes prompts the students to do things a non-architecture student might not do, such as removing ceiling tiles in the middle of the night.

It creates more space in the studio, Wagner said. That's something that someone who's not an architecture major might not understand, he said.

Many of the architecture students find they are a different breed from the rest of society.

"I find it so weird to go to Kansas City and walk through the mall or something, like normal people do. It's almost a KIMBERLY MURPHY, fourth-year senior in architecture, naps on her drafting table after working late into the night on a design project.

GARRETT CRESS and Jason Tippie, both fourth-year seniors in architecture, have their mugs refilled in the K-State Student Union bowling alley at closing time by Dale Withroder, senior in history. Sodas and coffee were popular sources of caffeine for the architects so they could stay awake. Tippie and Cress said sleep-prohibitive drugs worked well for staying awake, but exhaustion set in worse after the drug's effects wore off.

ABOVE. KIM MURPHY, JASON WAGNER, TOM McKENZIE AND AMY WARTICK, all fourth-year seniors in architecture, discuss a problem they came across while working on their design project. They decided to resolve their problem by using the most convenient mathematical means, since the only fault they could find was in the assignment and not their methods.

Mighty NU falls; what happens now in bowl alliance format?

Brigham Young 41, Texas A&M 37. Texas Christian 20, Oklahoma 7. Southwest Louisiana 29, Texas A&M 22. Michigan 20, Colorado 13. Notre Dame 27, Texas 24. San Diego State 51, Oklahoma 31. Georgia 15, Texas Tech 12. Arizona State 19, Nebraska 0.

Arizona State 19, Nebraska NOTHING.

Lo, how the mighty have fallen.

The Big 12 Conference was supposed to be the nation's first true superconference.

Four teams finished in the Top 10 in both important polls last season. Six won bowl games. Seven were in the Top 25. Eight qualified for bowls.

Dan LEWERENZ

Never in the history of college football had any conference even approached such greatness.

And the pundits prepared for a repeat performance.

Much to the chagrin of the Southeastern Conference, which has felt slighted by all the Big 12 Superconference hype, Nebraska was awarded the top spot in both preseason polls.

Two other conference schools, Colorado and Texas, were considered legitimate national-title contenders.

Two others, Texas A&M and K-State (yes, K-State — read your Sports Illustrated), were mentioned as possible spoilers; and Kansas, Texas Tech, Baylor and Oklahoma all received attention from poll voters.

Some saw the Nebraska vs. Colorado game as a preview of the national championship. Others looked to the first-ever Big 12 Championship game.

And now it's all a dream.

No, Wildcat faithful, I am not writing off K-State's chance at a conference title or a national championship. In fact, I take heart seeing Nebraska lose to a good defensive team and Colorado lose at home. That makes K-State's chances at an undefeated season that much greater.

But in reality, even an undefeated season will not be a guarantee this year.

FACT: Now that Florida has defeated Tennessee (in front of 107,000 screaming Volunteer fans, no less), the winner of the Florida vs. Florida State game will likely go undefeated into the Sugar Bowl.

We'll call this team National Championship Contender No. 1 because the Gators and Seminoles occupy the top two spots in the polls.

FACT: If Notre Dame survives a Sept. 28 matchup with Ohio State, the Fighting Irish will almost certainly complete a perfect season, too. That means the Golden Domers will probably play the state-of-Florida winner in the Sugar Bowl for the national title.

We'll call Notre Dame National Championship Contender No. 2.

FACT: Three Big 10 teams — Penn State, Ohio State and Michigan — are among the top six in the country.

True, they will have to beat up on each other, and Ohio State has to survive the Irish, but one is likely to take a perfect record to the Rose Bowl.

Sure, Arizona State beat Nebraska, but the Pac 10 still has a way to go before it can beat a true contender from the Big 10.

An undefeated Big 10 champion earns the title National Championship Contender No. 3.

FACT: Two Big 12 teams remain in the hunt — K-State and Kansas. Both teams started much further down in the polls. Neither will have the strength of a win over a top-5 team to propel them up the charts.

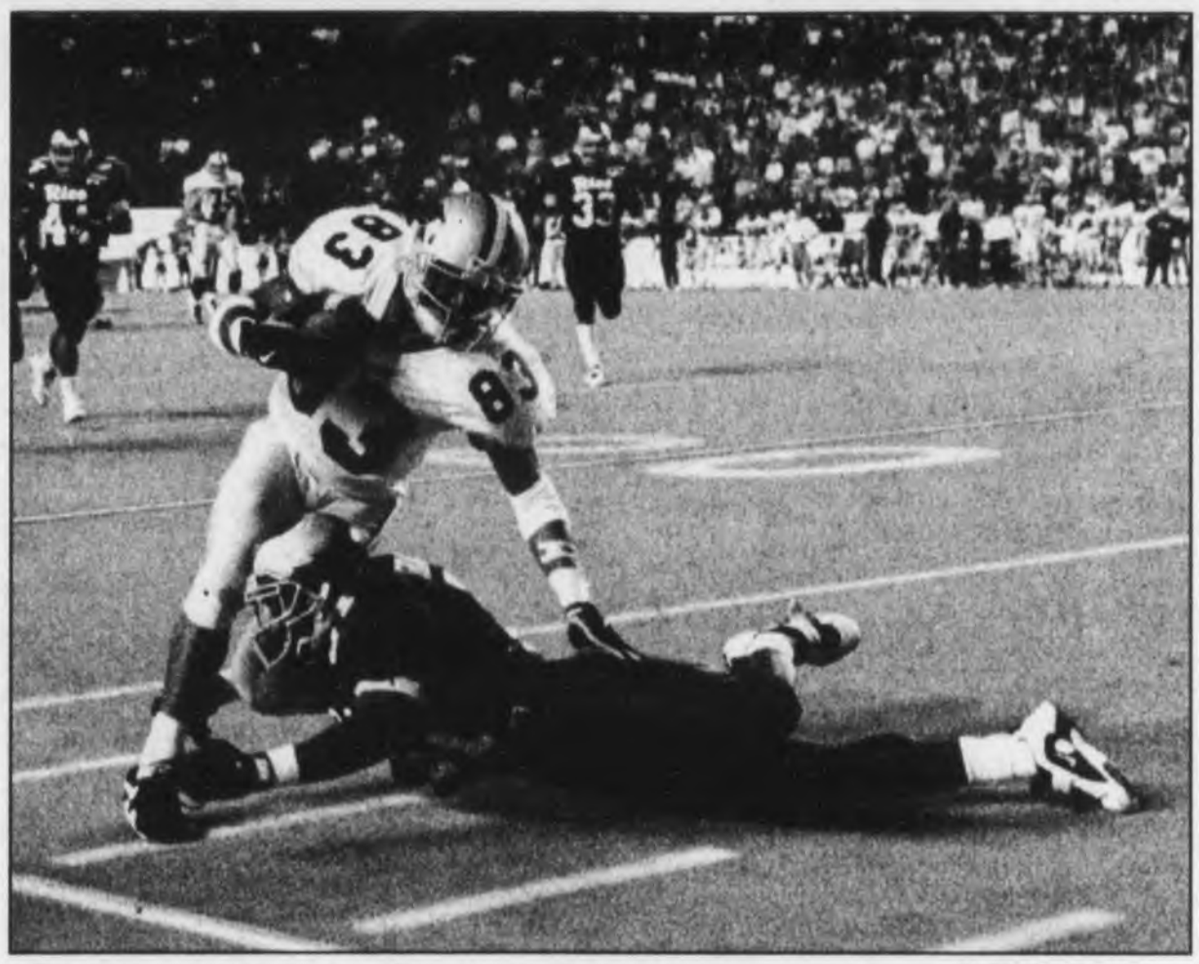
FACT: Only an incredible convergence of circumstances will forge either of these teams into national-championship contenders.

For K-State to even get the chance to play for a title, Notre Dame must lose. Otherwise, Sugar takes the Irish and the Florida/Florida State winner.

An unbeaten Big 10 champion winning the Rose Bowl could mean K-State — even with a perfect record — finishes no better than No. 3.

If Dame loses, the Wildcats can go Sugar and play a Florida team. But even a K-State win puts the Cats behind an undefeated Michigan, Ohio State or Penn State.

Think a team can rise from the bottom of the polls simply by virtue of an undefeated season in a power conference? Think again.



Don Nehlen's West Virginia team tried in 1993. Despite wins over Virginia Tech, Syracuse, Boston College and Miami, West Virginia could rise no higher than No. 4 in the polls. Its Sugar Bowl loss was irrelevant. The Orange Bowl match-up between Florida State (which had one loss) and Nebraska would decide the national championship.

The Big 12 has name but no game. Not that the teams aren't good. Trust me, no one wants to play the Cornhuskers or the Aggies or the Wildcats.

But the superconference's inaugural season is a bust, any way you play it.

KEVIN LOCKETT, K-State wide receiver, dances along the out-of-bounds line while trying to break the grasp of Rice's Warrick Franklin Saturday night in Rice Stadium, in Houston. Against Rice, Lockett became the school's all-time leader in receiving yardage with 2,460 yards in his career.

Cats shut down Rice wishbone

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

K-State coach Bill Snyder said to defeat Rice the Cats would have to stop the flying wishbone. Or the wishbone. Or the spread-option offense. Whatever it's called, it needed to be shut down.

The Cats succeeded.

In its 34-7 victory over Rice on Saturday at Rice Stadium, K-State held the Owls to just 224 yards of total offense. As expected, most of their yardage came on the ground — 165 yards. Only nine of those yards came courtesy of a fullback.

"To stop any wishbone, you have to shut down the fullback. If you take the fullback out of the equation, you've gone a long way," co-defensive coordinator Bob Cope said.

That equation was left incomplete as Rice's fullbacks were held virtually in check by the Cats' defense. The plan of attack to stop the fullback fell mostly upon defensive ends Nyle Wiren and Thad Swazer, who pinched inside one of the defensive tackles and clogged the middle.

Starting fullback Spencer George led the Owls in rushing before Saturday's game. But Saturday, George found his ability to gain yards stuffed. He was the least successful rusher on the Owls' offense, with two attempts and no gain.

By shutting down the fullback, K-State forced the Owls to run their option to the outside, turning the game into a test of speed and wills.

"I think we did a nice job controlling the fullback and got the ball to the perimeter and ran it down," co-defensive coordinator Mike Stoops said.

In stopping the wishbone, all players have a specific responsibility — a specific player they are assigned to stop — essential to shutting down the offensive scheme.

If all the players do their part, the option is rendered useless.

"It's for the most part stopped. It can be that simple or as complex as you want," said sophomore linebacker Travis Ochs, who finished the game with seven tackles, four of them unassisted.

Leading the Cats in tackles against Rice was senior linebacker DeShawn Fogle

"I just did what I was supposed to do," Fogle said.

What he was supposed to do was to focus on the quarterback.

"Everybody had an assignment," he said. "Sometimes the quarterback came to my side, and sometimes I had to go after him.

For the first time under Coach Bill Snyder, K-State came out firing on all cylinders in its first road game of the season as the Wildcats rolled over Rice Saturday, 34-7.

Canty

But what was a 14-0 lead at the half crumbled to a 14-7 lead with only 4:58 remaining in the third.

K-State was bored. Snyder had his own way to describe the Cats offense.

"Sound asleep. Not very good," he said.

Rice came out of the half ready to play. Owls coach Ken Hatfield corrected some things. And the officiating crew, made up of entirely Western Athletic Conference officials, helped the Rice contingent out on several occasions.

"At one point I was a little skeptical about what was going on," K-State cornerback Chris Canty said. "It was scary for a little while."

But a Canty 70-yard kickoff return kick-started the Wildcat offense following Rice's 84-yard scoring drive.

"As soon as I caught the ball," Canty said, "I saw the line had created a seam. I just hit it."

Canty's 70-yard return was the third time in three games that a K-State kickoff returner returned for more than 60 yards. Mike Lawrence had returns of 66 yards against Cincinnati and Indiana State.

After Canty's return, the Wildcats woke up.

K-State went on to score three touchdowns in three consecutive possessions. And individual Wildcats went on to either set new records or tie old ones.

Senior receiver Kevin Lockett became the school's all-time leader in receiving yardage with 2,460 on a 9-yard touchdown pass in the fourth quarter, K-State's last touchdown.

Lockett passed Michael Smith for the lead, who had 2,457 yards during his career in 1988-91.

"It's about time," Lockett said. "It took too long."

Lockett also extended his streak for consecutive games with a reception to 36, tying former teammate Mitch Running's mark. He needs only 14 more catches to take the lead for career receptions.

With his three touchdown receptions, Jimmy Dean tied a school record for touchdown passes in a game. John Williams set the record in 1987, and Smith matched it in 1991.

With his 11th interception of his career, on the last play of the first half, Canty moved into third place on the Cats' career list.

Quarterback Brian Kavanagh tied Chad May, Paul Watson and himself on the school record board for touchdown passes in a game with four.

And it was a golden victory for Snyder, who won his 50th game as head of K-State's program.

But he wasn't happy with the win.

"We executed poorly and made silly mistakes. I think we had 6,500 yards of penalties," Snyder said.

Among those penalties was a facemask penalty to offensive lineman Ross Greenwood, who tangled up with Rice defensive tackle Jason Winship with 12:23 left in the third quarter. Greenwood and Winship were both ejected from the game.

"It is absolutely not right," Snyder said about the call. "Not right."

Defensive end Darren Howard was clipped and got hit from behind late in the fourth quarter, inciting Snyder to approach the officials about the call.

The play resulted in a penalty against the Wildcats for unsportsmanlike conduct and Howard being carried off the field.

No word was available on Howard's condition, but Snyder indicates the injury could be serious.

"He's not doing very well right now," he said about Howard.

"I'm worried."

K-State takes a week off before facing No. 8 Nebraska at KSU Stadium Oct. 5.

The Cornhuskers ended their reign at the top of the Associated Press poll after a 19-0 thrashing by then-No. 17 Arizona State. The Sun Devils moved into No. 6 on the poll with the upset.

Cats extend streak to 7, upset No. 21 Colorado State

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian

KIM ZSCHAU, swing hitter for K-State, attempts to send the ball back over Nikki McCleary. The Wildcats extended their winning streak to seven with wins against No. 21 Colorado State and Iowa.

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

K-State's volleyball team put its five-match winning streak on the line last weekend and came out on top at the First Bank Invitational in Lincoln, Neb., sweeping both Colorado State and Iowa.

The Wildcats' first test was against No. 21 Colorado State, which already owned wins over nationally ranked Pepperdine and Texas A&M.

But K-State was undaunted and unstoppable.

In what might have been their cleanest match of the season, the Cats crushed the Rams 15-2, 15-5, 15-6.

Led by middle blocker Kate DeClerk, who blasted 16 kills on 18 attempts with no errors, K-State hit an incredible .589 as a team. DeClerk's personal hitting percentage of .889 was only .028 shy of the school record.

"It just felt right," DeClerk said. "I can't explain it."

"And that wasn't like it was against Podunk U," Coach Jim Moore said. "We played a top-ranked team."

Sophomore middle blocker Val Wieck added 15 kills with no errors.

Sophomore swing hitter Kim Zschau and freshman middle blocker Abbie Brown each had 13 kills.

Despite having used his bench extensively last weekend, Moore made no substitutions against the Rams.

"That would have been the stupidest thing in the world," he said. "We had such incredible rhythm. If you sub in, you damage that rhythm."

And the subs were completely unnecessary. Although Colorado State hit a respectable .286, no Wildcat hit below .400, and half were above .579.

"The big thing about the Colorado State match is that it shows us what we are capable of," setter Devon Ryning said. "We came in against a good team and beat them on the road. We know we can beat the good teams, but this just reassures us."

Brown led K-State with five service aces. The Cats had no solo blocks, but Brown and DeClerk each had three block assists, and DeClerk led the team with nine digs.

Although the Wildcats once again swept their opponents Saturday night, 15-6, 15-11, 15-11, the match against Iowa was not as precise.

The Cats recorded 13 errors, compared to just eight the night before, and won the match with just 45 assists.

"It was not pretty," Moore said.

But Moore said the Cats, led by Ryning, did what they needed to win.

"They're a very solid team," Moore said of the Hawkeyes, "and had we not hung in there, they would have beat us.

"This was one of Devon's best matches in terms of winning a match," he said. "She dumped the ball when she needed to. She set at the right times and to the right people, doing what we needed to win."

DeClerk was the only Wildcat with double-digit kills, recording 15, and tied Wieck and Ryning with five block assists. Zschau's 14 digs were a team high, followed by 12 from DeClerk.

DeClerk and Ryning were both named to the all-tournament team.

While Moore acknowledges the wins are big — particularly the thrashing of Colorado State — he warns against making too much of an early match.

"To beat a top-25 team like that, that's a big win in our program," he said. "But it's still Sept. 20. Come talk to me again in December."

Moore will once again take his team on the road this week. The Wildcats open conference play at Colorado Friday, facing Nebraska Saturday night.

K-State's next home match will be Oct. 2 against the Kansas Jayhawks.

History professor judge for bluegrass festival

MIRANDA KENNEDY
staff reporter

Peter Knupfer went to a clothing-store opening in 1976 and joined a bluegrass band.

The band was playing for the opening, and the members asked Knupfer to play the fiddle with them.

"I knew two tunes then, so they were desperate," Knupfer, associate professor of history, said. "Within the next two months, I had to learn 40 or 50 songs, listening to records and playing with the band and stuff so we could go on stage."

Knupfer played fiddle in the band, Grass, Food and Lodging, based in Milwaukee, until 1980.

He was the 1976 Wisconsin fiddling champion and the 1995 Kansas fiddling champion.

He judged the fiddling contest Friday at the Walnut Valley Festival in Winfield.

> "I look for someone whose style stands out as clear and sonorous — sonorous meaning it sings. The violin really is a voice. It sings. To me the instrument is most appealing when it sings. To me a make-or-break performance is during a slow tune, like a waltz."
> • PETER KNUPFER
> PROFESSOR OF HISTORY

Knupfer has never competed in the fiddling contest in Winfield.

"I've gone down there four or five times just to pick with friends," he said. "That's been more than enough music for me."

Knupfer started playing the fiddle when he was in fourth grade and played through high school.

"I heard a recording of the Bach Double Violin Concerto and decided I was going to play it," he said.

"I started hacking away at this thing. I think I drove my mother and father crazy."

Knupfer said his parents always kept some kind of music playing.

"With all that around me, it was hard for me to avoid playing an instrument," he said.

Although his home was always filled with music, that isn't where Knupfer first learned to play.

"I was a victim of the public schools from fourth to seventh grade," he said.

From seventh grade through high school his great aunt, a classically trained violinist, taught him.

"She must have been about 70 when she started teaching me," Knupfer said. "She had arthritis in her hands, but she was still playing."

Knupfer put down his violin after high school.

His junior year in college he was inspired by a bluegrass fiddle player.

"By the time I graduated, I could hack out a tune on a fiddle," he said.

Now Knupfer plays in a bluegrass band called Wheatland.

"We get jobs once every decade or so," he said.

He is also starting to teach his 7- and 8-year-old daughters to play the fiddle.

Knupfer said he goes to festivals like the one in Winfield to play with friends and do some catching up.

Some of his friends from Chicago always put together an area where people can play at the Walnut Valley Festival.

"Stage Five is actually run by these characters from Chicago," he said.

"It's in the RV camping area. Every time I've been there they've had chili and refreshments. They tend to draw a pretty large crowd of pickers."

The Walnut Valley Festival was Knupfer's third time to judge a competition.

He said he would rather judge than compete in a fiddling contest.

When he's judging, he looks for a sense of individuality.

"I look for someone whose style stands out as clear and sonorous — sonorous meaning it sings," he said.

"The violin really is a voice. It sings. To me the instrument is most appealing when it sings. To me a make-or-break performance is during a slow tune, like a waltz."

shock," Henningsson said.

Students get so used to being in studio that their minds get closed to everything else, Murphy said.

Architecture students have the opportunity to get out of the studio for the second semester of their fourth year. They can opt to do an internship or study abroad. Henningsson and Crittenden have both chosen the latter. The two plan to travel to Prague next semester to study at the Czech Technical University. Henningsson cites Prague as a prime place to study architecture, since it is in eastern Europe and has been only in the past five years.

"It's basically untouched from the pre-war era," Henningsson said.

Students said they have found their passion for architecture is an expensive one. They spend about $50 a week on supplies, which is about $1,000 a semester ($1,400 including textbooks).

"We have to buy vinyl, lamps, pastels ... ," Murphy said. "We also have to build our own cabinets."

The College of Architecture has also taken cuts in funding recently, which means that even the most talented student in the field might go without a scholarship.

"We're as successful as the football team, except nobody wants to come watch us," Murphy said.

Success is a word that is not foreign to the students of Seaton Hall. The last four out of six SOL Traveling Fellowship awards, the architectural equivalent of the Rhodes scholarship, have gone to K-State students. This national award is worth $10,000.

The College of Architecture also puts together an educational journal about architecture called Oz. Designed by fourth- and fifth-year architecture students, the yearly publication features the writings of many prominent architects. The venture itself is not profitable, but the journal is highly regarded by architecture firms throughout the nation.

Though the rigors of studying architecture have taken its toll on many who have crossed its path, Murphy, Henningsson, Wagner and Crittenden said there's nothing else they'd rather do.

"I would not know what to do if I didn't have architecture," Henningsson said.

greater understanding of where the money would go."

Docking met with faculty and students and emphasized she was at K-State to listen rather than speak.

"I have not been in politics very long," Docking said. "But I have already noticed politicians often talk a lot, but don't really listen."

The statement elicited a laugh from Glickman and the crowd.

"Seriously," Docking said, "I am from a business background. I consider you my clients and want you to tell me the direction the research of your University should take."

Smith is a fifth-generation horseshoer and also trains horses.

His style of training goes back to his Native American roots. Smith said he sometimes talks to the horses in his native Cherokee language.

"It is a lot softer, more soothing language," Smith said.

Patience, strong knowledge of horse behavior and timing are important parts of his work.

"Time is of the essence," Smith said. "You have to become a part of that horse's environment."

Smith develops a need between himself and his equine student.

The horse learns to depend on him for everything from food to company.

His experience with horses is vital to training a wild horse to accept him. Smith said he can be on and riding a mustang within a week.

"You must be a master of your own body. You can't permit your body to react to danger or act frightened. The horse can detect it," Smith said.

"You cannot calm a horse unless you can calm yourself."

Smith works with horses in his spare time.

He is the assistant dean of students and director of counseling at Haskell Indian Nation University in Lawrence, where he has worked for 26 years.

Championships to qualify in the team scoring.

Lutz said she felt the crowd support was of significant importance.

"People had to get in their cars and make an effort and get to the spots," Lutz said. "It's incredible. It's a boost for every single one of these riders."

Saturday marked just the sixth-ever World Championship Equine Endurance Race, but it is a sport though, quickly gaining popularity worldwide.

"I think it's important that people understand that both the rider and the animal are well-conditioned and well-ared for," Lutz said.

"People need to be made aware of what the sport is and what athletes both the riders and the animals are," Lutz said.

Cash, FireNgold, and Danielle and Valerie Kanavy did their best Saturday to increase awareness across the country.

The Educational Opportunity Fund (EOF) was approved on May 19,1988 by the Kansas board of Regents. This fund will generate about $210,000 for allocation next fall. Approximately 1% of student tuition monies are returned to the University for:

1) Academic scholarships and fellowships for both graduate and undergraduate students.
2) Need-based grants, including assistance in the areas of special expenses or for groups of students who have been historically under-represented in higher education.
3) Salaries or grants for students participating in public and community service programs.
4) Salaries for students employed in campus student services.

Applications are due in the Office of Student Activities and Services located on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union by 4pm Sept. 27,1996. Applications received after this time will not be considered, irregardless of delays caused by campus mail or the U.S. Postal Service.

Please direct any questions concerning the EOF or the application process to the EOF committee Chairperson Aaron Otto at 532-6541

State weather hurts crops

SPEED

▶ Farmers statewide are eligible for federal low-interest emergency farm loans to cover crop losses brought on by drought and poor weather.

KENNY WENTWORTH
staff writer

The entire state of Kansas has been declared a disaster area for crop-loss purposes because of drought, frost, high winds and wildfires during an eight-month period last fall, winter and spring.

The office of Gov. Bill Graves said Monday that the designation by the U.S. Department of Agriculture makes farmers and ranchers in all 105 counties of the state eligible for low-interest farm emergency loans to help cover their losses.

Jim Shroyer, extension agronomist, said he thinks this decision has been a long time coming.

"It's about time. Looking back, it was a very tough year cropwise. This time last year, we already had a frost on the crops," Shroyer said.

The designation was requested by Graves July 2, and the USDA determined that in 95 counties agricultural producers sustained sufficient losses to warrant a primary-disaster designation, the governor's office said. The remaining 10 counties are contiguous to the 95, thus also qualifying.

The period of the designation covers Sept. 1, 1995, through April 30, 1996.

"In Kansas, we're used to dealing with adverse weather conditions, but not normally all at the same time," Graves said in a statement. "This declaration will provide some of the hardest-hit producers in our state an opportunity to stave off further losses."

Although some farmers did have a bad year, the difference in crop production was great.

"I hope people don't get the wrong idea that Kansas farmers are being spoiled. People know farmers who have had a good year and were also able to cash in on good wheat prices. It's just that most people didn't. Hopefully this will provide a safe haven for them. This year there was more variability in more than 20 years," Shroyer said.

In the past, Congress has given farmers direct payments for their losses. Not this year. Now family-sized agricultural operations in the state are eligible to be considered for low-interest loans from the federal government.

Each application will be considered on its own merit, USDA said, taking into account extent of Kenneth Jones, professor of history, brought life and distinction to K-State's South Asian studies.

Jones, a University distinguished professor, died at his home Sunday of cancer.

Lelah Dushkin, associate professor of anthropology, remembered Jones as the man who gave her direction when she wasn't sure where she wanted to teach.

Jones encouraged his friend and fellow scholar to visit the university he joined in 1965.

Weekend thefts violate lot security

ABBI HAKE
staff reporter

Three incidents of car theft Saturday morning left three K-State students missing a total of $7,030 in property.

Richard Herrman, University detective, said he assumes the three burglaries are related.

"It appears that two of them had windows broken out to gain entry," Herrman said.

In the third theft, a Slim Jim was used to gain entry.

Two of the thefts took place in the D-2 parking lot on campus. The third took place in D-5.

Kim Rafter, senior in criminal justice, said she she found out her 1986 Nissan 200SX was burglarized when K-State police officers discovered it.

Upon gaining entry by smashing her passenger windows, Rafter said, the thieves took around 200 compact discs, three cameras, two pagers, a stereo, a CD player, clothes and a car phone.

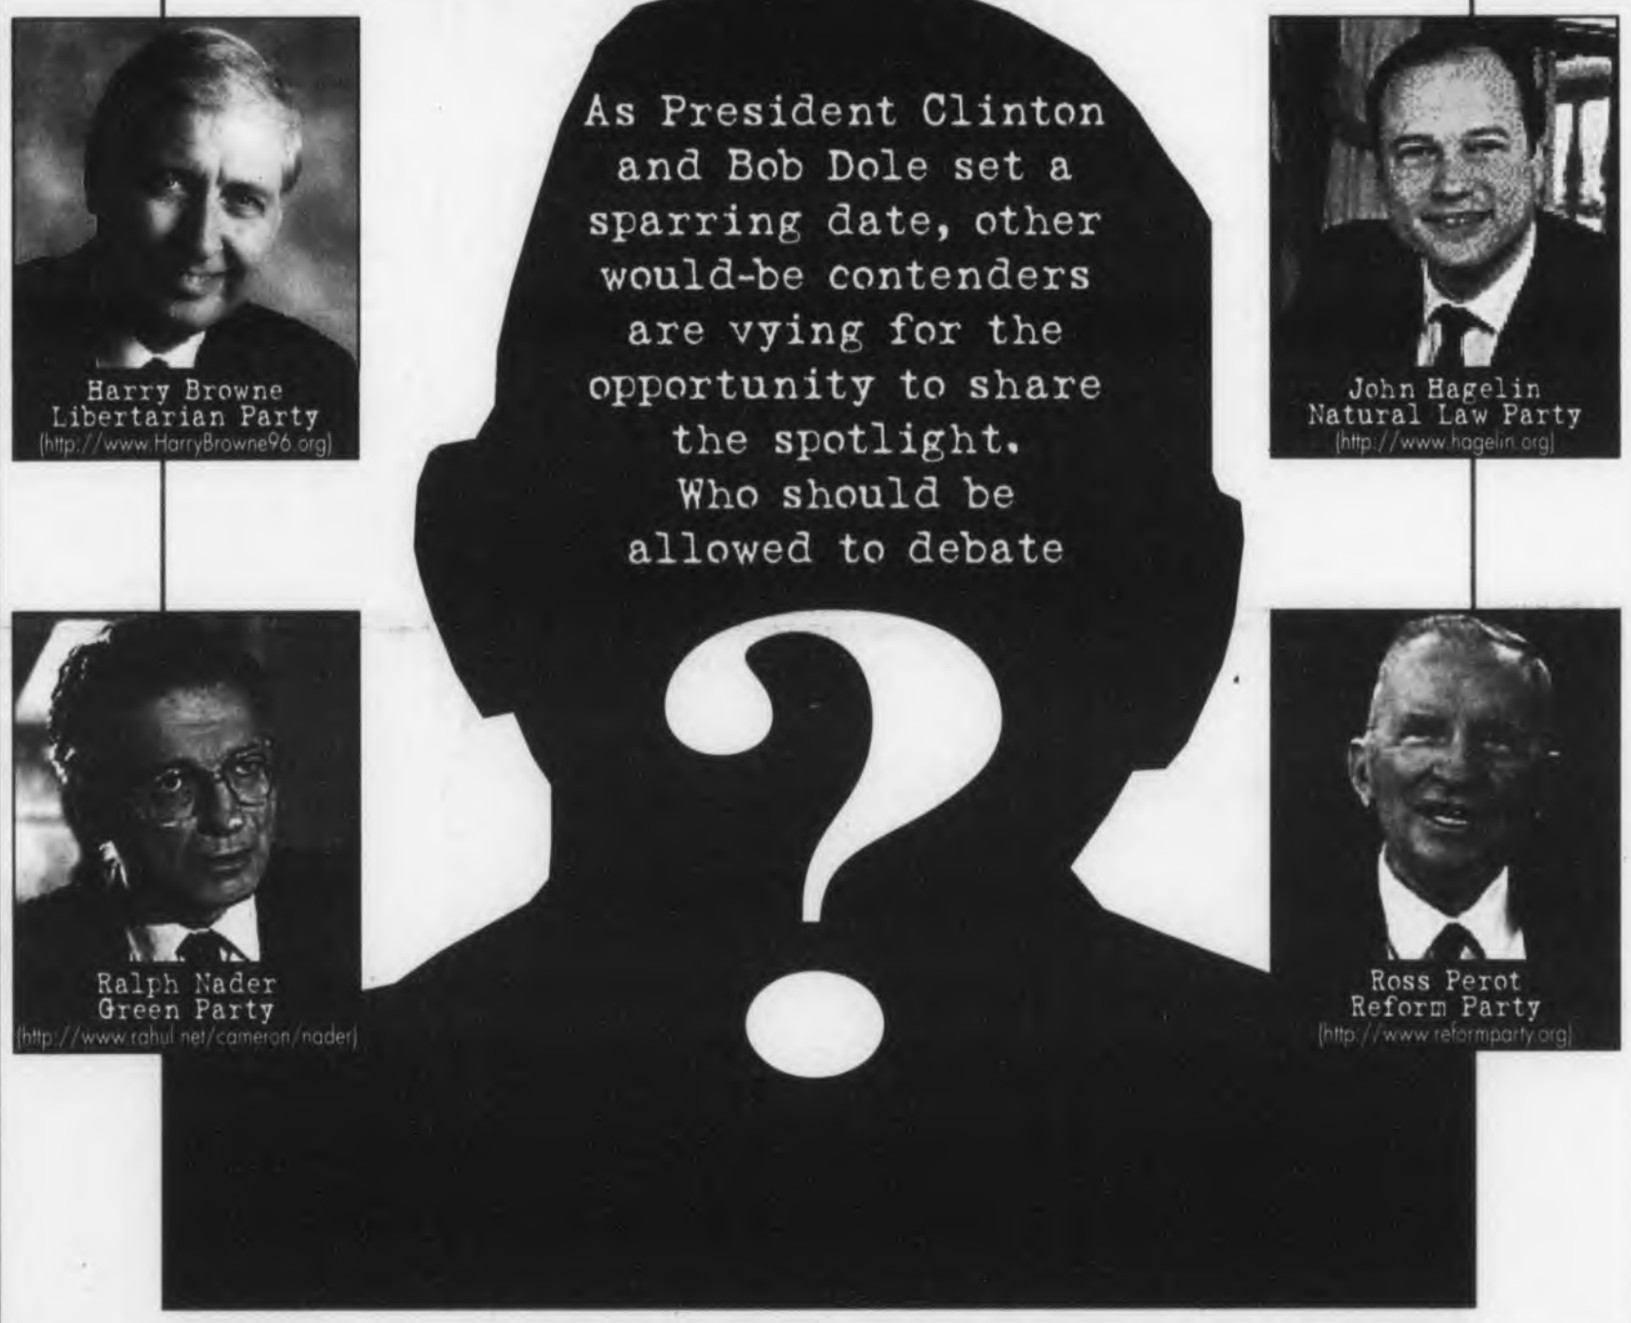
In addition to these stolen items, Rafter said there was extensive damage done to her dash and front console.

"The ash tray is in three pieces," Rafter said.

Joel Wentworth, freshman in chemical engineering, was also a victim of the Saturday morning car thefts.

Wentworth said thieves smashed in the back windows of his Chevrolet S-10 pickup to gain access to his CD player, amplifier, sub-woofer box and radar detector.

Herrman said police found one latent fingerprint and a blood sample from Wentworth's truck.



"It won't tell us anything unless the perpetrator has a criminal record," Herrman said.

Some things can be done to lessen the chances of car thefts, Herrman said.

"If it's a pull-out stereo, they need to take it into their room with them," Herrman said. "And don't advertise that you've got a nice stereo system."

How to protect a car

1. Park in well-lighted areas.
2. Invest in a car alarm.
3. Take valuable items out of your car when you leave the car. If you must keep valuables in the car, hide them from view.

▶ STUDENT GOVERNMENT

Establishing lines of communication off to difficult start

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

Student Body President Chris Hansen's attempts to get more students involved in student government has had a slow start.

Hansen has planned to implement four ideas — Feedback Fridays, an e-mail discussion group, club revisitations, and a Student Governing Association web page to help get more students involved in student government.

> "Considering that only 13.9 percent of the student body voted in last years campus elections, I am hopeful that these ideas will help get more students involved in campus government."

> STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT

The first event that was held was "Feedback Friday," where students from clubs and organizations were invited to have lunch with Hansen and informally discuss issues and topics that were of concern to students, clubs and organizations.

The response was low at the first two meetings, as attendance was sparse.

Hansen said that he hopes by next Friday, Feedback Friday will be more publicized and more students will attend.

Hansen also hopes to introduce an a e-mail discussion group on the Internet using the University's LISTSERV service, as well as the SGA Web page.

He has offered to revisit any club that would like him and his vice president, Aaron Otto, to visit and address any concern that a club or organization might have.

"Considering that only 13.9 percent of the student body voted in last years campus elections, I am hopeful that these ideas will help get more students involved in campus government," Hansen said.

Kristen Henderson, junior in animal science and Pre-Veterinary Medicine Club president, said Hansen's new ideas might work, but only on an individual basis.

"Speaking for the Pre-Vet Club, it would be better if someone would come to our club meeting and explain some ways for us to get involved. We didn't know about Feedback Fridays or any of the other ways to get involved."

Henderson said some of the main reasons students

Local Libertarians seek recognition story by Dana Lehner

Some local businessmen are running for office on the Libertarian ticket.

Charles and Art Clack own Lair Gauche in Aggieville. Charles Clack is a Third District House of Representatives candidate and Art is running in the second district.

The Clack brothers said the object is success, not winning. To succeed is not to gain office, but to get ideas into the open and make the other candidates accept them.

"Winning the election is not the goal," Charles Clack said. "The goal is getting the word out so we can win the next election or force other parties to get on the right side of the issue."

"Success is to achieve a more free society," Art Clack said, "to have less violence and less coercion, both private and official. In other words, I want less crime and less intimidation of the government. The primary concern for most candidates is staying in office. As a non-office holder, we don't have those constraints. We can say what we think."

This attitude toward winning the election is helpful, since politicians and scholars agree that third-party candidates don't have much chance.

> The chances of getting the Libertarians elected at the local level are very good. We have a two-tiered approach.
> • BILL WINTER
> DIRECTOR OF COMMUNICATIONS FOR THE LIBERTARIAN PARTY

"We understand that the odds of Mr. (Harry) Brown getting elected to the presidency are long," said Bill Winter, director of communications for the Libertarian Party, said. "The goal is to eventually become a majority party in this country. If not Harry Brown in 1996, then maybe another candidate in 2000."

Because the electoral college system does not select the candidate with the most votes, but rather the candidate who wins the state elections, it is difficult to defeat candidates from the established parties.

"Under the electoral college, it is a state-by-state race that is under the plurality rule," Joseph Unekis, professor of political science, said. "To have any kind of impact they have to win a state. What is more realistic is that they come in second or third in the state and they draw votes away from one of the candidates, throwing the state to the other."

A third-party candidate can be a major annoyance to candidates, and can alter the whole outlook of the race.

"Bob Dole's people don't want Perot in the presidential debates," Unekis said.

"They are afraid that he would draw votes away from Dole rather than from Clinton," he said.

The Democratic, Republican, Reform, Libertarian, and Natural Law Parties all have candidates on the ballot.

"Clinton's going to win," Unekis said. "He is going to win based on the public polls. The last guy who came from this far back was Harry Truman, which was a miracle. Plus, Truman was president. Having said that, there are still seven weeks to go."

Third-party candidates are at a disadvantage because they are not only facing other parties but they are facing the President as well.

"The President has the advantage of being the President," Unekis said.

"They're not running against Bill Clinton, they're running against President Bill Clinton."

However, the third parties' goals aren't just to put someone in the Oval Office. They realize that you have to build from the ground up to become a force in the political world.

"The chances of getting Libertarians elected at the local level are very good," Winter said.

"We have a two-tiered approach. The long-term process of building a new major party and immediate process of getting out our goals to the public," he said.

"At the top you have a candidate like Harry Brown who you hope can win as many votes as possible and get those ideas out to the public," he said.

Perot files lawsuit against candidates story by Associated Press

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Ross Perot filed a federal lawsuit Monday seeking a court order barring presidential debates from going forward without him. He argued that locking him out will only deepen the nation's cynicism about government.

Reform Party nominee Perot and running mate Pat Choate filed the lawsuit in U.S. District Court.

"We are going to fight this all the way to the end," said one of Perot's lawyers, Jamin Raskin, who is a professor of constitutional law at American University.

The lawsuit contends the bipartisan Commission on Presidential Debates violated its own rules in barring Perot from participating in two scheduled presidential debates and Choate from participating in one vice presidential debate.

Those rules require the commission use objective standards for recommending who participates. Perot's camp contends the commission used a mostly subjective standard of including only those candidates with a realistic chance of winning.

Perot on Sunday said he would file the suit because "we will not sit by."

The Texas billionaire, who received 19 percent of the vote in 1992 as an independent candidate, said he was in the race to win — but at the same time seemed to cast doubts on his prospects by setting a goal of drawing 25 percent of the vote.

However, his national coordinator, Russell Verney, said Monday at a news conference on the courthouse steps, "We still have a strategy to win."

NATION WORLD

• MISSILE-DEFENSE DEAL. Secretary of State Warren Christopher announced a milestone agreement Monday clarifying the legality of certain American weapons used to defend against slower-flying ballistic missiles. Washington and Moscow have argued for years over identifying those anti-missile defensive systems, such as the U.S. Army's Patriot air-defense system, that are allowed under the 1972 ABM Treaty and those capable of shooting down long-range missiles, which are expressly limited under the treaty.

• LUCID LEAVES ORBITAL LABRATORY. Astronaut Shannon Lucid finally says goodbye today to the orbital laboratory she loved, the treadmill she couldn't stand and life aboard Russia's Mir space station. Lucid, a 53-year-old biochemist and mother of three grown children, has set a U.S. space endurance record and a world record for a woman. If Atlantis lands as scheduled on Thursday, she will have spent 188 days in orbit, 48 more than planned because of mechanical and weather problems that kept the shuttle grounded.

• EXPLOSIVES FOUND IN CONNECTION WITH IRA. Thwarting what they called an imminent attack, police seized 10 tons of explosives in a series of dawn raids on suspected IRA hideouts Monday. The discovery cast doubt on speculation that the Irish Republican Army was moving toward a new cease-fire. Prime Minister John Major said the raid also undercut claims by the IRA-allied Sinn Fein Party that it is committed to peace. Police seized large quantities of weapons and arrested five men. One man was shot and killed.

• MUSLIMS SHOT DURING WORSHIP. Masked men opened fire on Sunni Muslim worshipers Monday, killing 21 people and seriously wounding at least 33 others. No one claimed responsibility for the attack, but local police believe it was linked to recent violence between Shiite and Sunni Muslims, whose religious rivalry dates to the 7th century and the inception of Islam. Early morning prayers had just begun at the Majid Al-Khair mosque in the southern Punjab town of Multan, about 270 miles south of Islamabad, when the gunmen leaped out of black cars and began spraying bullets.

• U.N. FACES ISSUES DURING GENERAL ASSEMBLY. Facing bankruptcy and a crisis in leadership, the United Nations launches a three-week debate today focusing on survival in an era of diminishing resources. General Assembly President Razali Ismail of Malaysia will welcome the 14 presidents, 16 prime ministers and 97 foreign ministers scheduled to attend the annual world forum. Opening day speakers include Colombian President Ernesto Samper and Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland. The gathering of the 185-member General Assembly also offers a chance for leaders to meet privately with their counterparts on issues such as global trade, the Middle East and Bosnia.

SPORTS

• DeCLERK NAMED PLAYER OF THE WEEK. On Monday, K-State middle blocker Kate DeClerk was named the Big 12 and the VCA National Player of the Week. DeClerk led the Wildcats against No. 21 Colorado State and Iowa last weekend in Lincoln, Neb. DeClerk was the first-ever Wildcat to win the national honor last year, and adds her name to the prestigious list for the second time.

• CANTY NAMED BIG 12 DEFENSIVE PLAYER OF THE WEEK. K-State cornerback Chris Canty was named Monday as the Big 12 defensive player of the week for his all-around performance in the Wildcats' 34-7 victory at Rice. Canty made his second interception of the season and returned it for a 44-yard gain. Canty also returned three punts for 37 yards and ran back a kickoff for a season-high 70 yards. Canty also played wide receiver, catching one pass for 22 yards. He generated 173 yards for the Cats.

• NEBRASKA KICKOFF CHANGED. For the second time this season, ABC will televise a K-State game. The Oct. 5 game at KSU Stadium against Nebraska will be broadcast regionally, starting at 2:30 p.m., ABC officials announced Monday. The game was originally slated for a 1:10 p.m. kickoff.

CORRECTIONS

• The announcement of the Morris Dees speech in Monday's Collegian indicated his appearance was sponsored by the Lou Douglas Lecture Series. Actually, it is sponsored by three groups: the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, the Dorothy Thompson Civil Rights Lecture Series and the University Distinguished Lecturers Series.

• Due to a reporter's error in Monday's article titled "Adviser leaves Foundation after 17 years," it was incorrectly reported that Gary Hellebust, executive vice president and chief operating officer of the KSU Foundation, is conducting a national search for a chief executive officer. It should have been reported that is there a national search for a chief development officer. The Collegian regrets these errors.

Aqua Workout

Diving into a low-impact workout, participants tone, build endurance without the sweat

Water aerobics offers a low-impact option for people to improve their cardiovascular fitness and tone at the same time.

Recreational Services offers water aerobics at noon and 8 p.m. every Monday, Tuesday and Thursday at the Natatorium.

The classes are taught by certified instructors, and there is no cost for anyone with a user-ID card, said Anne Camp, aqua aerobics instructor.

"Aqua aerobics offers lots of variety to a whole variety of people," Camp said. "One thing that is so nice about it is that it's not the same thing like running, so you don't get bored."

Water aerobics is structured like land aerobics.

"We do a warm-up and a stretching routine, then increase the intensity until we reach target heart rate for 20 minutes. Then we start bringing it down and cool off. We end with some deep-water exercise," Camp said.

The benefit of this type of aerobics is exercising two different ways at one time. The aerobic part gives a good workout, and the water helps to tone.

"There's resistance to your movements, and it offers a cardiovascular workout where plain toning exercises don't," said Robin Quinn, assistant director of fitness and aquatics.

Aqua aerobics is also safe for anyone. There is little to no impact and low stress. It is good for joint problems and works the heart just as hard as running does, Quinn said.

"It's different than regular aerobics, which only works you against gravity. There's no impact and you can get resistance from all sides," Camp said. "By the time you, leave you'll work every muscle in your body."

Aqua aerobics can work for anyone, Camp said.

"We have college students, 40- to 50-year-olds, men and women, and even non-swimmers," Camp said. "It's a good way to work the body safely, and we've never had anyone drown."

No matter who you are, you can tailor your own workout level. This type of aerobics allows for tailoring the workout level to fit the person.

"You can be as strenuous as you want because you can work at your own intensity and pace," said Deanne Rezac, senior in hotel and restaurant management.

Water aerobics is a way to alleviate exercise boredom.

"It's really fun. Everyone's laughing and talking," Rezac said. "It's a good way to exercise and cool off at the same time, and you don't get all hot, sweaty and gross."

Consistency reaps rewards for Royal Purple yearbook

▪ Judges award 1996 yearbook highest gold-medalist rating

Dana Lehner
staff reporter

K-State's yearbook, the Royal Purple, gained another notch in its belt early last week. The 1996 edition was honored with the highest gold-medalist rating from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association's critique service.

"It is so incredibly exciting," said Sarah Kallenbach, senior in print journalism and editor in chief of the Royal Purple's 1995-96 edition. "To work so hard at something that is basically your life for a year and then to realize that it is impressing other people is a good feeling."

Kallenbach said she was excited about impressing the judges but is more interested in impressing students at K-State.

"It feels really good for about 15 minutes," Kallenbach said. "Then you realize it is time to start on a new book. We do the yearbook for the student body, and as long as they are happy with it, then we are happy as well. The awards are just an extra bonus."

The Royal Purple was complimented on its use of modern graphics and layouts and the use of color photography. The staff also won marks in concept, design, writing, coverage and photography.

"Basically, a judge goes through our yearbook and finds the things she likes and the things she dislikes," Kallenbach said. "The award is based on the number of points we got. The critique had so many great suggestions. The thing that stood out was the coverage of campus. Good coverage of a campus of 20,000 students impressed them."

Kallenbach said recognition was not the only thing the Royal Purple would receive from this award.

"Most of the people don't realize it," Kallenbach said. "The Royal Purple is in the top 1 percent of yearbooks in the nation. It has won the top three awards the last seven years in a row. It helps in the fact that it is more of a boost for us. It helps us put out a better book next time."

The CSPA is a division of Columbia University in New York and is used to improve student publications.

IN OUR OPINION

Election coverage will highlight information instead of opinion

Election campaigning will kick into full swing next week, and so will Collegian coverage of the elections.

We thought this would be a good time to let you all know how we will cover them as to ensure it is fair and unbiased.

WHY WE CARE

The Collegian will do everything it can to ensure that you get the most fair and accurate coverage during November's general election.

Our goal for November's general election is to give our readers the facts. Just the facts, ma'am.

First, there will be no letters to the editor in support of, or in opposition to, a candidate on the opinion page. Nor will there be any guest columns from candidates.

The Collegian has also opted not to publicize its preferences this year. Instead, we have chosen to inform rather than persuade.

We will publish an election guide on Oct. 29. The purpose of this guide will be to outline and inform you about the candidates and their stances on the issues that are important to you.

As for the news coverage, we will try our very best to ensure equal coverage of all the candidates. Our responsibility as a newspaper is to get the most fair and accurate information to you, and we will do that to the best of our ability.

Please let us know if there is an issue you would like to be covered. Let us know if you feel we have been unfair or are favoring one candidate over another.

Lou Douglas Lecture Series brings diverse speakers, views

MY VIEW

Lach
FRANQUEMONT

Several weeks ago, I mentioned many of the great opportunities available to students here at K-State. Tonight is one of those great opportunities.

At 7:30 tonight in Forum Hall, the Lou Douglas Lecture Series will be presenting civil-rights lawyer Morris Dees.

For those of you unfamiliar with the Lou Douglas Lecture Series, it is a yearly series presented in the fall on topics such as human rights, social justice, world peace and international development.

Along with the Landon Lecture Series, it provides the students at K-State and the residents of Manhattan one of the best opportunities anywhere to hear about current issues from nationally renowned speakers.

The Lou Douglas Lecture Series was founded in 1980 to honor one of the original founders of UFM. Lou Douglas was a distinguished professor of political science at K-State who was also very active in the political and legislative processes of Kansas.

In addition to being a civil-rights lawyer, tonight's speaker is the co-founder of the Southern Poverty Law Center. This is a nonprofit group that is involved with lawsuits involving civil rights violations.

Dees first came to national prominence on the civil rights front when Ku Klux Klan members lynched a black man in Mobile, Ala., in 1981. Led by Dees, the Southern Poverty Law Center sued the KKK and won a precedent-setting $7 million judgment.

Since this time the Southern Poverty Law Center has engaged in numerous lawsuits against the KKK and other hate-based groups. Dees has received numerous death threats and had his offices burned.

It has paid off, though, and Dees is now known as the man who bankrupted the KKK.

Dees has also written extensively on the growing militia movement.

After the recent events, such as the Freemen of Montana and the Oklahoma City bombing, the importance of this issue cannot be understated.

Dees will also be meeting with students at 3:30 today in the Big 8 Room. This will provide a more informal chance to ask questions and meet the speaker.

> "Whether you agree with Dees' views or actions, you owe it to yourself to become more informed about them."

Whether you agree with Dees' views or actions, you owe it to yourself to become more informed about them.

Future Lou Douglas Series lectures will feature the Deputy Secretary of Education, Madeline Kunin, on Oct. 8; Dr. Michael Apple, professor of education at the University of Wisconsin, on Oct. 22; and Edward Luck, the senior policy advisor of the United Nations Association of the United States on Nov. 19.

Here at K-State, we have the wonderful opportunity to continue our learning once we leave the classroom. Don't let these opportunities get away from you.

In recent years the attendance at lectures has been hit-and-miss. For speakers such as Ross Perot, it has been great but speakers that few have heard of on the evening news, it's often quite dismal.

Don't let this trend continue.

As much or more can be learned from the latter as the former.

Who says there's no night life in Manhattan?

Performance series offers Aggieville bar-scene alternative

Imagine for me the distinct pop and hiss of a can of beer being opened. The television is on but muted, and Jimmy Buffett plays softly on the stereo. Beneath that the subtle click of the remote control is audible.

Then someone pipes up and says, "Man! Manhattan has to be about the most boring hole on the face of the earth. It's dinky. There's nothing here, and if I ever discovered anything to do, I'd probably keel over dead from shock before I even got to do it. This place sucks."

It's still so early in the semester, yet I'm already starting to detect this sort of attitude toward Manhattan. And it makes me feel like some sorry bumpkin, because if you come from where I come from, where there aren't many variations like hills and trees to obstruct your view of all the nothing there is to do, you know that Manhattan is a veritable mecca of diversion.

On a day-to-day basis, yes, a person must often rely on her own creativity to keep herself entertained, but it's never too big a stretch.

Between the theaters and the video stores, there are several thousand movies to choose from on any given night.

There's Aggieville — our own little Vatican of youth, coffee and bars. Incidentally, Aggieville also has a very cool, used bookstore with a cat.

Better yet, a college town such as Manhattan is always full of new and interesting student types, who are sure to have ideas even when you draw a blank.

Although I'm small town and arguably interesting, I do have an entertainment idea: McCain's 1996-97 Performance Series begins this Friday with the return of the Reduced Shakespeare Company.

I'm not trying to be its advertisement, but McCain events were something I didn't discover until late spring of my freshman year at K-State.

I had to go to McCain Auditorium to see a production of Henrik Ibsen's "A Doll's House" for class.

I don't know what hole my head was stuck in before that, but I do wish someone had pulled it out a little sooner.

If I had known how impressed I would be, I would have gone voluntarily. After that, I did.

For the past two years, my friends and I have done McCain's Select-a-Series, in which we chose from seven to 17 of the season's events and received a 10-percent discount on the price of every ticket. That's a 10-percent discount on tickets that are already half price for students due to the support of the fine arts fee we all pay.

So for about 45 percent of what the general public pays, we've seen musicals like "Jesus Christ Superstar" and heard jazz from the Count Basie Orchestra, not to mention all the wonderful plays, operas and chamber music we've had the opportunity to take in.

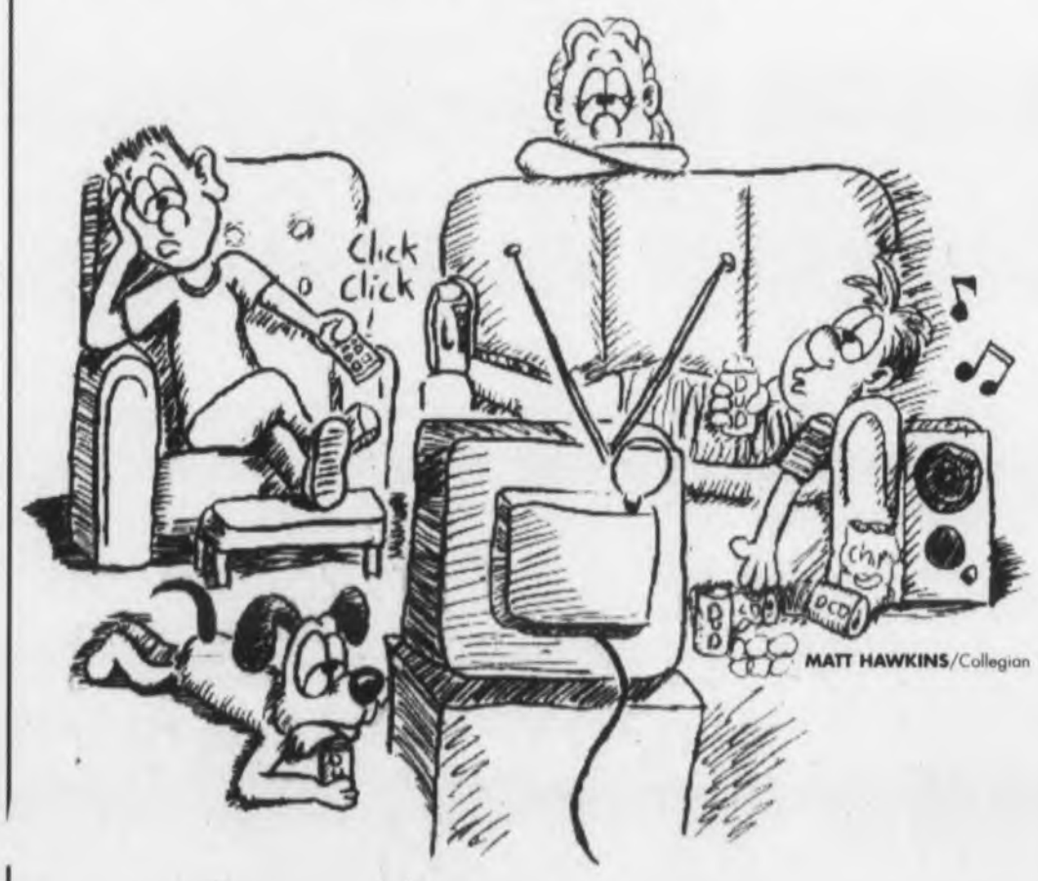
Regardless of the kind of performance or how well I liked it when it was through, there was always a thrill in the simple fact that it was a live performance. It's a difficult sensation to describe.

The best comparison I can make is to that of really great conversation. The person you're talking to is right there in front of you.

There's an underlying tension, because one of you might go and flub it up at any moment, yet that's part of the energy you've created between yourselves.

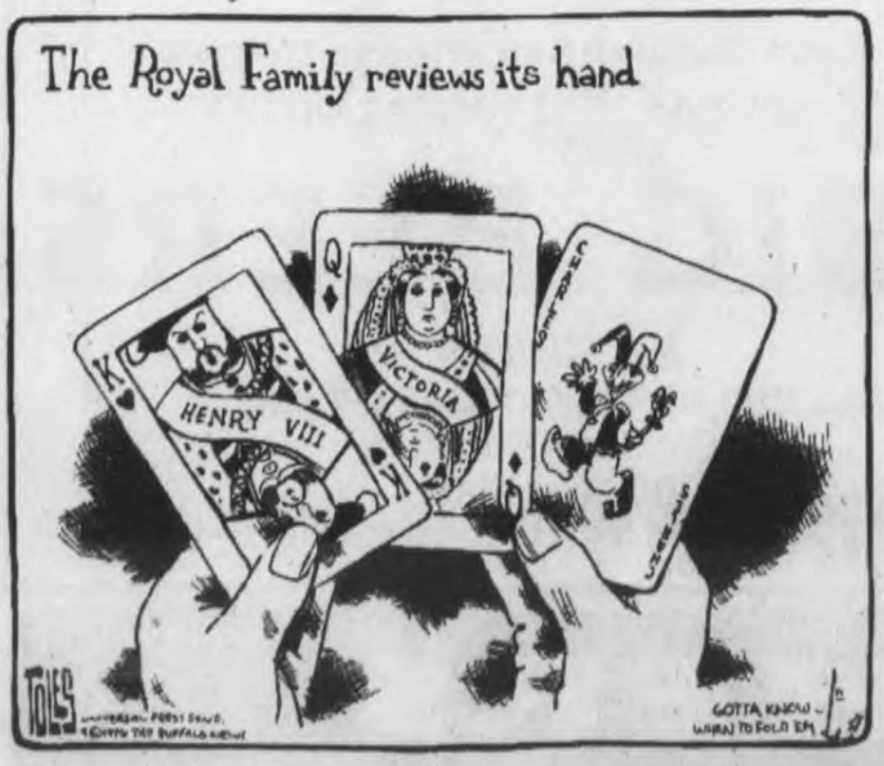
You could sit in your room with the television on, the stereo on and a couple of people with a buzz at either side, and still you'd never quite match the energy of live performances.

At McCain events, there's also the bonus of people-watching at no extra cost.



You're likely to see everything from evening gowns to ratty jeans at any one performance.

Personally, I like to dress sort of middle-of-the-road in a skirt and blouse, but I think seeing both ends of the spectrum represented is a positive sign. It shows that our campus is one that is reaching out to students.



After all, just because someone is a casual, ratty-jeans kind of person is no reason why she should deny herself the pleasure of live performance.

And just because it's claimed that there's nothing to do in Manhattan doesn't mean there isn't.

Union EXPANSION

Construction for the $10.5-million renovation is projected to begin in about one year. These plans show the major changes that will open up the main floor.

Designs are coming together for the K-State Student Union's new look.

An enhancement project for the Union, which was approved by students two years ago, is nearing the construction phase.

Students voted to pay $23 a year for 20 years to total the $9.2 million approved for the project.

Bernard Pitts, director of the Union, said that last March the Kansas Board of Regents allowed the fees accumulated in these first two years to also be collected, adding $1.3 million to the budget.

Pitts said construction for the $10.5-million renovation is projected to begin in about one year. The top three priorities for improvements are in infrastructure, food service and the K-State Union Bookstore.

Ebert Associates architectural firm, which designed renovations for the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, was hired to work on designs.

Right now, a footprint, or concept plan, has been developed by the architects.

Mechanical, electrical and structural engineers and other architectural consultants gathered in a situation referred to as charretts, where ideas and concepts were discussed and the concept plan was developed.

The majority of renovations evident on the concept plan are on the main floor of the Union.

"The whole intent of the footprint is to try to make the main floor as open as possible," Pitts said.

The removal of the north-south wall enclosing the Stateroom cafeteria dining area will open up the main floor and allow a view of a new food court. The core of the food court will be at the back of the dining area, where the three Stateroom meeting rooms are now.

A plan for a courtyard area, where the check-cashing counter is now, will call for the removal of that wall as well. Seating and a mobile coffee bar, the Stateroom Express, will be there for students and Union visitors to purchase Starbuck's coffee and espresso.

This openness will let people see what is happening across the main floor when they enter the building.

A visual path will continue through the north end of the Stateroom when that wall is replaced with glass.

With the new food-court location planned where dining is now, a flip-flop will put seating where the Stateroom grill area is. From there, people will be able to look outside to a new plaza area.

> "The whole intent of the footprint is to try to make the main floor as open as possible."
> • BERNARD PITTS
> DIRECTOR OF THE UNION

Pitts said the plaza concept, accounting for $1 million of the budget, will be between Seaton Hall and the Union. It will house more dining space and a programming area where there will be a tiered stage area for free speech or programs.

Pitts said configuration of the northwest stairwell in this area will give the opportunity to view activity below and above.

"We want people always to sense that this is a building of activity," he said.

Nearly every area of the main floor will undergo significant change.

The information counter will become a convenience store. The store will also have exterior access so the Union can close and keep the convenience store open.

The Union Art Gallery will be relocated, and the space will become a full-service bank.

Pitts said the copy center will move into conjunction with the Union Bookstore so course packets can be sold on bookstore shelves. Night and weekend hours at the copy Center, therefore, can be eliminated.

Computer sales, now in the back of the Union Bookstore will move to the current copy center area to become a retail computer store.

"Past sales have indicated that this has potential to be a stand-alone point of sale," Pitts said.

Other retail stores, such as a travel agency, hair-care business or floral business, could also make appearances during Union expansion.

The enhancement project is in the schematic-design stage.

"Now that you have the footprint, you have to see whether or not, architecturally, these different areas can have appropriate relationship with each other," Pitts said.

"We're about 90-percent completed with that."

When the schematic design is finished, the construction drawings will be designed.

The plans are expected to be submitted to prospective contractors by August 1997. Bids will be received in September, and construction will begin in October.

Students can expect to see structural renovations completed by fall 1999.

During construction, service areas throughout the main floor will be forced to move around.

In the opening plans for enhancement, 20,000 square feet of new space was requested. Additional square footage would cost $125 to $150 per square foot.

However, existing storage areas in the Union Bookstore and vending services could be claimed as space for the expansions.

"By reclaiming that and replenishing it by $40 per square foot, we felt that we could claim about 5,000 square footage and eliminate need for additional square footage," Pitts said.

An 11,000-square-foot off-campus facility was purchased to relocate vending services. This location will also serve as the receiving area for the Union Bookstore.

Pitts said the infrastructure renovations will account for 52 percent of the project. This will include work on plumbing, electrical and the heating and air-conditioning system.

A sprinkler system and fire-safety system will also be upgraded to conform with the Americans with Disabilities Act.

City commission funds computer center for disabled residents

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

A computer center designed especially for people with visual and physical disabilities will be installed at the Riley County Seniors Service Center.

The Manhattan City Commission is allotting $15,000 from the capital-improvements fund to pay for the center.

In 1990, the Americans with Disabilities Act required Manhattan to review its services for disabled people.

"During the 1994 self-evaluation, we came across a need. The fact was that there were lots of disabled people that didn't have access to a computer," said Allen Martin, city human relations officer and ADA coordinator.

Martin said he hoped the plans for the center were within a month of completion.

He said there would be at least two computers at the center, with one for the visually impaired and one for the physically disabled. Martin said there might also be a computer for the developmentally disabled.

The center was originally planned to be at the Manhattan Public Library and Information Center. Complications with the expansion of the public library caused the center to be relocated to the senior center. Martin said that when the expansion is done at the public library, the center will be moved there.

Jami Ramsey, director of the senior center, said she thinks the center will benefit Manhattan.

"The computer center will be absolutely wonderful for our folks, as well as the city of Manhattan," Ramsey said.

She said the center has volunteered the space and agreed to help out if someone is stuck with a program on the computer. Other volunteers will be trained to help operate the computers.

Martin said he hopes the center will prove to the disabled that they have employment possibilities. He said demonstrations for employers to see the capabilities and possibilities of hiring someone with a disability will also be available.

"This center is a real community project. We have worked with the public library, K-State, the state of Kansas and the county. Any student, non-student, any old or young person will be able to use the center," Martin said.

The ADA was established in 1990 with support from then-U.S. Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass.

SARAH POTTER/Collegian

RYAN CLIVE-SMITH, K-State cross country runner, came to the United States from South Africa, thinking the climate was the same. Clive-Smith is a senior who will complete his master's degree in marketing this May.

Dedicated to success

Ryan Clive-Smith is devoted to his running, his team and his education — an equation that equals success.

"I like the sea. I like to be near the sea. And if I'm going to live in the States, which I'm going to try to do, I'm going to live in an environment where I'll be happy."

• RYAN CLIVE-SMITH
CROSS COUNTRY RUNNER

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

K-State cross country coach Terry Drake should thank the American proficiency for producing pamphlets and distributing them for marketing purposes.

He should also thank some people's misperceptions that Kansas is known for its warm weather.

If it weren't for pamphlets and warm weather, cross country runner Ryan Clive-Smith might have enrolled elsewhere.

Recruited by former Wildcat coach John Capriotti, Clive-Smith had to depend solely on the opinions of friends when choosing which school to attend. Why? He hails from Durban, South Africa. Too far to make expensive recruiting trips.

So it was up to Capriotti to sell Clive-Smith on the program at K-State.

"I hadn't been to the States before, and he made it sound pretty good," Clive-Smith said. "I had a couple other choices that I could have gone to, but he made this place sound the best.

"At the time, we had a really good team. I wanted to be on a good team. I was pretty ignorant as to what was available to me in terms of the University, and he painted a pretty good picture."

But what got Clive-Smith here? The impression he had about K-State based on the opinions of friends and literature obtained from Capriotti.

"You guys (Americans) are really good at producing pamphlets, and I got a bunch from all different schools," Clive-Smith said. "And I decided basically from what some of my friends told me, from where the better conferences were or where it might be a bit warmer."

But Kansas — warm? Clive-Smith admits his friends weren't completely right.

"Got that wrong. It's cold here," he said.

Five years later, Clive-Smith is completing his master's degree in marketing, which he expects to receive in May. He received his bachelor's degree last May, also in marketing.

To receive a master's degree is remarkable by current American standards but much more so when considering Clive-Smith's dedication to running and his team.

"He's quite a guy," Drake said. "He's the most interesting young man I've met in a long time."

When finished with his education at K-State, Clive-Smith wants to explore other areas of the United States and utilize what he has learned in Manhattan. He is considering moving to the San Diego area.

"Where I lived in South Africa, that's the sort of environment we lived in," he said. "I like the sea. I like to be near the sea. And if I'm going to live in the States, which I'm going to try to do, I'm going to live in an environment where I'll be happy."

And what does Clive-Smith plan on doing in San Diego, besides soaking up the warmth? He said he wants to gain some experience in America's complicated business world before moving on.

"I'd like to work in corporate America for a couple of years and get some experience. Then I have a lot of ideas I want to do on my own," he said. "I'd like to go into property or maybe some sort of international trade."

K-State rowing teams help Girl Scouts earn badges

MATT SPURGIN
staff reporter

Rowers from the women's crew team and the men's rowing club took to the water Saturday, but it was for neither a regatta nor a practice.

The rowers were there to teach the Kaw Valley Girl Scouts how to row.

A similar program was offered Saturday at KU. Scouts from east of Topeka went to Lawrence to row, and those west of Topeka came to Manhattan.

Al Koch, Kansas State Rowing Association coach, said he talked to the women's team, and they volunteered to help the Girl Scouts.

"The Girl Scouts are obviously a worthwhile organization, and we want to be a part of that," Jennifer Hale, women's crew coach, said. "It's more than just them coming out and being student athletes. Giving back and being involved in the civic part of the town is going to be a real important part in our role at K-State."

The girls had to meet certain health requirements, pass a swim test and sign up to participate.

This was a new activity for the Girl Scouts.

"We saw it on the Olympics and thought it would be neat," said Megan McQueen, Girl Scout from Wabaunsee High School.

"Through sixth grade, girls love being Girl Scouts, but after that, being a Girl Scout is kind of like being dorky. They're trying to get the older girls involved and do things that would interest them, plus widen their horizons," Liz Koch, adviser for the Girl Scouts, said.

She said it also teaches the girls cooperation and teamwork.

"It was a great opportunity to give the Girl Scouts a chance to row, that they probably wouldn't have until they were in college, and it was fun," said Rachel Jaeger, sophomore in elementary education and women's crew team member.

"I think it's good community service, and I'm glad the team could help out," said Jorge Coley, sophomore in secondary education and men's crew team member.

Hockey club familiar with highway system

JESS C. LOUK
staff reporter

Eastbound Interstate 70 offers members of the K-State hockey team a chance for reflection during their two-hour drive to practice.

Without an ice rink for hockey in the Manhattan area, the hockey team is forced to commute to The Rinks, a rink in the Overland Park area.

"We need to practice. An individual can be good, but if you don't practice together to get your feet, hands and timing down, you won't get very far," Jesse Meadows, junior undecided, said.

Travel is the optimum word for the hockey team. The team traveled to 10 cities last year, including four drives to The Rinks for practice.

The member's club dues do not cover the cost of travel and team equipment. New members pay $50 for club dues and $25 for insurance.

K-State gives the team $3,000 a year, but the yearly cost of maintaining the team is $7,000-9,000, K-State alumnus Dave Queen said.

To make up for the shortage of funds, the team has various fundraisers. It has sold T-shirts, painted trash cans, and had carwashes, and it plans to have a casino night this year.

"We'd really appreciate alumni backing on this. It would be great to get those Catbackers," Queen said.

The hockey team started seven years ago as the Manhattan Hockey Club. The club was founded by East Coast natives who had been transferred to Fort Riley, Queen said. When the team became incorporated into the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, its constitution was adapted to allow 25-percent participation from non-students to let the Fort Riley participation continue.

Last year's team finished 18-11-2. It closed the season with an 11-game winning streak.

Along with the streak came the total domination of cross-state rival Kansas. K-State defeated the Jayhawks seven straight times and never dropped a game to the Hawks.

The Jayhawk Hockey team would not schedule a game against K-State this year.

"Yeah, they ducked us. They said they had already filled their schedule, and they didn't want to play us. I think that's pretty weak that we're both playing Kansas City and they can't play us," Queen said.

No K-State game? Sega Genesis lets Cat fans watch football anyway

Off-week? There are no off-weeks in football. So what in the world am I going to do for the next two weeks?

Well, my friends, I have the solution.

Welcome to the world of Sega Genesis football and College Football '97 by Electronic Arts.

Just let this sink in: 111 teams, bowl games, create-your-own players, two- and three-deep rosters for each NCAA I-A school.

This is my own little piece of heaven. Come join it. Stay as long as you can.

MY

Todd
STEWART

I paid $59 for it, which I figure in the two weeks since I bought it is less than a $1 each game. I am addicted.

Don't believe me? Well, keep reading.

A few — OK, 15 — friends and myself started a 12-week season on the game. We held a draft for team selection. Sick as it sounds, it was the most anticipated activity of last Sunday.

Remembering it is my game and my genius, I was unkindly rewarded with the No. 15 pick out of 16. Ouch.

On Draft Day, I sat and watched as every team I had my eye on was picked, even my sleepers.

Colorado went No. 1 to a misguided Littleton, Colo., native. Then went Nebraska. Then Tennessee. All this as I watched and waited.

"Koy Detmer's Buffaloes just had too many weapons for the undermatched Cats. It was over early."

I figured maybe I could sneak in K-State with No. 15. The Wildcat offense is horrendous on the game, and there are easily 20 better teams on the game. But I would love to play a season with the purple and white.

Nope, I was wrong. The Cats went No. 5. Ahead of Florida. Ahead of Michigan. This is Manhattan, after all.

All my K-State hopes were dashed.

Finally, late into Draft Day evening, I was on the clock.

My draft board had Texas, USC and Northwestern as the top teams still remaining.

My first inclination was Texas. What could be more fun than beating the four people who had already selected teams in the Big 12? But I was not sure Texas was the team that could do it. Nebraska and Colorado are powerhouses.

USC also intrigued me. No player had gone to the Pac-10 conference yet, and the road to the post-season looked clear in the West.

But instead I did the unthinkable. I picked Northwestern. A Darnell Autry-led rushing attack was too much to pass up. Plus, there were three teams already picked in the Big 10, so I would get to work my magic on some of my friends on the way to my Big 10 title.

Also, Autry cannot be contained.

Heading into week three, Autry has 770 yards on the ground, leaps and bounds ahead of the No. 2 rusher, Ahman Green of Nebraska.

I hate Northwestern just about as much as the next K-State fan does, but talent is talent. And besides, Northwestern wears a little purple. Its mascot is also a Wildcat.

"Brian Kavanagh is slow and inaccurate. Jimmy Dean can't catch the ball. The rushing attack is lackluster."

Northwestern, 2-0, is now No. 11 in our newest poll and slowly climbing.

Up next is a tangle with Michigan State. It will be a sad day to wear the Spartan green and white.

Speaking of sad days, it was one for K-State in week two.

In front of the largest-recorded video-game audience, the Cats lost 49-28 to Colorado and dropped out of the top-25.

Koy Detmer's Buffaloes just had too many weapons for the undermatched Cats. It was over early.

The problem, much as in real life, is the Cats offense just doesn't click in the Sega World.

Brian Kavanagh is slow and inaccurate. Jimmy Dean can't catch the ball. The rushing attack is lackluster.

Chris Canty is the savior for the defense. There is no one faster on the game. Period.

OK, so this all might sound sick, and maybe it is, but I have to find ways to fill the gaps between games.

For me, that medicine is in my Sega.

Now if you will excuse me, week three is calling.The slaughter of the Spartans is on.

Students meet Bennett after Midland concert

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
staff writer

A group of jazz music students from K-State left their hearts in Kansas City this past weekend.

More specifically, their hearts left them when they saw Tony Bennett in concert and met him afterward backstage on Saturday night.

The students, mostly members of the K-State Jazz Band and a few vocal music majors, attended the concert with Dennis Wilson, director of the jazz program at K-State.

I met up with the students before the concert in the middle balcony of the Midland Theater. Needless to say, the students talked anxiously about Tony.

"It's Tony," said Marc Riegel, senior in music education and trombonist in the jazz band. "We're going to hang out with Tony."

Paul Chang, senior in music education and bass trombonist in the K-State Jazz Band, said they came to the concert not only because they are big fans, but because they knew Wilson was a friend of Tony.

"In the next few years, I wouldn't be surprised if Tony came to the K-State Jazz Festival," Chang said.

Anne Walker, senior in vocal performance, said she thinks Bennett has been mainstreamed by American audiences.

"He's been on Oprah and MTV," Walker said.

Riegel said he thinks Bennett has made a comeback with his media exposure.

Chang said, "He's a gap between generations."

Filling the generation gap is something Bennett has been doing since the early 1990s, when he made a comeback with an MTV Unplugged special and several new albums.

His popularity has never been as high with young audiences, but it wasn't apparent from Saturday's concert.

The mostly middle-aged and older audience responded enthusiastically to the concert, but they weren't enough to sell the Midland out.

The lack of audience members under the age of 30 probably had more to do with the steep ticket prices than the great performer.

Bennett's performance proved why he's been around for years. There aren't many performers left who can pull off the standards with quite the same punch and hip undertones Bennett's cool delivery provides.

Appearing fashionably in a white dinner jacket and black tie, Bennett literally swung through classic, and not-so-classic, renditions of "The Best Is Yet to Come," "It Had to be You," and the mainstay, "I Left My Heart in San Francisco."

What separates Bennett from the usual Vegas lounge act?

The voice.

Bennett's coolly understated voice has aged well, calmly suggestive of a rich and fulfilling life and career.

When most singers fade with age, this cat gets hipper with every passing year.

In the first encore, Bennett set the microphone down to do a unamplified version of "Fly Me to the Moon" to prove he's still got it.

Many times in Saturday's concert, the audience couldn't help but snap along or at least swoon when Bennett would flash a smooth turn or twist on them to pep up the show.

The concert had the feel of one big cocktail party.

There were homages to many performers and composers throughout the evening. Featured was a Fred Astaire trilogy, featuring the always-swanky "Steppin' Out," nods to Judy Garland with "Over the Rainbow" and Barbara Streisand with a touching "People," and George Gershwin with "They Can't Take That Away From Me" and the peppy "I Got Rhythm."

Bennett's 2-1/2 hour concert, no intermission or stops for drinks of water, mind you, elated the mostly Italian crowd.

It was the kind of crowd where half the guys were dressed in black shirts and sliver ties and were probably named Tony. That only added to the evening's hip factor.

After the concert, I met back up with the students to venture backstage and meet the man of the evening.

Gladly taking pictures and signing autographs with fans, Bennett took the time to meet the students and accept a K-State sweatshirt from Wilson.

Talking about Wilson, Bennett said, "We've been on the road for years together."

"He's my buddy."

Wilson, who had only flew back to Kansas on Saturday after playing with the Carnegie Hall Jazz Band at the Monterey, Calif., Jazz Festival, has played with Bennett on numerous occasions and is good friends with Bennett's drummer, Clayton Cameron.

Wilson said Bennett is definitely interested in coming to K-State for the Jazz Festival. The festival is held every February.

"It's going to take awhile," Wilson said. "My ideal situation is to bring Tony and the Basie band together."

Wilson said Bennett has always been supportive of the education community.

Wilson first played with Bennett at the Berklee School of Music in Boston.

Alas, after mingling with the jazz students for a few minutes, Bennett was needed elsewhere and had to leave.

After the encounter, Chang could only say awesome.

Riegel said the fact Bennett took the time to meet with everyone shows the type of person he really is.

"I think Tony will come to our jazz festival sometime," Riegel said.

From the depths of mud and campfire smoke came the twang of banjos, drifting deep into the night for four days. This year marked the silver anniversary of the Walnut Valley Festival in Winfield. Despite heavy downpours Wednesday night and Thursday, a record number of people slogged through the muck and mire this year to attend the festival.

PERFORMANCE REVIEWS BY STAGE

STAGE ONE

Cherish the Ladies, though new to the Walnut Valley scene, quickly became a crowd favorite. The band's sound is Celtic, which was also new to the festival. From delicate whistles and flutes to rollicking fiddle and banjo licks, Cherish the Ladies created a sound that is sure to become an integral part of the Walnut Valley scene in years to come.

The group's eclectic style didn't stop there. It also made use of a two-person step-dance team. The team performed heel-clickin' dances during some songs.

Blue Highway, another group new to the festival, sold the audience on its traditional bluegrass style. The band's use of the banjo, ukelele, bass and guitar had the audience bouncing around on the grandstand benches. Blue Highway's songs ranged from original tunes to old yet well-loved hymns.

During a Saturday night concert, John McCutcheon and Tom Chapin asked festival directors Bob and Kendra Redford onstage. There they paid tribute to the two for their 25 years of hard work and dedication to the festival. McCutcheon and Chapin, along with Michael Mark, dedicated a song to the Redfords entitled "Bobby Redford's Walnut Valley Band," to the tune of "Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band," by the Beatles.

STAGE TWO

Revival, an a capella gospel group, had its audiences clappin' their hands and singin' praises to the Lord. This four-member group's dynamic sound filled the grassy field of Stage 2 with its thunderous harmonies. What was especially impressive about this group was its range of vocals. The bass part, which could blow a hole deeper than the Grand Canyon, made the ground vibrate.

McCutcheon, Mike Cross, Chapin, Tom Paxton and Mark all gathered on Stage 2 for a show they called "Story Songs." This beloved group of singers started off its set by playfully poking fun at each other to the tune of "The Sloop John B." They coined jabs such as "Mike Cross doesn't use floss," much to delight of fans. After that bout of wackiness, all the performers took turns singing some of their favorite songs.

This was not just a concert of silliness, however. Chapin offered up a somewhat educational song called "What Does a Didgeridoo Do?" To illustrate, he brought out McCutcheon's 12-year-old son Peter to toot the Australian instrument for the crowd. What was produced was a low, flatulent sound, which the listeners enthusiastically greeted with whoops and cheers.

STAGE THREE

This stage was graced with many Walnut Valley favorites, such as Paxton with Steve Kaufman and Italian guitar virtuoso Beppe Gambetta.

Gambetta's lightning-fast flat-pickin' and Italian-accented voice ricocheted off the lawn chairs set in front of the stage. The crowd sat in awe of this self-proclaimed singer, songwriter, guitar player and cook and the ease with which he created his music. Because of this, Gambetta attracted huge numbers of fans each time he performed at the festival.

Tom Paxton teamed up with guitar expert Kaufman for a rare music-making experience. Paxton's sometimes silly, sometimes serious vocals, paired with Kaufman's guitar expertise, made for a mesmerizing musical performance. Paxton performed a few of his infamous "Short Shelf Life Songs," including one called "Let's Go to Michael Jackson's House." A short but sweet tune, the only lyrics are "Let's go to Michael Jackson's house; the party never stops. Be sure to bring your jammies — well, really just the tops."

STAGE FOUR

This stage was home primarily to the contests for which the festival is famous.

The Walnut Valley Old Time Fiddle Championship was a showcase of the most talented fiddlers around. Some contestants played plaintive lonesome-cowboy tunes, while others chose to dive into some good hoedown fiddlin'. The toes of the audience went crazy to the contagious rhythms of the players.

The National Finger-Picking Guitar Championship was also a display of one gifted musician after another. Many made use of harmonics in difficult and impressive ways. The fingers of the contestants were a mere blur on the strings of their guitars, a testimony of their mind-boggling finger-picking skills.

STAGE FIVE

This year was the 10th anniversary of Stage 5, which was nestled in the Pecan Grove campground among tents and tie-dyed backdrops.

The stage served as a venue for folks to play when they didn't have an opportunity to perform on one of the main stages.

The stage played to a number of talents, including a few visits by Gambetta. The stage also was host to the Acoustic Kids program, which offered instructional workshops for the littlest pickers.

The definitive highlight of the entire festival took place Sunday afternoon on Stage 1. McCutcheon, Chapin, Paxton, Mark and interpreter for the deaf Linda Tilton performed with the Winfield Regional Symphony, which was directed by Gary Gackstatter.

A sea of hands signed along with Tilton, and voices sang along with the performers. McCutcheon sang the song he wrote especially for the festival, "Welcome the Traveler Home." Chapin performed "Cat's in the Cradle" in tribute to his late brother, Harry Chapin, who originally wrote the song.

The stages were not the only places where down-home pickin' could be heard. After the last stage closed each evening, campers would gather around their campsites for late-night jam sessions or to reminisce about the good old days. The stylings of Jerry Garcia, David Grisman and the late father of bluegrass, Bill Monroe, floated throughout Pecan Grove well past midnight.

Engineers design paving mix

SPEED

▶ K-State civil engineers, in conjunction with the Kansas Department of Transportation, have concocted a new paving substance that is perfect for the Kansas climate.

Missy Snodgrass
staff reporter

Usually people wonder when the construction on Kansas Highway 177 will be done, rather than thinking about the people who are working on it.

K-State's civil engineers are working with the Kansas Department of Transportation and Shilling Construction to provide a way of building a road. Together they have been testing different aggregates to create the perfect mix for Kansas' climate.

"It's been a very complicated process to test all the possible combinations of aggregates Shilling Construction wished to use in the base," said Affan Habib, graduate student in civil engineering.

The 8-inch base layer is critical to the durability of the highway. Testing each possible formulation took about nine days in the K-State materials design labs.

There were several steps in the process: mixing the ingredients, compacting them into an 8-inch thick plug using a machine that simulates actual highway compaction pressure, putting the plug through several days of a freeze-thaw cycle, then analyzing the moisture content.

The last step is mechanically cracking the plug in half to measure the force required to break it.

Mustaqu Hossain, associate professor in civil engineering, assisted Habib with the program.

"I supervised the work in troubleshooting which aggregate to throw out and which to try," he said.

The civil engineering department will also train KDOT and individual contractors how to test samples with the new method.

KDOT does all the design sampling in its labs. The new program, QCQA, or Quality Control Quality Assurance, will transfer the responsibility of testing aggregate samples from KDOT to the individual contractors.

"This is 180 degrees different. Usually KDOT does lab work on design," Doug Shilling, co-owner of Shilling Construction, said.

The Strategic Highway Research Planning program has set new criteria on how to judge the design mixture for a road: traffic-load strain, rut resistance, temperature levels and moisture. This is what the individual contractors will learn to do themselves.

This makes it more challenging for the contractors. Shilling Construction invested $75,000 for a new mobile lab in order to participate in this project.

"The project worked out pretty good. It got them involved in a real project and they trained us. We learned a lot from Affan," Shilling said.

City fire department administers fire training for campus police

Jess C. Louk
staff reporter

If a fire alarm evacuates a campus building, the Manhattan Fire Department probably won't be the first to arrive on the scene.

The fire department administered two training sessions for the K-State Police in order to reduce the amount of unnecessary fire department responses to campus alarms.

"With so many alarms they don't want to come if it's just an accidental trip or malfunction. They want to come when they're needed," said Lt. Dave Johnson, training coordinator for the campus police.

The campus police will be the first to respond to alarms sounding on campus, unless the alarm is sounded at one of the residence halls.

"With the dormitories, we're going to respond as soon as the system activates," said Stephen Burnett, assistant deputy director of emergency services at the fire department.

The fire department has responded to an average of 15-20 alarms a year in the last three years at the residence halls, Burnett said.

If an alarm sounds on campus, an officer or citizen must witness a fire indicator before the fire department will send out a response unit. Witnessing a fire indicator means seeing smoke, smelling smoke, feeling a hot wall or viewing the fire.

> "Any time you have training sessions between two groups, it's always positive. Training is education."
> — DAVE JOHNSON, CAMPUS POLICE TRAINING COORDINATOR

"Any time you have training sessions between two groups, it's always positive. Training is education. We now have a listing of criteria they go by and they want us to go by," Johnson said.

Campus buildings are inspected once a year by the state fire marshal.

K-State also employs its own fire inspector. Dwain Archer is the director of fire safety inspections. Archer said he inspects all campus buildings twice a year. His inspections include inspecting buildings at K-State-Salina.

Archer said some of the recurring fire hazards in campus buildings are furniture in stairwells and corridors. Archer also said propped-open doors are a problem.

"Stairwells are considered areas of refuge. Providing all the doors are closed, the area will remain smoke- and fire-free. Very often, I'm finding those doors are chocked open," Archer said.

Two K-State students perk up with coffee-shop ownership

STORY BY ALLISON WOODALL • PHOTO BY RICK DRUSE

For two K-State students, the morning paper and a cup of coffee did more than just begin their day.

Becky Kosters, senior in animal science and industry, was looking through the classified ads in August to find a job for her husband, Tim Kosters. What she found was a sale notice for Mainstreet Specialty Coffees. Two weeks later, the business was theirs.

The Kosters renamed the store Cuppa Joe and hoped to create a relaxed atmosphere that appeals to students as well as the downtown business crowd.

"We'll still draw the business clientele during the day, but we want a student crowd in the evenings," Becky said.

A possible obstacle to gaining a student crowd is Cuppa Joe's location at 111 S. Fourth St.

"Poyntz is a long way for me to go when other coffee shops are closer," said Amy Jaax, graduate student in speech pathology. "But atmosphere is absolutely everything. If they can create an incredible atmosphere, they can get students there."

Tim Kosters, junior in elementary education, said Cuppa Joe can be viewed by students as an alternative to the crowded Aggieville scene.

"There is only so much you can do for so long in Aggieville," Lucas Kent, Cuppa Joe employee, said. "There's also a lot of young students in Aggieville. Here's a place where you can get away from the crowd."

The Kosters also purchased the neighboring property, which used to be Equine Clothiers, as a part of their strategy for expanding and creating a relaxing environment.

The grand opening for the renovated addition will be Sept. 20.

The addition will be furnished with couches and tables. A small stage will also be included for live entertainment, forming a setup that appears similar to the TV show "Friends."

"We've heard that comparison," Becky said. "And to be honest, I think it's cheesy. 'Friends' is a great show everyone loves, but it's not our intention to mimic them.

"We just want a place where students can kick back on our couches just like they would theirs at home."

Also in the works is a conference and study room. The room, scheduled to be completed in a few months, will seat about 20 people.

In addition, the Kosters will continue to offer free Internet access, just as Mainstreet Specialty Coffees did.

"We want this to be a place students can call their own," Becky said. "To do that, we need their feedback and ideas."

got me to come here," Dushkin said. "He attracted people to come here. He has enormous charm and that kind of sparkling personality that is important when you're trying to build a program."

Dushkin taught an interdisciplinary course in South Asian civilization with Jones for 25 years.

"To me personally, he has been a good friend and colleague when there wasn't always people who understood what our work was about," she said.

Jones was a renowned international interpreter of social and religious mobilizations in India during the British Raj. Fluent in Hindi and Urdu, Jones used historical Indian documents in his scholarship to become a pioneer in South Asian history. His work, "Arya Dharm: Hindu Consciousness in 19th-Century Punjab," is standard reading for students in South Asian history.

He was also the first American invited to contribute to the New Cambridge History of India.

Marion Gray, professor of history and department chair, said Jones' death was a personal and professional loss.

"He was an internationally known scholar," Gray said. "But he was dedicated to helping Kansas students understand an area of the world they knew very little about."

Jones received numerous awards and grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Social Science Research Council and the American Council of Learned Societies. He was named a fellow of the American Institute of Indian Studies three times and received a W. Norman Brown fellowship for excellence in research.

Aruna Michie, associate professor of political science, became a friend of Jones and his wife, Maurgerite, after joining the faculty in 1979. The Jones have one son, Garth Jones.

"I think we always said of Ken that we've never seen someone teach 3,500 to 4,000 years of history in such an eloquent way and in a relatively short amount of time. He had a unique way of bringing even the earliest history alive," Michie said.

Janet Benson, associate professor of sociology, remembers Jones as her first friend at K-State.

"His contribution in founding the South Asian center was significant because it brought together scholars from different disciplines that did research in that part of the world. It has been important, personally, to have that kind of fellowship," she said.

Benson said that at the time of his death, Jones had been planning his courses and looking forward to teaching more students.

"He never gave up, and even though he was uncompromising about his standards, he was fair," Benson said. "He was someone who had a compassionate heart and was a mentor and friend to many people on campus. He will remain an inspiration to many young scholars."

There will be a memorial service at 2 p.m. Sunday at All Faiths Chapel. The community is invited.

don't involve themselves with student government are time constraints and that they just aren't very interested in student government in the first place.

Jarron Paronto, Environmental Professionals club officer, said he thinks Feedback Fridays and the other communication methods are good ways of letting students interact more.

Another possible way to get students involved would be to make it easier to work on a campaign or run for office, Paronto said.

"Most students probably don't even know the first step in how to run for an SGA office on this campus," Paronto said.

Bob Kohl, president of Golden Key National Honor Society, said that Hansen's ideas provide students with a lot of voice in student government.

"We can help get publicity from a larger forum so we can help solve some of the problems on this campus," Kohl said.

losses, security available for private loans and repayment ability.

Because Congress is not giving growers direct payments, insurance becomes a vital part of the picture as a safe haven.

The government required farmers buy at least a CAT contract for $50 as some sort of insurance policy. Some farmers didn't even buy this, because they felt the $50 was too much in comparison to the amount of insurance being provided.

Art Barnaby, extension specialist in the Department of Agricultural Economics at K-State, said some farmers are now without insurance when they need it the most.

"This year the CAT contract paid around 10-15 cents per dollar. Some farmers thought that it wasn't even worth $50," Barnaby said.

The higher insurance costs up to $2-$4 per acre. That would result in farmers' paying a high amount of money just for their crops to be insured.

"This year about half of farmers had high levels of coverage. CAT coverage ranged from about 40 to 50 percent, and around 10-15 percent of farmers had no coverage," Barnaby said.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Nuclear treaty signed

TREATY

▶ The world's strongest nuclear powers signed a nuclear test-ban treaty designed to end all development and testing of nuclear weapons. However, India, a country that must sign the treaty for it to become law, refused to sign.

▪ Despite objections, treaty stops weapon testing and development.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — The United States and the world's most important nuclear powers overrode the objections of India Tuesday and signed a treaty to end all testing and development of nuclear weapons.

President Clinton signed the treaty with the same pen President John F. Kennedy used to sign the 1963 Limited Test Ban Treaty. After a 10-minute address to the General Assembly, Clinton went to New Jersey to campaign for re-election.

India, one of the countries that must sign the treaty for it to become law, refused to endorse the pact, because it does not require nuclear powers to scrap weapons. India borders China, which has nuclear weapons, and Pakistan, which is believed to be capable of making nuclear arms.

Nevertheless, supporters believe the treaty as signed will make it difficult for any country to conduct nuclear test explosions in defiance of international opinion.

The 1963 treaty prohibited nuclear test explosions in the atmosphere, in space and underwater, but permitted them underground. The 1974 Threshold Test Ban Treaty set a size limit on underground test explosions, but the new treaty bans all test explosions, including underground blasts.

By signing the treaty, Clinton promised to create a "better, safer world," one that "will help to prevent the nuclear powers from developing more advanced and more dangerous weapons.

"It will limit the ability of other states to acquire such devices themselves. It points us toward a century in which the ... nuclear weapons can be further reduced and ultimately eliminated."

After Clinton signed, he was followed by representatives of the world's other declared nuclear powers — China, France, Russia and Britain. U.N. officials said 65 countries would sign the treaty on Tuesday.

Israel, which is believed to have nuclear capabilities, is to sign the treaty today.

Australia was credited with saving the treaty, which had foundered in Geneva when India refused to sign the pact, by bringing it to the General Assembly. The move followed widespread outrage in Australia last year when France conducted nuclear tests in French Polynesia.

U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali presided over Tuesday's signing.

Earlier, he and Clinton met briefly.

County commission declines proposed K-State land offer

ANDREA COREY
staff reporter

The proposed law-enforcement center for the Riley County Police Department will not be on K-State property.

Using 15 acres of K-State land at the intersections of Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Marlatt Avenue was one of two proposals the county commission had to choose between.

Instead of the K-State land, the commission chose the northeast corner of the intersections of Seth Childs Road and Riley County Boulevard for the proposed site for the law enforcement center.

As part of the mutual-benefit package between K-State and the county, Mercy Health Center would have provided K-State with space at Memorial Hospital.

K-State was not chosen because of the timing differences between the University and Mercy Health Center, Russ Frey, Riley County Commission chairman, said.

"Timing wouldn't allow the time to work it out," Frey said.

Mike Nunamaker, president and CEO of Mercy Health Center, said Mercy would not be in a position to tell K-State what kind of space would be available for six months.

The owner of the property selected for the law-enforcement center is Bayer Construction Company Inc.

The commission bought an option for $10 to buy the land for $2.35 per square foot or $102,000 per acre. If the issue isn't approved on the ballots in the November election, the county is not contracted to buy the property.

The tract of land has not been properly surveyed, but Dan Harden, county engineer and director of public works, said the land is between 4.5 and 5 acres.

The proposal will be up for vote on the Nov. 5 election. At present, the question will set a $10.8-million price tag for the project to be paid for by a half cent sales tax.

The tax is to begin Jan. 1, 1999, when the current half-cent economic-development tax ends.

RACIAL TOLERANCE

Lawyer asks students to be tolerant of races, provides legal examples

STORY BY CECILY RODRIGUEZ

Our country is not a quiet nation.

It is a melting pot of voices and opinions all of which have the constitutional right to be heard. We are an angry nation sometimes intolerant of our brothers and sisters because they are poor or uneducated, sometimes because they are black or Jewish.

Morris Dees is not a quiet man, and he has been working to turn down the fire before the melting pot boils over. He spoke at 7:30 Tuesday to a packed Forum Hall.

One case that stands out in Dees' mind was his 1987 case against the Ku Klux Klan.

Dees, a civil-rights lawyer, represented the mother of Michael Donald, who was killed by two young Klansmen in Mobile, Ala.

> "Unfortunately, America is deeply divided in many ways. But in no area of our life do we have a deeper division than among racial lines"
> • MORRIS DEES
> CIVIL-RIGHTS LAWYER

They had been instructed to keep an eye on a trial involving a black man who killed a white police officer. If the black man was acquitted they were to set an example by killing a black person in retaliation. The case resulted in a deadlock jury. It also resulted in the death of a 19-year-old black college student.

Dees said the Klan lawyer argued the jury shouldn't hold the group responsible for its unpopular beliefs. A young Klansmen jumped up and asked if he could say something.

"He walked over in front of the jury and said that everything I had said had happened. He said he had done it because he had learned to hate at the knees of his uncle and his father and brothers. Then he turned to Mrs. Donald and began to say something but broke down into sobs. After he regained his composure, he asked her if she could find it in her heart to forgive him for what he had done to her son. She replied, 'I already have,'" said Dees.

Dees said this case made a powerful impression on him because an older black woman had really driven home the power of love. Because of her example Dees intends to attend the Klansmen's execution.

Dees is a busy man. He said he plans to personally ask the governor to pardon the young man because he's certain that's what Michael Donald's mother would do if she were still alive.

He said unless there is love between brothers and sisters of different races, the nation will never have success in solving its racial intolerance.

"Unfortunately, America is deeply divided in many ways. We ACLU meets before speech to inform about hate speech views

BETH HUSTED
staff reporter

The K-State chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union met Tuesday night for the first time.

Angie Breitkreutz, K-State ACLU president, said she organized the group last spring.

"Because, as you know, Kansas State is a very, very conservative campus," Breitkreutz said.

Although she wanted to create a forum for expressing liberal views, conservatives were welcome to voice their views as well.

The purpose of the meeting was to inform the group on the ACLU's view of hate speech.

"I chose the hate speech forum to go along with the Morris Dees speech, though we are not officially tied to the speech," Breitkreutz said.

Although the ACLU opposes hate speech, it does have a strong position on the First Amendment.

"The ACLU wants to protect the rights of a communist as much as the KKK to speak out against the government," said John Fliter, assistant professor of political science and faculty adviser.

The ACLU also wants to protect students' right to speak out.

"In 1990, 60 percent of campuses had a speech code in place," Fliter said.

The ACLU strongly opposes campus speech codes, Fliter said.

Speech codes can prevent students from being able to express their views in the university forum, Fliter said.

Commission agrees to unify boards

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

The Manhattan City Commission agreed Tuesday night to move ahead on a proposal that would unify policies of the advisory boards, such as term limits and appointment procedures.

Commissioner Steve Hall said the commission has had trouble with the increased number of boards and the different regulations that have been adopted by the different boards.

"The commission decided that this new proposal would make some organization out of all the chaos this has created," said Hall.

The first part of the proposal, presented to the commission by City Manager Gary Greer, recommended the commission adopt a standardized advisory-board appointment process.

The proposal calls for the mayor to make appointments with the advice and consent of the commission.

Another part of the proposal originated from results of a survey of all advisory-board members, conducted by Commissioner Edith Stunkel.

The results indicated some standardized, comprehensive orientation for new board members would be desirable.

The orientation suggested in the proposal would last for 30 days and include distribution of a packet to new members.

The commission also expressed a desire to discuss regulation of other policy issues, including term-limit requirements, attendance policies, quorums at board meetings and interaction between the commission and the advisory boards.

The new proposal will be presented to the different boards for input and feedback and then returned to the city manager for drafting and final approval by the commission.

Astronaut to return from Russian space station stay

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Astronaut Shannon Lucid can expect to feel weak, woozy, wobbly, fatigued and much heavier than her 150 pounds when she encounters Earth's gravity for the first time in six months.

She can also figure on being anemic and having a depressed immune system.

Doctors have no idea what else to expect — or how long it will take her to recuperate — when the shuttle Atlantis brings home America's space-endurance champion on Thursday.

Space travelers generally overcome most of the side effects within weeks or months. But only one other woman, a Russian, has come close to spending this much time in orbit. All the other long-term space fliers have been men.

Will the 53-year-old Lucid have a higher risk of developing osteoporosis because of all the bone lost during her 188 days of weightlessness? What about cancer from space radiation? Could her life be shortened?

Lucid began the final leg of her long-awaited journey home when Atlantis undocked from the Russian space station Mir Monday night. She had been living on the orbiting complex since March.

"Do svidaniya," Lucid called out to the three men left behind on Mir — goodbye in Russian — as Atlantis slipped into the blackness of space.

Her replacement on Mir, NASA astronaut John Blaha, was moved by the sight of the departing shuttle, which will return in January to pick him up.

Astronauts and cosmonauts can lose up to 25 percent of their strength while in orbit because in zero gravity there's little need to use the muscles. They also lose bone, for reasons that aren't entirely clear.

Lucid, who has a doctorate in biochemistry, has insisted she feels fine and said her weight has remained fairly steady. She exercised on Mir's treadmill, stationary cycle and other equipment up to two hours a day to fight bone and muscle loss.

NASA has no mission-duration limit for its astronauts. The world record is held by Valery Polyakov, a Russian cosmonaut whose 438-day Mir mission ended last year. He seems to have come out of it well. So has cosmonaut Yelena

• JUDGE FINDS DU PONT INCOMPETENT TO STAND TRIAL. Chemical heir John E. du Pont, who claims to be Jesus, the Dalai Lama and the last of the Romanovs, was pronounced a psychotic Tuesday and ruled incompetent to stand trial in the Jan. 26 slaying of an Olympic wrestler Dave Schultz.

Common Pleas Judge Patricia Jenkins ordered du Pont committed to a mental hospital, where he will be examined every three months. He could eventually be brought to trial if doctors conclude he can help with his defense and understand the murder charges.

• CHURCH EXPLOSION IN QUEENS. An explosion and fire leveled a church this morning and burned three nearby houses, injuring nine people, authorities said. Neighbors had reported the smell of a natural-gas leak moments before. The Hyoshin Bible Presbyterian Church was leveled by the fire, and two of the houses were fully destroyed. Nine people, including five firefighters and a 66-year-old woman suffering from chest pains, were taken to hospitals.

• CIVIL CASE AGAINST KACZYNSKI DELAYED. A judge has delayed a lawsuit filed against Unabomber suspect Theodore Kaczynski by the family of a Unabomber victim until the criminal case against him is resolved.

The wrongful-death lawsuit was filed by the family of Gilbert Murray, the president of the California Forestry Association who was killed April 24, 1995, when a package bomb exploded in his downtown Sacramento office.

• MOGADISHU RESUMES SHELLING. A mortar shell ripped through a refugee camp, killing seven people, in the deadliest battle between rival factions since the death of Gen. Mohamed Farrah Aidid last month. Four other people were wounded. Fighting resumed today, forcing some 200 refugees in the camp to move out and seek shelter in bombed-out, concrete buildings.

• YELTSIN CONTINUES TO WORK. Despite doctors' concerns he might be too ill to undergo heart surgery, the Kremlin insisted today that Boris Yeltsin was well enough to work and will meet with the prime minister in his hospital room.

The Communists have demanded the president step down if he can't govern. Yeltsin remained at the Central Clinical Hospital Tuesday for what physicians say are tests before a bypass operation. His office said his weekly meeting with Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin would go ahead as planned.

Allegations were leveled in an anonymous letter sent to the NCAA and to the news media. And last spring, after she was fired, former Purdue women's basketball coach Lin Dunn filed a grievance with the university, alleging violations of NCAA rules in the men's program.

• MORRISON TESTIFIES IN DEFENSE OF TYSON. Tommy Morrison came to heavyweight champion Mike Tyson's defense Tuesday, testifying he'd never heard of a boxer making a career-long contract with a trainer. Morrison, who quit boxing in February after testing positive for HIV but is now eyeing a comeback, said trainers work for fighters only as long as the boxers are happy with them. He was brought to the stand as Tyson's lawyers opened their defense in Kevin Rooney's $49 million lawsuit. Rooney, fired by Tyson in 1988, is suing for past and projected earnings after claiming he had Tyson's promise he would remain as trainer as long as Tyson boxed.

Application process basis for student readmittance

MATT SPURGIN

Flunking out. Going broke. Just taking a break from school.

Many reasons are behind the decision students make to leave K-State, but that doesn't mean they cannot return.

Coming back to the University can be as simple as completing a one-page application. For other former students, a faculty council will decide their fates. Either way, re-entering K-State means more than going to classes once again.

Any student who does not attend K-State for a fall or spring semester must be re-admitted.

This semester, 738 students came back to the University after some time off.

The conditions of a student's return vary and depend on several factors.

Students who were dismissed from K-State for academic deficiencies must be reinstated. This reinstatement is granted by a faculty board that takes each student on a case-by-case basis.

"Each of the colleges have a group of faculty who review the applications and make a decision," Dick Elkins, director of admissions, said.

The time students who were dismissed for academics must stay out of school is up to each of the committees.

"Generally, it is at least a year, but students are not automatically reinstated," Elkins said.

If the student has attended another school, such as a community college, he must have had a least a 2.0 grade point average at that school.

Students who were on academic warning at the time they left K-State must return to the programs they left in. Once they are re-admitted, they can then change majors if another college will accept them as majors.

Other students can return to whatever college they wish, as long as they meet the requirements of that major.

Elkins said many students come to the admissions office right before classes start, wanting to be re-admitted.

He said the admissions office generally needs five days before the student wants to enroll to process the application. The student's records must also be re-activated from the computer.

Milk prices rising

■ Increased costs for farmers mean higher prices for consumers.

HEATHER HJETLAND
staff reporter

Although consumers are seeing an increase in grocery-store milk prices, no one is making more of a profit from milk sales.

The higher prices are a result of increased costs throughout the distribution channel.

Dick Dunham, K-State dairy extension specialist, said it began with higher feed costs to dairy farmers. Dairy farmers then fed less to their cows or went out of business. As a result, fewer cows are producing less milk. The supply of milk is down, and milk prices are up.

The Agricultural Statistics Department reports milk production for August is down 3 percent from this time last year.

The price of a 2-percent gallon of milk was up to $2.99 in Manhattan Dillons stores as of Monday.

Although the Call Hall Dairy Bar price of $2.58 as of last week has not yet increased, Sri Adapa, manager of the dairy plant, said a price increase is being planned.

Milk consumption, however, should not be affected by the price increase.

Dunham said milk is a product for which sales really don't reflect the price. "Consumers will buy it because they need it," he said.

Sales of milk are not down in Manhattan Dillons stores, said Kurt MacTaggart, assistant manager for the grocery department at Dillons' east location.

"I don't even look at the price of milk, because it's a staple in my diet," said Annie Gough, senior in biology. "I do pay attention to the price on luxury items and would not buy them if their prices increased."

Because of the nutrition in milk, it would be a good value at $4 a gallon, said David Jones, chief operating officer of the western fluid group at Mid-American Dairymen Inc. People don't think twice about spending money on soda or bottled water, and milk has so much more nutritional value, he said.

The price farmers are paid for their milk has risen steadily since June, but dairy farmers are not getting rich, Jones said.

"They have gone through a very difficult year. Although they are getting paid more, the cost of feed has doubled, and returns from the sale of milk are used up in feeding cows," he said.

The decrease in milk production has increased milk prices. August milk prices for 100 pounds of milk were $3 higher than they were in August of last year, according to the department.

Dunham said this $3 increase is significant because it is about a 25-percent income increase for farmers.

"The milk price is finally getting in line with feed prices, and dairymen are better off than three months ago, when they were losing money," he said.

Dunham offers insight on how farmers should respond to high feed costs.

"It's not economic to cut feed, because cows will go down in production, and the loss of income from production will more than offset high feed costs," he said.

However, it is hard to convince farmers of this when feed prices go up, he said.

Elwood Schmidt, a dairy farmer in Riley, coped with high feed costs by only feeding corn to milking cows and young calves. As a result, animals that are now starting to produce milk are not holding their body conditions and are milking less, he said.

"I knew this would happen, but I had to pay the bills, and we don't have the cushion that large dairies do," said Schmidt, the owner of 105 milking Jersey cows.

Dunham said production at K-State's dairy has been stabilized because, unlike many dairy farmers, the dairy has kept feeding for production despite high prices.

Jones said milk production in the Kansas City area is down 8-12 percent and production in the state of Missouri is down 18 percent from last year at this time. This is a result of farmers' feeding less to cows and going out of business.

Jones said milk prices could moderate after the first of the year.

"I don't see them going down for the balance of this year," he said.

Simpson jury selection proves case caused division of races

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA MONICA, Calif. — Prospective jurors in the O.J. Simpson civil case split largely along racial lines Tuesday, with whites saying he was probably guilty and blacks suggesting he was innocent.

"We all realized this case had divided America, but not as starkly as we are seeing it in jury selection," said Loyola Law School Professor Laurie Levenson, who is observing the selection process. "It's not just the media reading something into a verdict."

Three blacks, two whites and one Asian were excused from the wrongful-death case for having strong opinions one way or the other about his role in the murder of ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and Ron Goldman.

Two people, an Asian person and a black person, made it past the initial screening to join 10 others awaiting further questioning in the selection process.

The victims' families are suing Simpson for unspecified damages.

Simpson took notes and occasionally talked with a jury consultant during jury selection.

The two prospective jurors who made it past the screening included a Japanese-American woman who said she was visiting Japan when Simpson's criminal trial was making headlines.

Simpson lawyer Robert Baker opposed the Asian woman because she wrote on her questionnaire that Simpson was "probably guilty." She said she wrote that because "I heard it on the news, the police."

Asked if she could base a verdict on the evidence alone, she giggled and said she would try.

The other selection was a black woman who watched some of the trial on TV and said she could not remember the opinions she had on Simpson.

Among those dismissed:

— A young black man who said he thought there was "something wrong" with the evidence against Simpson.

— A white man in his 30s who said the evidence and two books he read on the case convinced him Simpson did it. He said he believed Detective Mark Fuhrman "didn't have the opportunity to frame him."

— A black nurse who said the blood evidence weighed heavily in her belief that the prosecution had failed to prove Simpson guilty.

"He didn't seem to have a motive. That was the first thing," she said. "And there wasn't enough blood around, and he didn't seem to have the time."

OPINION

EDITOR: SERA TANK 532-0730 (KAROLYI@KSU.EDU) WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1996 PAGE 4

IN OUR OPINION

DeClerk presents sports positively for a change

Kate DeClerk. Do you recognize the name?

If not, it's a shame.

DeClerk, K-State's star volleyball middle blocker, just received an honor worthy of recognition.

She didn't flunk out of school, get a DUI or get kicked off the team. But she deserves attention anyway.

WHY WE CARE

K-State sports has made headlines again. Kate DeClerk, a volleyball player, won AVCA Player of the Week for the second time.

DeClerk was named the Big 12 and AVCA National Player of the Week on Monday.

She was the first K-State player to win this honor last year, and she has repeated her accomplishment, racking up the honor a second time this year for the University.

Often sports figures gain notoriety by being accused of doing something wrong, like David Damon was, or by being outlandish, like Dennis Rodman was.

DeClerk isn't outlandish. She's not in any kind of trouble.

She's just one hell of an athlete and a good student to boot.

It's easy to ignore sports that are traditionally less popular in a college environment, especially when those teams aren't doing so well. But the volleyball team, spearheaded by DeClerk, is an exception.

The team has a chance to win the first-ever Big 12 Conference title, setting a precedent for teams to come.

The team recently made great showings against Colorado State and Iowa, and the K-State volleyball onslaught shows no signs of stopping.

Equal opportunity for women in sports has been a long time coming at this University, and players like DeClerk are finally bringing the kind of success and attention women's sports deserve.

And, contrary to popular belief, volleyball is not boring.

K-State matches are also free to those with a valid K-State student ID. It's a fast-paced, exciting night of entertainment, and you don't have to wait in line for a shot at a seat.

You don't have to put up with rude fans.

You don't have to freeze in the cold in a packed stadium.

You don't have to sell plasma to afford a ticket.

And you could watch a K-State

Tenants have law on their side when living in slumlords' unsafe housing

MY

Nikola Maria ZYTKOW

I've been lucky.

Aside from a pesky spider problem and a dripping dishwasher, I haven't had too many problems with my landlords.

But I've heard the horror stories.

The roach-infested, rodent-ridden dives some of my friends have had to endure throughout the years have startled me. So have the prices they pay for these wacky shacks.

The scariest part is if landowners are negligent enough to rent out apartments rampant with bugs, it's likely they won't tend to such details as replacing batteries in a smoke detector or reserving the fire extinguisher.

Most landlords in Manhattan can be as cheap as they wanna be. And no one will know until it is too late.

That's right. There is no system of mandatory inspection of rental housing in Manhattan.

The Manhattan Fire Department performs annual inspections, but only on rentals with three units or more.

So if you are living in a basement apartment, a house or a duplex, your landlord is not required by law to get the place inspected.

This leaves out a huge portion of Manhattan's rental housing that goes totally unchecked unless someone files a complaint.

Part of the problem is there are no rules about being a landlord in Manhattan.

That's right. Anyone with some property and enough cash to take out an advertisement can become a landlord. Landlords are not even required to register with the city. So there's no way of knowing how many are out there.

And while I'm sure there are some honest, well-meaning landlords who do everything by the book, the system is designed so you have to count on landlords' good intentions, rather than their fear of the law, to make sure they are following regulations.

It's the perfect atmosphere for two types of landlords to flourish.

No. 1 — the slumlords. You know those shady characters who rent out apartments rampant with your choice of household insects. These shifty folks are too cheap to replace the light bulb that illuminates the stairs to your building. Their idea of a tenant-landlord agreement is a handshake and wink.

No. 2 — the sweet grannies. Although these types of landlords appear nice and harmless, they are equally dangerous. The sweet granny rents out her basement or a part of her house. To her, renting out an apartment involves dusting the 1949 cupboard, putting away the breakables and placing an advertisement in the paper.

> "Don't leave it up to a landlord to volunteer for an inspection. You're paying a high price for an apartment in Manhattan, and you have the right to live in a clean, safe place."

This type of landlord is well-meaning. Maybe she's heard of the Kansas Residential Landlord and Tenant Act or the 1990 Building Officials and Code Administrators National Maintenance Code. She just never got around to looking at it.

The only way these rental units will ever get inspected is if the landlord requests an inspection — doubtful in either of the above two cases — or if the tenant complains.

Here's where you come in. Most students don't realize the city offers a free, fast and readily available service of inspection.

The inspections are performed by the Manhattan Fire Department Code Services. All you have to do is pick up the phone and call.

The inspection takes only five minutes.

The inspector, armed with a clipboard and measuring tape, will check locks on doors, second exits and exposed wires, among other things.

Five minutes. That's the same amount of time it takes to wait in line for a burger and fries or to watch a preview for another stupid Bruce Willis movie.

Those five minutes can save your life. Don't laugh. I'm not exaggerating.

Picture this: You're cuddled up in bed with your favorite teddy bear, getting ready to watch "Sex, Lies and Videotape." After a few minutes you drift off to sleep. You're awakened in the middle of the night by a distinct stench of smoke. The place is on fire. Flames block the door, and the windows are too small to squeeze out of. The smoke detector never went off.

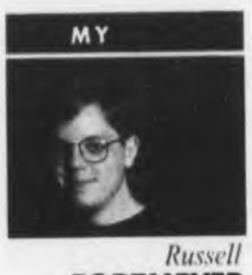
I'd rather not go into the ending. It's too tragic.

But the lesson is that all of this could have been avoided had you dialed those digits.

Sadly enough, not many students take advantage of this service, the folks at the city said.

Don't leave it up to a landlord to volunteer for an inspection.

You're paying a high price for an apartment in Manhattan, and you have the right to live in a clean, safe place.



And while an inspection won't condemn your landlord for sticking you with that awful orange-flowered couch, the flimsy, plastic curtains or the moldy bathtub, it can make sure you live in a hazard-free environment. Hey, you might be living in a real crap hole, but at least it's a safe crap hole.

BULLDOZING our way to a beautiful campus

MY

Russell FORTMEYER

President Jon Wefald, tear down that building!

I am not President Reagan, and Denison Hall is not the Berlin Wall, but that doesn't mean I can't be as passionate about tearing it down as East Berliners were about the wall in 1989.

In fact, there are a couple of other changes that require extensive bulldozing, Bluemont Hall notwithstanding.

Before we get to the nuts and bolts of this column, maybe I should make a case for preserving Bluemont. I realize it is, perhaps, the most detested of all campus structures (though I would argue McCain Auditorium). The over-lit bell plaza fronting it on the west doesn't help, either.

Bluemont, as I've been told over and over in my building mechanical systems design classes, is a product of the 1970s — a throwback to the days when energy conservation was the biggest concern in new construction. It follows that there are few windows in Bluemont. Fewer windows means fewer cracks for heat to enter and exit. Still awake?

Because this was mandated, more or less, by the state, you can't place too much blame on the building or the designers. I can suggest the architect might have found a better use for his time, such as, oh, trimming his toenails.

The biggest reason Bluemont is a problem is because it has scared everyone away from contemporary architecture. Bluemont may be contemporary, but it is not good architecture.

It is out of the scope of this column to discuss all campus architecture. That will have to wait for another time (this means you art museum).

I'm sure if a good contemporary architect were invited to build on campus, perceptions might change. In one simple sweep, Bluemont knocked K-State back to 1900 and to the architectural style of the Farrell Library expansion.

I think the new Farrell Library is a great design for improving the existing structures and will definitely be an excellent library, but does it have to resemble a cathedral?

It may be pretty, but it's not progressive. K-State was founded in 1863 with buildings that look like Holton Hall, and we've come to 1996 and buildings that look like Holton. Modern living!

I suppose I can live with Farrell Library (excuse me, Hale — whatever). I can't, however, live with its neighbors: Lafene Health Center and Denison.

These two buildings give bad architecture a bad name. The only redeeming quality in either building is the catchy sculptural frieze on Lafene. Otherwise, we're dealing with architecture on the scale of communist-era apartment highrises.

As I reported in the Collegian earlier this semester, Denison will probably come down next summer. It still amazes me that the now-lost Art Building, a gem and one of the older structures on campus, was razed and Denison was spared. I guess God takes the good as an example to the bad. Are you listening, Lafene?

Our beloved administration has recently suggested Lafene's services might be moved to some space in Mercy Health Center. Hopefully, that would be the first step in privatizing campus health care. But that's another column. This would leave the building empty and, with no classroom space, hopefully leave the building to be razed.

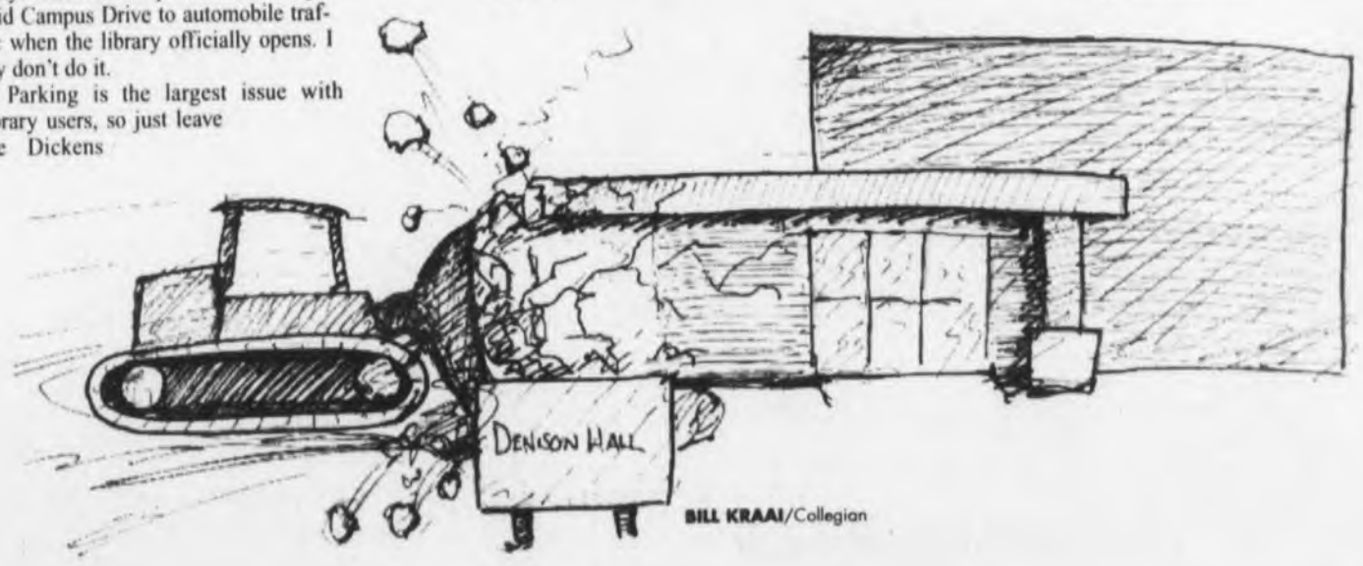
This would create a nice quad between the under-recognized power plant, Leasure Hall, Farrell Library and Seaton Hall for outdoor seating, sculpture and maybe a fountain.

Razing Denison allows the creation of a larger green space between Farrell and Anderson Hall while giving the over-massed library a chance to breathe and strut its architectural stuff to the campus.

Lately, most attention has been paid to the Denison side of Farrell Library. But this must be refocused to the east facade of the library. Why? The current plans are to reopen Mid Campus Drive to automobile traffic when the library officially opens. I say don't do it.

Parking is the largest issue with library users, so just leave the Dickens Hall lot open with dual access from both cul-de-sacs, which could be placed between Holton and Bluemont, and the existing driveway east of the lot.

The northern extension of Mid Campus Drive could then be stopped short of Willard Hall to create a green space between Willard and the chemistry building. This would create a major pedestrian artery on campus and give Farrell Library's facade its due notice.



Mid Campus Drive creates more problems east of the K-State Student Union and north of Kedzie Hall, when two bike trails and four major sidewalks intersect. I live each day with continuing amazement that no one has been seriously injured at this dangerous Bermuda Triangle.

These two examples prove this campus needs to slowly cut itself off to automobile traffic or at least limit it to key faculty and staff members.

There's no reason pedestrians should have to continually fight for their own safety with joyriders and lazy people. Problems are only compounded when bicyclists refuse to follow rules and ride down sidewalks, no matter how busy or small they are.

Maybe I'll finally invest in that walking stick I've always wanted. Then I'll send some of those bikers to Lafene or, hopefully, Mercy Health Center.

Columnist insulted well-meaning groups

Editor,

There are many methods of calling people to their senses and forcing them to pay attention to the world. Last Wednesday's column by Russell Fortmeyer was, for me, a particularly cold water balloon.

The title, "Columnist says elitism flourishes at K-State," was eye-catching. Before reading the column, I was skeptical. But he convinced me elitism is definitely present on our campus. If that were all Fortmeyer said, this response would not have been written. However, he had a great deal more to write.

Among the phrases and statements that bothered me were "carefully maintained structure of elitist organizations," "grand incubator of elitist tendencies," "hollow organization," "lack of substance," and "phony honor banquets and shallow leadership ceremonies."

I find this venomous cacophony disturbing. It obviously reflects a cynical attitude against the leadership and service organizations on campus.

But what truly bothers me is the author's response: He gave up.

Rather than return to Student Senate, he chose not to run for a second term.

How can our organizations achieve catharsis if the people who disagree with their nature just give up?

The key to good government is active involvement by concerned citizens.

Fortmeyer was elected to Senate in a period when that body was a "carefully maintained structure of résumé-packers, do-gooders and self promoters who have suffocated student leadership."

Based on this article, I think he disagrees vehemently with organizations that are so composed.

But he, like many others who disagree with the way Senate works, chose the easy way out — standing back and hurling harsh criticisms from a safe distance.

The next statement that bothered me was, "Or Silver Key, the sophomore honor organization, that had the gall to sleep in cardboard boxes in front of the Union last year to remind us ignoranti that homeless people exist."

I am in Silver Key. And I will proudly participate in the upcoming sleep-out in cardboard boxes Oct. 8.

Why?

Because I want to do something to improve our community.

While Fortmeyer claims it makes a "farce out of the homeless situation," I claim otherwise.

> "The fact that these groups strive to improve our community despite attacks and criticism demonstrates these groups have genuinely humanitarian intentions. If they are pretentious, at least they are productive."
> • JAY WITT
> JUNIOR IN ECONOMICS, PHILOSOPHY AND POLITICAL SCIENCE

I feel strongly that calling attention to a problem is vital to the process of reparation. People don't solve problems of which they aren't aware.

Frankly, the statement "Organizations, such as these, that are reactive and unfocused might grab an issue when trendy but abandon it with the fade of the spotlight" angers me.

Based on the actions Fortmeyer lambastes, these organizations obviously have focus.

The fact that Silver Key intends to have a homeless sleep-out when no other attention has been given to the homeless in this community indicates our indifference to spotlights.

The fact that these groups strive to improve our community despite attacks and criticism demonstrates these groups have genuinely humanitarian intentions.

If they are pretentious, at least they are productive.

We all know it takes no effort to sit around, talk about the world's problems and do nothing.

These groups are, at least, trying, and I commend their efforts.

I would enjoy scrutinizing many more of Fortmeyer's statements.

But for brevity's sake, I will defer to President Theodore Roosevelt, who elegantly embodied my thoughts in 1910.

"It is not the critic that counts, not the man who points out how the strong man stumbles, or where the doer of deeds could have done better.

"The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena, whose face is marred with sweat and blood; who strives violently; who errs, and comes up short again and again (but) who knows the great enthusiasms, the great devotions, who spends himself in a worthy cause; who at best knows in the end the triumph of high achievement, and who at worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat."

Fortmeyer was right to call attention to the elitism that exists on our campus.

It exists and should be diminished.

But the numerous other comments strewn in his article were cynical, callous darts thrown by a hand that seems untried at making positive change.

Judges earn high honors at stock show

JASON WALLE
staff reporter

The K-State livestock judging team received second-place team and high individual honors at the Mid-America Classic livestock show, held in Wichita last Saturday.

Spencer Schrader, senior in animal science and industry, captured the top overall placing. Schrader was awarded a commemorative plaque and a pair of handcrafted spurs for the victory.

The five-member team bested 12 other schools from the Midwest to finish a close second to Oklahoma State University.

K-State is the defending national champions for the past two years. Schrader said the team came up a little short.

"It's hard to be too joyous as an individual when the team comes in second. The team effort is what we're their for," Schrader said.

Scott Schaake, livestock judging coach, said he was not disappointed with the team's performance.

"We were close. It gives us something to shoot for and showed us some areas we need to improve on," Schaake said.

The 12-member team usually practices four to five times a week.

Weekends and evenings are often devoted to evaluating practice sets of cattle, sheep and hogs.

The Mid-America Classic was the first contest of the fall for the team. The next competition will be Nov. 9 at the American Royal in Kansas City, Mo

Group to discuss rural issues

VALERI CRENSHAW
staff reporter

A diverse group of human-service professionals will come together today through Friday for the 16th annual National Rural Families Conference at K-State.

Sponsored by the Family Center, School of Family Studies and Human Services, and the College of Human Ecology, the conference is designed to bring individuals together to share research, knowledge and resources.

Throughout the three days, participants will experience lectures in public policy and welfare reform, violence, parenting, health care, family issues and technology.

The theme of this year's conference is "Changing Realities of Working with Children and Families." This theme was developed through the various papers reviewed for the conference.

Janice Nikkel, program coordinator of the Division of Continuing Education, said the committee tried to categorize the ideas brought forth by the papers to help support the theme.

One of the featured speakers is Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall, who will address domestic violence and public responsibilities. Stovall will speak at 11:30 a.m. today.

"I think that will be a very good presentation," Nikkel said.

Another related topic will focus on violence and adolescents. Nikkel said she thinks this will also be a popular session.

"A lot of people in rural areas have a concern of the filtration of gangs into their communities. I think it will be popular, because it has been so popular in the past years," she said.

In addition to presentations, the conference will also offer several workshops. The Division of Continuing Education will display the many aspects of the World Wide Web.

"We are going to have a World Wide Web demonstration on Sept. 25. We are going to show the different communication technologies available. There is a wealth of information there that changes daily, and you can access the information," Nikkel said.

The Rural Families Conference has a long history at K-State, and though it has always been at home in Manhattan, it has not always had that title.

"The main reason it is at K-State is because it started as the Working Family Conference in 1980," Nikkel said.

"The rural family crisis came about, and we changed the name when we realized we needed to focus on issues with rural crisis. We feel like there is still a need to address the issues unique to rural families.

"I can't say that it has always emphasized the needs of rural committees, but it is a common meeting ground for diverse individuals."

The conference will be in the K-State Student Union and is open to students. The cost is $30 for students and $150 for non-students.

Kansas attorney general to speak at conference

SETH GURSS
staff reporter

Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall will speak at K-State today at the National Rural Families Conference.

Stovall's speech, "Domestic Violence and Public Responsibilities," will begin at 11:30 a.m. in the K-State Student Union Ballroom.

The conference, which is conducted annually at K-State, focuses on resources for family-life education and the continuing transitions facing rural communities.

Janice Nikkel, program coordinator with the Division of Continuing Education, said the conference is nationally known.

"It brings in human services professionals from all over the United States," Nikkel said.

Today will be the first of two appearances for Stovall on the K-State campus.

She is also scheduled to attend a meeting sponsored by the Women's Resource Center at 1:30 p.m. Friday in Union 212.

In addition to speaking at K-State, Stovall is scheduled to speak in the next three days in Topeka, Lawrence and Wamego.

Kansas tickets still available

WANT

▶ Call the KU ticket office at 800-344-2957 to order tickets for the Nov. 9 Kansas vs. K-State football game in Lawrence.

MISSY SNODGRASS
staff reporter

Don't give up on finding tickets for the Kansas vs. K-State game just yet.

As of October 15, the KU ticket office will not require the purchase of a second home-game ticket to attend the game.

Kent Brown, K-State sports information director, said the tickets will be selling on a first-come, first-serve basis.

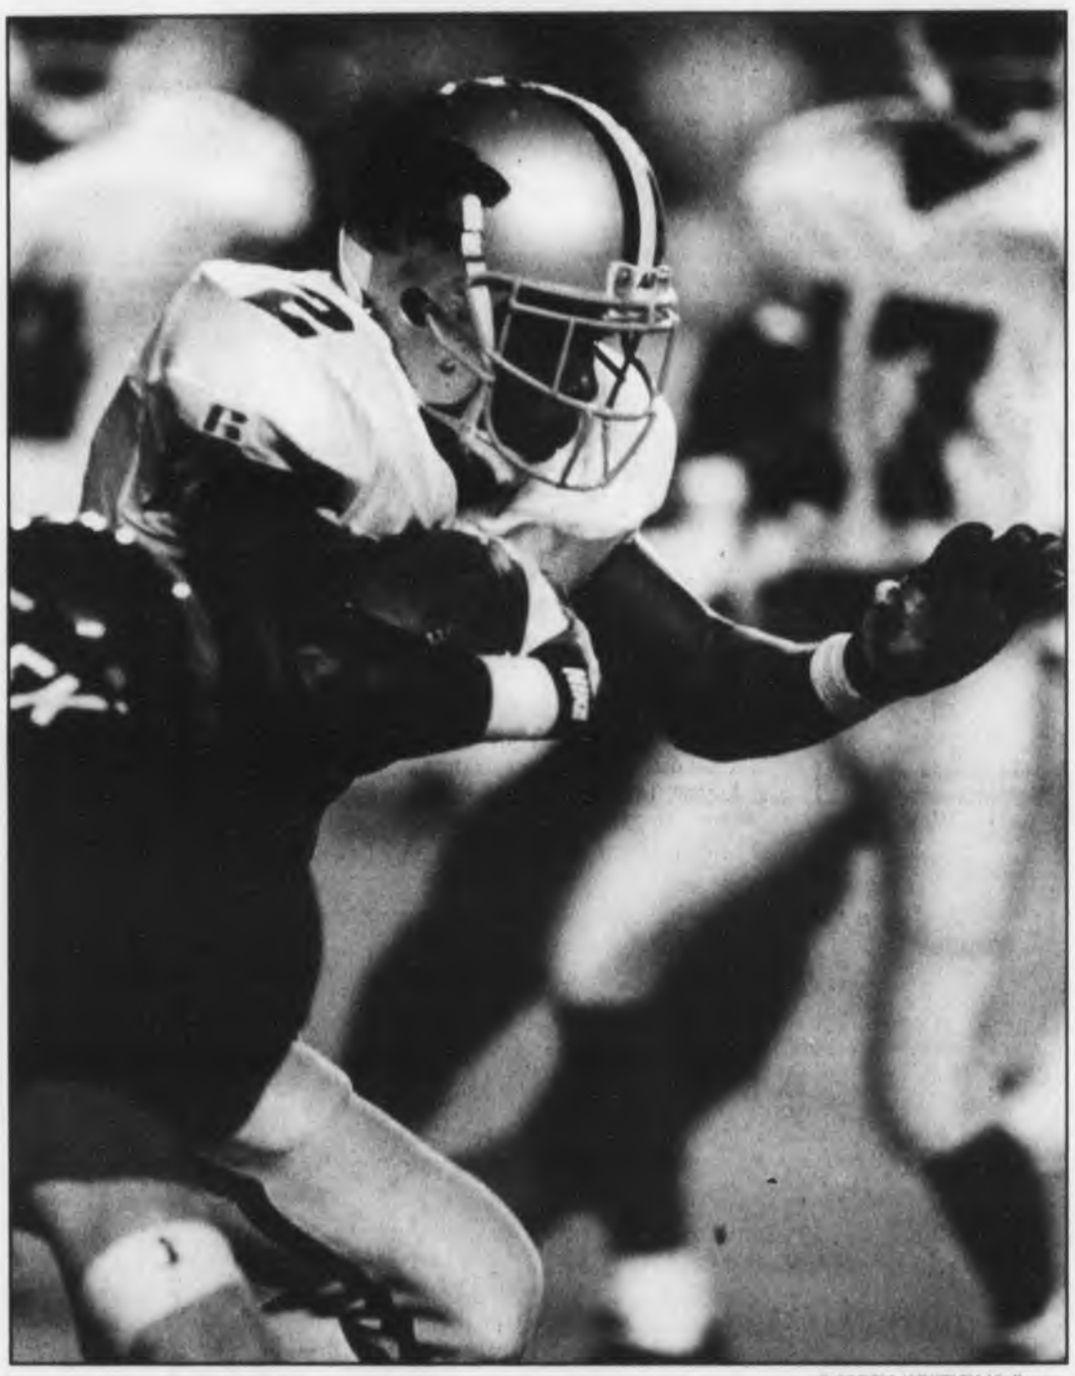
There will not be a limit set on the number of tickets a person can buy.

"Last we heard there is about 20,000 tickets available. We would like to see at least half of them painted purple," Bob Cavello, assistant athletic director for business operations, said.

Until October 14, the Kansas ticket office will still require the two-ticket purchase for Kansas home games.

But beginning October 15 fans can buy tickets for just the K-State vs. Kansas game and each ticket will be sold for $35.

"There is nothing we can do about the price. KU sets that," Cavello said.



Some K-State students are glad the Jayhawk ticket office is making the change.

"The idea of having to buy a second ticket for another KU game is ridiculous," Tom Greene, senior in accounting, said.

"I'm glad they are letting us buy just one, even if we have to pay a little more."

"Student support played a huge part in last year's thrashing of the Jayhawks, and we need to give the Cats the same feeling of a home-field advantage in Lawrence," Melissa Mereghetti, senior in early childhood development, said.

Chris Canty is earning his rights as K-State's own Prime Time

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

K-STATE CORNERBACK Chris Canty, who is known for his defensive play, is growing into a new set of shoes this season as part of the offense. He has joined the kick-off return team and has begun to reel in passes from quarterback Brian Kavanagh to add variety to his attack on opponents.

TODD STEWART
sports writer

Saturday's numbers speak for themselves.

A 44-yard interception return. A 70-yard kick-off return. A 22-yard reception. Three punt returns for 37 yards.

But Chris Canty said he still has to do more.

Canty

"I see myself getting better each game," Canty said. "I just want to go out there and make plays for the team."

Canty's self-generated 173 yards did that for K-State in Saturday's 34-7 win at Rice and earned him Big 12 Player-of-the-Week recognition. Canty said it is not unusual for him to play better each game after the season opener.

"Every game thereafter, I pick it up a bit," Canty said. "I think I'm playing as well as since I've been here."

> "I just came into the season just trying to get better. I just see myself doing so much more."
> • CHRIS CANTY
> K-STATE CORNERBACK

In four games, Canty has had two interceptions, 16 tackles and four passes broken up, all this when offenses are making a point to pass away from the all-America cornerback.

Canty said, however, he would love for that to change.

"I want them to try to go my way," Canty said. "I'm going to go out every play and play my technique. The way I look at it, everyone is on scholarship on the football field."

So far Canty and the rest of the defense have won most of those battles.

The Wildcat defense leads in the Big 12 in three of the four significant defensive categories, ranking first in scoring defense, pass-efficiency defense and total defense.

The Cats rank fifth nationally in scoring defense, giving up an average of six points per game. But Canty said the defense still has strides to make.

"We're playing above-average football right now. The main thing is we have got to go out and have fun," Canty said.

"We're getting great play out of our defensive line, and the secondary is starting to come together."

Despite that, Canty said he only gives the defense a grade of B- so far, but said he sees greatness in this defense's future.

"I just see us being a real great defense. I just don't see us there right yet," he said.

Canty, as one of the more vocal members of the defense, said he tries to bring everyone up a notch by bringing the crowd into the game.

"I feel I'm one of the leaders on our team, and the only way to lead is by example," Canty said.

Helping Canty's cause will be the Oct. 5 return of one of the team's senior leaders, cornerback and team captain Joe Gordon. Gordon missed the first four games with a broken bone in his left leg.

With Gordon's return, one of the league's top cornerback duos

Wanting an apology? K-State fans aren't terrible, but they could be better

I know many readers feel I owe them an apology.

I agree. However, let me make clear it's not for the same reasons they've flooded my e-mail. I still stand behind my earlier remarks, and I will try to explain. And then, a proposal.

But first, the apology.

I'm sorry, K-State football fans. You could be worse. You could be Rice's football fans.

Again, because I'm not sitting in the press box, I cannot say I hear what's going on in the stands. But I have it on good authority from one of the Collegian's photographers and an official in the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics that the Rice fans pretty much, well, suck.

MY

Shana NEWELL

First, the numbers.

Rice Stadium seats 70,000 people. The official attendance was 19,700. I would have to say that was stretching it. I'm not a good judge of numbers, but in my opinion 12,000 would be more appropriate.

Of that number, a fair portion was K-State fans. The KSU Alumni Association had a banquet before the game for Wildcat fans. When I talked to its representative Thursday, 300 people were expected to show. After talking Saturday with Tim Fitzgerald of Purple Pride, I found out more than 400 fans took part.

The line outside the stadium for tickets was predominantly purple.

I would have to say there were easily 3,000-4,000 Wildcat fans in Houston. Texans for K-State made up a large number of those fans.

I was even more astounded when I was preparing to board my plane in Kansas City. Even passers-by were dumbfounded by the wave of purple that flooded the airport.

"Pardon me. Maybe I'm ignorant," one man said, "but where is the K-State delegation heading?"

I looked around and took note of the 15-20 people showing their purple pride at Kansas City International Airport and proudly told him they were on their way to support K-State in Houston against Rice.

Granted, most of the delegation were players' parents, such as J.W. Wight's mom and dad and the Ochs contingent. But there were others.

And once inside the stadium, Wildcat fans made K-State's players feel at home.

One of Rice's pregame rituals is to allow Owls fans to line the field when the football team rushes onto it. While Rice fans were waiting for their team to show, K-State fans flooded the field, too, to give their show of support.

Second, the fans themselves.

They were rude, crude and flagrantly obnoxious. But so that I'm not issuing a blanket statement about all Rice fans, I will say the Rice sports-information officials were all extremely kind.

But enough about their fans. Please allow me to now address K-State's.

Why did I write what I wrote last week? If you missed it and are curious, you can check out the Kansas State Collegian's archives at (http://collegian.ksu.edu/issues/v101/fa/n017/sports/spt-column-9.18-snewell.html)

It's fairly simple. I wanted to wake people up.

There is a savage contingent to K-State's following. Anyone who denies that is living in a world with purple-colored glasses. But I have received, in addition to negative mail, supportive mail with stories from K-State fans who have experienced unpleasant episodes at football games.

The examples I gave were few. The examples I've received are many.

I could give a two-thumbs-up to K-State's fans. But to what end would that lead? None. Readers would read my column, nod their heads and move on.

Because I wrote what I did, readers were forced to look at their own behavior. Perhaps they disagreed with my statement. Great! Perhaps they didn't and realized maybe they give K-State a bad image. It was for those people the column was intended. It was for those people I issued a blanket statement.

And I believe in the old adage from "Hamlet": "The lady doth protest too much." Could it be those who rallied in offense at my statements have been guilty in the past of being savage K-Staters? I don't know, but I hope not.

Now for my proposal. As I stated above, I observed a large minority of K-State people at Rice Stadium, at Hobby Airport and at the airport in Kansas City. They were only recognizable by their purple.

But what about those people who didn't wear purple? And how did those who did communicate to each other?

Texas fans have a tradition of extending their pinky and pointer fingers and saying "Hook 'em, Horns." Texas Tech fans extend their pointer finger while bending their thumb in a pistol fashion, suggesting a Red Raider.

But K-State fans have nothing.

Let's start a tradition, K-State. Prove how much purple pride you have for K-State. Submit to the sports desk via (twobag@ksu.edu) your ideas for identifying other Wildcat fans, similar to those of Texas and Texas Tech.

After a week, the Collegian sports staff will print what we believe to be the top answer. Then it will be up to the fans to implement the new tradition.

So get at it, Wildcat fans.

NU loss gives Wildcats hope for 1st win since 1975

Snyder surprised, but players realize Nebraska will still be a tough opponent

BRENT STOVER
contributing writer

The college football world is still buzzing about what happened Saturday in Tempe, Ariz.,.

For the first time in 38 regular season games, powerful Nebraska has lost. Not only were they defeated, they were shut out 19-0 by Arizona State.

K-State coach Bill Snyder had a simple response.

"It was a surprise," said Snyder, whose team takes on Nebraska Oct. 5, following a bye week this weekend.

The team heard the news on the plane ride home following its 34-7 win against Rice.

"My hat's off to Arizona State," K-State cornerback Chris Canty said. "They played a great game and pretty much did what they had to do to win the ballgame."

The Sun Devils dominated the Huskers, gaining 401 yards to Nebraska's 226. Their defense held Nebraska quarterback Scott Frost to 6 of 20 passing, for a dismal 66 yards.

"They (Nebraska) went out and were kind of complacent and weren't prepared enough to play that ballgame," Canty said.

The Cats are counting on Nebraska being hungry for a win when it visits Manhattan.

"I know it'll be a much different team that comes to play us," linebacker Travis Ochs said. "It doesn't matter to me that they lost."

Coach Snyder said he feels this is the perfect time to have an open date on the schedule.

"One of the most important things is that you create an opportunity just to become refreshed mentally," Snyder said.

The loss dropped Nebraska out of the No. 1 slot in the rankings for the first time this year.

Nebraska's blunder might serve as a teaching tool for other top-notch college-football programs.

"It proves a point to us that anybody can lose at any time," K-State defensive end Nyle Wiren said.

Mighty Nebraska was wounded by a shutout at the hands of Arizona State last weekend, and many think now is the perfect time for K-State to go in for the kill.

"It will be a test for K-State to prove how they'll handle Nebraska," Clay McDowell, junior in business administration, said. "There's not a doubt in my mind they'll win."

The last time K-State defeated Nebraska was 1968 when they shut out the Huskers in Lincoln, 12-0.

Some fans think the odds are working in K-State's favor to pull off the upset victory, though they won't be entirely convinced until the goal posts come down.

"I think the football team is glad to see Nebraska can be beat. It raises the teams hopes," Robbie Campbell, freshman in music, said. "Then again, I don't know if Nebraska can be beaten twice in one year."

The hype surrounding the upcoming match-up is not seen in a positive light for some fans still searching for tickets.

As a result of the hoopla, some fans said they found prices have been inflated for the big game.

"Sixty dollars was the lowest I found," McDowell said.

Some fans said they believe the Nebraska empire is crumbling, though prior to last weekend ithad not been beaten since the '93 Orange Bowl.

For those fans, it means this might be the year the Wildcats finally beat the Huskers.

"They got built up to be such a big empire, people just assumed they couldn't be beat," Kris Wichman, senior in finance, said. "They can be defeated."

If nothing more, the Husker loss is a confidence-builder not only for the team but also for the fans who will jam-pack Wagner Field to cheer on the Cats Oct. 5.

"I think it should give them really good confidence for the game. We definitely have a chance to beat them," Karen Jennings, junior in elementary education, said.

"We need to be ready for them, though. They're gonna be pretty tough."

Wildcat earns national honors

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian

KATE DECLERK is a senior in horticulture therapy and occupational therapy. DeClerk hopes to someday help treat illness and injury with the use of plants and gardening.

For only the 2nd time in school volleyball history, a Cat has earned National Player of the Week honors. For the 2nd time, it's DeClerk.

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

For K-State middle blocker Kate DeClerk, achieving national honors seems to be becoming second nature.

DeClerk

DeClerk was chosen as this week's AVCA National Player of the Week for her performance at the First Bank Invitational in Lincoln, Neb., last weekend.

DeClerk set a Nebraska Coliseum hitting-percentage record hitting .889 against Colorado State. She had 16 kills and no errors in 18 attempts. Her performance also earned her Big 12 Player of the Week honors.

Coach Jim Moore said DeClerk's effort was one of a kind.

"Her performance was the best single performance I've ever seen," Moore said. "What makes it even more impressive was that it was against a legitimate top-20 team."

Yet anyone watching the pregame warm-up might have thought DeClerk should have started the game on the bench.

"I don't think Kate hit one ball in warm-ups," Moore said.

"I didn't know how we were going to do. Then when the game started, she hit the first ball straight down at about the nine-foot mark and it bounced about 30 feet in the air. After that she was on a roll."

DeClerk said the honors were something that she doesn't set out to achieve.

"I don't think about any rewards," DeClerk said. "I just go out and play."

The individual awards and K-State's win against No. 21 Colorado State seem to be earning the Wildcats some recognition. K-State has climbed to No. 29 in the AVCA poll, drawing 42 votes this week.

"I think it's nice that people are starting to take notice of what we're doing as a team and what the individuals on our team are accomplishing," DeClerk said.

"I think how close we are to getting ranked in the top 25 will make us play a lot harder. It's not something that we're going to worry a lot about. Accomplishing our end goal of making the NCAA Tournament is more important."

The Cats open Big 12 play this weekend with Colorado Friday and Nebraska Saturday carrying a seven-game winning streak.

"I think the competition is going to get more difficult," DeClerk said. "We'll get a test this weekend."

Of the upcoming opponents, the Cats have had a stigma playing against the Cornhuskers. K-State is 0-52 against Nebraska.

"It's important that we don't look past Colorado," DeClerk said. "We are concentrating on them first, but its hard not to look ahead to Nebraska.

"I want so badly to beat them," DeClerk said. "The losing streak is something that needs to be broken."

Team earns title; Chambers tops list

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

The K-State women's golf team finished its second meet of the season on a high note.

The team took first place at the Northern Iowa Invitational with a two-day total of 646.

Before the meet, Coach Kristi Knight said she expected the team title and an individual title for the golf team.

Her expectations came true.

Leading the way for the Wildcats was freshman Carrie Chambers, who won the individual title.

But the title did not come easily for Chambers. On the third hole, the shaft on her Tommy Gun driver broke. Chambers was forced to play the rest of the way with a 3-wood off the tee.

"It made the course a lot longer for me," Chambers said. "It made my second shots a lot longer. It probably added a couple of strokes onto my score."

Where it seemed to add some strokes were the par-5 holes.

"Carrie struggled a bit on the par-5s on the back nine," Knight said. "She was three over on them on the back nine. She was disappointed with the way she played the final round, but she still had a solid meet."

Chambers finished the tournament with a two-day total of 157.

Making her collegiate debut for the Cats was junior Danielle Hernandez, who had a disappointing first round score of 89.

But in the second round, Hernandez shot a 78.

"That first round, I got into some trouble with penalty strokes and bad decision-making," Hernandez said. "I learned a lot about the course on that first round. I learned where I needed to play it safe."

Hernandez said on the second day, both she and the team had something to prove.

"I thought it was my duty to say we're Kansas State — we're here to kick some butt," she said.

"I knew I wasn't hitting the ball bad. I was just making bad decisions.

"I just wanted to prove to my teammates that I could step it up and play well."

Knight said, "She got the very best out of that second round. We really needed that score from her on that day."

"She played well for her first college tournament," Knight said. "She was really nervous the first day. It can be hard to concentrate under those circumstances."

Knight said the tournament was a good learning experience for the team.

"We never had a lead going into the final round or had an individual that had a lead," she said.

CANTY

will be back intact. What should be scary for opposing defenses, Canty said, is he just keeps getting better.

"I came into the season just trying to get better," Canty said.

"I just see myself doing so much more."

That brings Canty and the Cats to Oct. 5 and Nebraska, a team the Cats have not defeated during the Canty era at K-State. Or, for that matter, in his lifetime. The last time the Wildcats defeated Nebraska was in 1975, a 12-0 shutout in Lincoln.

Canty said it is disappointing Nebraska will not come to KSU Stadium undefeated after the Cornhuskers lost 19-0 to Arizona State on Saturday, but the Cats cannot afford to let up because of that.

"It's a little disappointing. My hat's off to Arizona State," Canty said. "Nebraska is Nebraska. You got to come out and play with all you got."

But with the all-America accolades, the move to offense and the big special-teams plays, Canty said he has one goal firmly set — to beat Nebraska.

"That's my goal before I leave K-State."

TREATY

U.N. spokesman Sylvana Foa said they discussed the ethnic crisis in Burundi and terrorism but avoided talking about U.S. opposition to Boutros-Ghali's re-election.

On the issue of Boutros-Ghali's term, Russian Foreign Minister Yevgeny Primakov praised the "considerable contribution" made by the secretary-general.

British Foreign Secretary Malcolm Rifkin, however, said his government preferred to discuss the issue of the secretary-general in private.

Other speakers repeated the need for reform and for all members, especially the United States, to pay their bills. Washington accounts for about half the $2.9 billion owed the United Nations by member-states.

"Perhaps some members are withholding dues as a form of blackmail, hoping to pressure the U.N. into reforms through fiscal starvation," Canadian Foreign Minister Lloyd Axworthy said. "This is both wrongheaded and shortsighted."

Libya joined India and Bhutan in voting against the treaty, endorsed by 158 U.N. members. North Korea did not vote. Iran said it considered the treaty flawed but would go along with it.

The treaty establishes a network of 201 monitoring stations worldwide to detect underground, atmospheric or underwater explosions. It would become law 180 days after it is ratified by the 44 countries that have nuclear power or research reactors on their soil.

As soon as Atlantis lands, Lucid will be carried from the shuttle on a stretcher for her own safety and to allow doctors to take her blood pressure and other vital signs. She will stand up only when she feels ready.

A NASA flight surgeon will be constantly at her side, even after she returns home to Houston with her husband and three children. Others doctors will be on call, as well as a dietitian, physical therapist and psychologist.

After a few days of rest, Lucid will begin a two- to three-week rehabilitation program of swimming-pool exercises, sessions on a reclining stationary cycle, massage, physical therapy and whatever else she wants.

If Lucid wants to take a vacation before she returns to work and starts handling the hundreds of requests for interviews and public appearances, that's fine, too, said Frank Culbertson, director of NASA's shuttle-Mir program.

Because of her high-level job at NASA, which pays $75,000-$98,000 a year, Lucid can forget about overtime pay for her nonstop work in orbit.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Welcome to the inaugural issue of "Between the Lines." This column will appear monthly and will provide a mechanism to provide information which may affect students, faculty and staff. We will also use this space to answer frequently asked questions.

Several changes have taken place over the summer at Parking Services. The biggest change was the relocation of our offices. We are now located at 108 Edwards Hall, which is on the west side of the building. We also expanded our service counter hours. We are now open 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Maintenance projects ranging from routine painting to complete surface overlay were completed. Also, with the near completion of the Beach Museum, the parking lot adjacent to the building (A1) has been reopened to public use.

Why??? How??? What if??? and other questions:

Why not put permit renewal forms on the internet so renewals can be done electronically? Current;y, Parking Services has a home page (see address below). Faculty/staff applications and bicycle applications may be found there. We are developing the student application for addition to the home page. There are more permit options for students which have created unique concerns. We hope to have the form available by December.

Why are there no bike racks where you register your bike? KSU Parking Services, along with University Police and Campus Safety, moved into Edwards Hall the week of August 5. At that time, no bicycle racks were located here. On August 26, two bike racks were placed at this building. In addition, we have transferred $5000 to Facilities Maintenance to construct ten additional racks to be placed as needed across campus.

Has it ever been considered to have a permit for the Recreation Complex at a lower price than a normal permit - to be used only at the Rec and not on campus? This question arises frequently, but there are several reasons the costs are the same as other permits. 1) Many departments and individuals work or live within walking distance of the complex. If those individuals purchased a lower cost permit they would be able to park at the Rec all day. This would significantly reduce the number of stalls available to facility users. In addition, because there is now a shuttle from Edwards Hall to main campus, individuals could also purchase the reduced cost permit and shuttle to campus. 2) The cost for upkeep and maintenance for that lot is the same as other campus lots. KSU Parking Services is responsible for payment of all these costs (snow removal, painting, signs, repairs, and construction). We receive no support funds from tuition or tax dollars. All expenses must be paid from revenue generated by users.

We hope the information in these columns will be helpful and encourage questions and comments. We thank those individuals who forwarded their concerns to us. For frequent updates regarding parking, please access our website at http://www.ksu.edu/psafe/parking

K-State students strive to build winning solar-powered vehicle

staff writer

Just about everyone likes to take road trips, but nobody really likes to pay for gas. That's why a group of students at K-State is working so hard to develop a solar car.

"The research we are doing for this car will pay off for the environment eventually," said Ryan Zahner, project manager and senior in mechanical engineering.

Zahner is one of the founding members of the KSU Solar Car Organization, a group that started working on a solar-car project about 11-1/2 years ago. Simply put, the group's mission is to design, finance and construct a winning solar car on behalf of K-State.

The team wants to win Sunrayce 97. Sunrayce is a biennial collegiate solar-car race. It is sponsored by the Department of Energy, General Motors Corp. and Electric Data Systems.

"We want to see our team named on the signs outside town, like the debate team. We want people to know we can win, like the football team," Zahner said.

The purpose of the race is to promote student interest in new technologies. The next event, a 1,250-mile race, will be in June 1997. It starts in Indianapolis, Ind., and finishes in the foothills of the Colorado Rocky Mountains, crossing Kansas along the way.

With the actual race date so far away, people might wonder why the students are working so hard now. One objective is to allow enough time to achieve 1,000 miles of actual road testing before time trials.

"The first qualifier is held in April, when we go to Arizona," Zahner said. "They have rules so you don't go too fast or do anything dangerous."

The purpose of the qualifiers is to see if the cars can make the trip and if all the planning really will pay off. Zahner said in writing the proposal to enter the competition, the group proposed how it plans to do things. Then it does them.

"We know how we want to do things, but we don't know how it will work together," he said.

Most of what's done on the car follows guidelines set out by the sponsors. Crunch zones must be incorporated into the design. No part of the car can be too close to the driver. To keep the car more competitive, the group looks for drivers weighing less than 160 pounds but must take into consideration heights 6 feet or taller.

The cars' solar panels must be manufactured in the United States and be available to all the teams. Carbon fiber, used to make the vehicle lightweight, is readily available. So are lightweight racing seats.

"There are specialized vendors for just about everything now," Zahner said.

The group has a shop for vehicle construction, compliments of the University.

"We have a shop. It leaks when it rains. The floor is concrete. The walls are dirty, but it's brand new, and it's ours. It has a telephone, a desk and file cabinets. It even has a sofa if someone needs a nap," Zahner said.

Once the car is built, road testing it means staying off major highways and driving at average speeds of 35-40 mph. While the car will be lightweight and completely solar-powered, it will lack some amenities. For instance, there will be no air-conditioning.

"During the actual race, the team members really watch out for heat exhaustion. We expect to have four

Tourism at the Beach

State and regional advertising focuses on attracting visitors to the Beach Museum of Art while working to build a student audience

By Russell Fortmeyer

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art has yet to open its doors to the public, but that hasn't stopped the public.

Becky Blake, director of the Manhattan Convention and Visitors Bureau, said tour operators have already inquired about making the Beach art museum a stop on their routes through Kansas.

"We're very excited about the art museum as far as group tours," Blake said. "We know that when the Columbian Theatre opened, it attracted an influx of people that we're still experiencing."

"We expect the Beach to certainly draw people."

Bringing more tourists, whether day-trippers, football fans or vacationers stopping through, means more money for the local economy.

Blake said that, according to the U.S. Travel Data Center, tourism in Riley County accounts for $40 million a year.

Blake said most of the activities Riley County offers are outdoors.

"Konza Prairie and Tuttle Creek are big draws," she said.

However, Blake said the bureau has been trying to promote more leisure activities instead of focusing on visitors who come to Manhattan for a specific purpose.

"We're doing more advertising on a statewide and on a regional basis," she said. "We'd like to get those people to stay here a little longer."

Blake said because the Manhattan area has limited lodging, the bureau is reaching out to Topeka- and Johnson-County-area tourists.

"Now, we're very niche-marketing oriented," she said. "Whether an art museum will net us another niche of traveler, I don't know."

"The museum might be an added incentive to come to Manhattan where that person might not have had the incentive before."

Lawrence-area residents have had the incentive for years to visit the Spencer Museum of Art on the University of Kansas campus, a medium-sized museum that offers a semi-canonical art collection.

Doug Tilghman, assistant director of the Spencer, said the museum attracts between 10,000 and 20,000 out-of-town visitors a year.

He said the total attendance per year at the Spencer is 50,000, not including the university classes in the building.

"Most of our visitors are from northeast Kansas or western Missouri," Tilghman said, "But we have people from all over the U.S., on vacation in the area or to visit friends, who visit the museum."

Tilghman said the Spencer occasionally offers programs that draw scholars from all over the country, but they have never done an economic-impact study of the museum on the community.

"We do get a lot of visitors from Kansas City, even from Wichita and Omaha, because of the proximity," Tilghman said.

He said the Spencer advertises in Kansas City, but it is hard to compete with the arts activities offered there.

"Lawrence is ranked in the top 10 in the nation as far as arts activities per capita," he said. "There's a lot of art activity to compete with in our own town."

"I think a lot of people come to Lawrence not just to visit the museum, but to go downtown to the galleries, to the Lawrence Arts Center and to do some shopping."

Those alternative attractions also exist here in Manhattan.

Nelson Britt, director of the Beach art museum, said he expects the museum will draw visitors who will also want to visit a good local restaurant or to do some shopping at Manhattan Town Center.

"We'll direct people to go do other things in the community, as well," Britt said. "There's a definite impact on the local economy."

Britt said he has no idea how many visitors to expect the first year of the Beach art museum's operation. The art museum opens to the public Oct. 13.

"We will be doing some very specific marketing for the museum once we have our brochures at all the state visitor centers," Britt said.

"This building will take a lot of wear and tear the first year," he said. "We'll be seeing heavy traffic."

Britt said he doesn't know what the typical museum-goer will be like, but he thinks a combination of alumni, students, students' parents and regional visitors will frequent the museum.

"We'll have people all across Kansas who are museum buffs come to visit the museum," he said.

The Edwin A. Ulrich Museum of Art on the campus of Wichita State University reopened six months ago after a two-year renovation.

Donald Knaub, director of the Ulrich, said although the museum is in the process of rebuilding an audience, it attracts relatively few tourists compared with the Wichita Art Museum and the other museums on the river downtown.

Knaub said that, unlike the Beach art museum, the Ulrich has to compete with other major arts facilities.

"We're working on trying to build a student audience," Knaub said. "The primary impact should be on the local student population. It's such a rare opportunity to engage a student population in those rare formative years."

Finishing touches

ROBERT PLUMMER of Eby Construction prepares a handrail to be painted Monday afternoon near the north entrance of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. The museum is expected to be completed in mid-October.

$$$ MONEY $$$

The Educational Opportunity Fund (EOF) was approved on May 19,1988 by the Kansas board of Regents. This fund will generate about $210,000 for allocation next fall. Approximately 1% of student tuition monies are returned to the University for:

1) Academic scholarships and fellowships for both graduate and undergraduate students through the department and college level.
2) Need-based grants, including assistance in the areas of special expenses or for groups of students who have been historically under-represented in higher education.
3) Salaries or grants for students participating in public and community service programs.
4) Salaries for students employed in campus student services.

Applications are due in the Office of Student Activities and Services located on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union by 4 p.m. Sept. 27,1996. Applications received after this time will not be considered, regardless of delays caused by campus mail or the U.S. Postal Service.

Once in a Lifetime

Celebrate your engagement and wedding in the Collegian

Your engagement and wedding are special moments in your life. You want to share your news with family and friends.

The Kansas State Collegian will help you share that news with your K-State family.
For only $12 for an engagement or $15 for a wedding, you can put your announcement in the Collegian's "Once in a Lifetime" special section. For an additional $5, you can also add your picture to your announcement.

"Once in a Lifetime" will run the first Friday of each month. It will run on the following Fridays: Sept. 6, Oct. 4, Nov. 1 and Dec. 6. It will resume in February and will run the following Fridays in the spring semester: Feb. 7, March 7, April 4 and May 2. During the summer, the special section will run on Thursday, June 5 and Thursday, July 3.

The deadline for getting your announcement in the paper will be the Friday preceding the publication date. The announcements will appear similar to the ads shown on this page.

Band creates stir at a dance club in Lawrence

live. music REVIEW

The local band, Stir, has been signed by Capital Records. Their debut album will be re-released by Capitol Records on Oct. 21.

ANDREW FRANCIS
staff reporter

With so many bands traveling the countryside trying to earn devoted fans, many bands struggle to find a niche in the overpopulated spectrum of alternative-rock music.

For new bands to achieve success in the music industry, they have to show record companies they offer innovative music.New bands also have to appeal to the masses of potential record buyers.

Meaningful lyrics and versatility are virtues that help attract the attention of record labels, although they do not guarantee success.

Stir, a trio from St. Louis, is a band that relies on meaningful music and instrumental versatility to earn its niche in the music industry.

Stir was a hit in Lawrence last week.

It may be on the verge of national recognition now that it has signed with Capitol Records.

The band's self-titled debut was released on Aware Records in March.

It will be re-released by Capitol on Tuesday.

The switch to Capitol gives Stir's album wider circulation, as well as the support of a large label.

Andy Schmidt, lead singer and guitarist, is the band's principle songwriter.

Brad Booker plays the drums, and bassist Kevin Gagnepain describes himself as the biggest idiot of the band.

All three musicians grew up in and around St. Louis.

Schmidt and Booker played in a band together before hooking up with Gagnepain at the University of Missouri at Columbia in late 1993.

They have been dedicated to making music ever since they realized they had the talent and desire to to be a successful band.

This success has not been measured in dollars, but in the enjoyment they get from playing live shows and making fans.

Classifying Stir's style of music is not a simple task.

> "Working with Justin was amazing. He took our music and tore it down to the bare essentials. Then he built it back up to a higher standard."
> • KEVIN GAGNEPAIN
> BASSIST FOR STIR

Each song on the band's album has its own individual mood.

This offers depth and variety to the trio's overall sound.

Gagnepain hesitates to classify the band's music.

Gagnepain said it is influenced by rock, alternative and country music.

"Come check it out, and tell me what you think," Gagnepain said.

"People should get their own feelings out of our music," Gagnepain said.

"Whatever they feel is a good enough explanation of what our music is about."

Stir was produced by Justin Niebank, who has also produced records for Blues Traveler and Eric Clapton.

"Working with Justin was amazing," Gagnepain said.

"He took our music and tore it down to the bare essentials. Then he built it back up to a higher standard."

Niebank also helped expand the musical talents of the group.

The album features the trio playing a dulcimer, Wurlitzer electric piano and Dobro guitar and bass.

Booker even plays pots and pans on one track.

"I'd be lying to you if I told you that recording just outside of Nashville didn't have anything to do with the use of the dulcimer and Dobros," Gagnepain said.

"Looking For" recently became the first song off Stir to be released for radio play.

There is talk of making a video for "Looking For," but the project is still in the planning stages.

If you like music that offers meaning and variety, then you will probably enjoy Stir.

No whistles and bells here.

Just good American rock 'n' roll with a twist of alternative and country influence.

Stir seems to be a humble band, which is refreshing when you consider that it could be on the brink of stardom.

For now, the band travels from town to town, merely trying to sustain existence in the music industry. Who knows what its future holds?

Vet-Med grant funds CD-ROM development

JASON WALLE
staff reporter

The College of Veterinary Medicine will help lead K-State well into the 21st century via CD-ROM.

On Sept. 1, a collaborative effort involving more than 20 professors from 10 departments earned a $75,000 grant for a two-year period from the U.S. Department of Agriculture to develop interactive software.

As a result of this project, veterinary medicine students will learn how to work on clinical animal problems through simulation, by means of CD-ROM interaction.

John Pickrell, an environmental toxicologist in clinical sciences and principle investigator of the project, said this project is the first of its type in veterinary medicine.

Unlike traditional teaching tools, such as video cassettes, CD-ROMs will allow students to control what they observe and how long they observe it.

Because these are the early stages of such a state-of-the-art program, the exact functions of the program are still undetermined.

The projected outlook is that students will watch videotaped procedures on a computer monitor and choose from different options on how they would interact, as well as to further explore certain aspects of the event, Pickrell said.

"The CD-ROM allows students to interact with exactly what they are seeing," Pickrell said. "If they want to review a

Basement child care

Children learn responsibility and help keep K-State graduate young

SCOTT PHILLIPS
staff reporter

Chris Payne, 1994 K-State graduate and Manhattan resident, operates a licensed, group day care from his basement.

The day care is for kindergartners through sixth graders. Although Payne owns and operates the service, it is the children who actually take the responsibility of nearly every part of the operation.

This includes taking care of 25 animals and making money for it.

The children named the day care the Cool Care Club and in addition to getting paid so-called bogus bucks for their work at the club, they all have signed an agreement to treat the animals and each other with respect and responsibility.

"The job that each child does teaches them about respect for nature and for the animals," Payne said. "Plus, they think it's pretty cool, and I don't do anything with the kids that I don't think is cool. It's fun."

Besides having fun doing the jobs, the children cash in on their bogus bucks, which they use to purchase small toys or candy.

The jobs are assigned depending on desire and ability, with each child doing two or three jobs.

"My kids get paid bogus bucks for doing jobs like watering the plants and animals or cleaning the rabbit cage and feeding the animals," Payne said. "The jobs vary between daily and weekly responsibilities, as does the pay for those jobs, just like the real world."

Throughout the year, field trips are planned for the children as well. The club travels to Pillsbury Crossing in Manhattan and participates in activities like bowling and golfing.

"This summer we went to my parents' house in Topeka and went swimming after going golfing all day," Payne said.

The students are picked up at their school every afternoon in a 15-passenger white van Payne purchased.

"It takes us on field trips and busses the kids over here from their school," Payne said. "The kids helped pick the name of the van and named it Old Vanilla."

The licensed, group day-care home has been operating since June and is a full-time operation throughout the school year and summer.

Payne's parents helped him buy the house with the intention of renting out the basement to other people until Payne got this idea.

"We put everything together, a little at a time, for almost nine months," Payne said. "I had an open house on July 28 and had about 35 people show up. The club has been going and growing ever since."

Payne graduated from K-State with a degree in elementary education and worked at the KSU Child Development Center for two years.

"My teaching experience at the Child Development Center was invaluable," Payne said. "I really love kids and I get to do all the fun things with them."

During the summer, the Cool Care Club members decided to have a lemonade stand to make enough money to purchase a hedgehog. After three days of lemonade sales in City Park, the children raised $57 and bought Henry the hedgehog.

"The club has given these kids learning experience, a sense of responsibility and respect for other life," Payne said. "The kids are fun. They keep me young."

Chapter works to save wetlands

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

K-State will soon have its own Ducks Unlimited organization. DU is a national organization that tries to protect, enhance, restore and manage wetlands.

Mark Hammerschmidt, junior in landscape architecture, has been involved with DU for more than 10 years. He started DU at K-State.

"I was approached by the state to start DU at K-State," Hammerschmidt said. "I told them that I would like to, but did not have the time. They pushed me until I said yes."

The DU organization at K-State, still to be approved by the University Activities Board, will be run and operated by Hammerschmidt and his committee. The committee members range from landscape architecture to wildlife biology majors.

"I had heard of Ducks Unlimited, but didn't know what it was. When I found out that it was a good organization that did a lot to protect wetlands, I decided to get involved," said Heidi Bielenberg, junior in landscape architecture and DU committee member.

Hammerschmidt said DU is trying to expand its membership.

"They are trying to target and educate the young crowd on or five drivers, and they will switch shifts each day, so nobody has to drive every day during the hottest part of the day," Zahner said.

Zahner expects the total team to number 12-15 people. Before the car ever goes into production, however, many more people will be involved.

"This is a University-wide project, not just an engineering project. Anyone interested in working in marketing the project, working on the car, race planning — even footwork or sandwich-making — please feel free to contact us," Zahner said.

It might not be the most glamorous job in the world, he said, but it's fun being the first people at the University and Kansas to start the tradition of a winning solar-car team.

"The car will be very representative of the University. We've got a lot of pride in what we're doing," Zahner said.

Funding is the biggest aspect of the project. The group plans to approach corporations and write grant proposals, among other things. It anticipates local support and hopes for corporate sponsorship as well.

"But we don't want beer or cigarette advertising on the car. We would really like to get a big soft-drink manufacturer," Zahner said. "We need uniforms, too."

The Kansas Corporation Commission donated money to the project and a Global Positioning System came from Garnin Industries. Even the design proposal netted the group a $2,000 reward.

"Even when people donate $50 or $100, it all adds up," he said.

Jeff Knox, senior in marketing, said he originally became involved because it sounded interesting and it would look great on a résumé. With a class load of 18 hours this semester, the résumé rests on a back burner, but the challenge for him is in raising the money, especially because some said it couldn't be done.

"As of today, we raised $40,000, and we expect to meet our goal of $120,000 by spring," Knox said. "We are finding a lot of people help out for the sake of education."

Knox said money isn't the only form of support needed. People power helps, too. Students from all walks of life at K-State are welcome. For example, Knox said the group is looking for someone to help produce a newsletter.

> "This is a pull quote full of very useful material and justified left. Take out the gosh darn hyphens please."

> • JOE STUDENT
> FRESHMAN IN AGRIBUSINESS

"This is an outstanding project for students to do," he said. "It really is one of the better things to put on a résumé, but it's also good for the University."

Both Knox and Zahner said they felt working on this project would pay off in better employment opportunities.

"That way when we're alums, the next team who wants to build a solar car can call us for money," said Zahner.

The group meets at 7 p.m. Tuesdays in Seaton 110. The telephone number there is 532-5506.

exactly what DU does. They want people to know exactly what a wetland is and how beneficial they are," Hammerschmidt said.

Wetlands are used to recharge underground water supplies and cleanse streams. They also provide habitats and nesting areas for many species.

Hammerschmidt said human intervention will cause poor water supply.

"If we keep building into these areas, our water quality will get really bad," Hammerschmidt said.

DU's first event is a banquet at 6 p.m. Friday at the Ramada Inn. DU has conducted more than 5,000 similar national events since 1994.

The banquet is to include dinner and an auction. Items being auctioned include guns, a rifle, sculptures, duck decoys, prints and watches.

"All of the items are unique to Ducks Unlimited, which makes them valuable and one of a kind," he said.

He said he hopes the banquet will become an annual event held in the spring.

All the money raised from the banquet will go to the national DU office. As of 1995, DU had raised more than $890 million for wetland conservation.

DU was started in the 1930s, and has a current membership of more than half a million. It is a volunteer-based organization.

For information and tickets to the banquet call Mark Hammerschmidt at (913) 494-2273.

certain piece they can go back to it."

Pickrell said this program could allow for different procedures such as operations to be shot from different angles, allowing students to examine medical events from multiple perspectives.

Different perspectives will allow students to observe a procedure as if they were by-standers assisting in the event as well as if they were actually performing the operation, Pickrell said.

Pickrell said he believes such advancements in technology will not threaten or replace any teaching responsibilities, but will better equip teachers in coaching students through precise procedures.

"Most learning comes from reflection," Pickrell said. "Having a picture makes learning easier. Having a picture with sound and that moves makes learning even easier yet. If you can become a part of that procedure, you should be able to pick up even more."

If other universities with veterinary and animal science programs follow suit, Pickrell said he hopes for a cooperative information exchange of interactive software allowing more CD-ROMs available for those interested.

what a rush

RUSHEES TESSA Wendling, Halstead; Megan Meeker, Wellington; and Amber Magee, Junction City, attempt to sing along with Rush counselors during Rush orientation. Rushees were taught one song from each house.

STUDENTS PARTICIPATING in Rush wait outside the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority house. This was the first round of open-house parties, during which the rushees met women in each of the houses and toured the houses for the first time.

It's part of the collective psyche of every sorority member, from not knowing what to say at the first open-house party to the anticipation of Bid Day.

It's Rush, and it's one of college's most pivotal periods for hundreds of women each year.

But it begins long before the bid cards are delivered, long before the house tours begin, long before the first freshman arrives.

PREPARATION

Sunday, Aug. 11 — It began at 1 p.m. Each of K-State's 11 sororities, whose members had already come back to prepare, was given copies of the master list of rushees. Chapter officers, Rush counselors and Panhellenic Council representatives gathered to begin to prepare for the coming week.

At 9 a.m. the next day, the preparation began in earnest.

Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs, and Rush coordinators Jamie Dickson, senior in architectural engineering, and Kim Diskin, senior in communication science disorders, reviewed the basics: who counts as a legacy, how many invitations rushees should accept, etc.

> "If you spill a drink in a girl's lap, or if your leg falls asleep ... it's all right. There are no mistakes."
> • KIM DISKIN
> RUSH COORDINATOR

With each point on the agenda came a stack of papers — lists of rushees, open-house groups, floor meeting agendas, residence-hall rules, Rush rules.

"I feel like I'm already behind," said a soft voice from across the room.

That afternoon the Rush counselors reconvened at the Alpha Chi Omega sorority house for their first house tour. By the end of the afternoon, they had been through all 11 houses.

Although the Rush counselors were not responsible for giving tours to rushees, they did need to know the basics about each house.

Mary Ellen Nass, senior in advertising, said most of the counselors already knew something about each house, but the tours served as a refresher.

"I think almost everyone has friends in most of the houses," Nass said. "This just helps us get acquainted with what's new and who has what types of facilities."

And while the Rush counselors didn't give tours, they knew they would be bombarded with questions.

"With so many things to remember, they'll have lots of questions," Nancy Rinella, senior in elementary education, said. "Just anything the girls need to know — sleeping dorms versus beds in the rooms, telephones in the room."

Preparation continued all that day and into the next. Tuesday night, the counselors moved into their rooms in Haymaker and Moore halls and started getting the buildings ready.

More than 500 rushees would arrive the next day.

ORIENTATION

They began to arrive around noon Wednesday — 503 freshmen, sophomores and juniors who would spend the next five days in a whirlwind of parties and engagements, trying to determine which house best matched their personalities.

But the new arrivals weren't the only ones showing little signs of nerves. The Rush counselors, who were not allowed to reveal what house they belonged to, had spent the last several days making sure they'd left their letters behind, combing through their clothes and covering up stickers on their cars.

"I had gone through everything before I came down here — shorts, T-shirts, everything," Rinella told the counselors on her floor as the last rushees trickled in.

"Then last night I'm walking to the shower and someone pointed to my shower caddy. And there it was, Gamma Phi Beta splashed right across it."

At 4:30 p.m., everyone gathered in Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union for orientation. Dickson and Diskin let the rushees know what was ahead and tried to allay their fears.

"If you spill a drink in a girl's lap, or if your leg falls asleep and you have to start shaking it while you're talking to someone, it's all right," Diskin said. "There are no mistakes."

In what almost seemed like a planned faux pas, Diskin fumbled the microphone when returning it to the podium.

"See," she said, "we're all going to make mistakes."

INVITATION

The next five days were dizzying beyond belief. Rushees visited all 11 houses Wednesday evening and Thursday, selecting which houses they would like to revisit Friday night. Each chapter also submitted a list of invitations for rushees to return.

"I was looking for the friendliness of the girls and how they interacted with each other," Keri Dougherty, freshman in apparel marketing, said of the early parties.

Friday rushees attended as many as eight house-tour parties, another opportunity to learn about individual

Students help communities

MATT BASLER
staff reporter

Every summer, student teams travel to different places in the world as well as around Kansas to educate and assist smaller communities in various activities.

The teams, a part of the K-State Community Service Program recently sponsored a seminar, at which members spoke about their experiences in Kansas and abroad.

> "It's a wonderful opportunity to appreciate completely different lifestyles while gaining real-world experience."
> • VICKIE CLEMENTS
> SENIOR IN FAMILY STUDIES AND HUMAN SERVICES

Students in the program assist communities with education, horticulture, environmental awareness, new technology, media relations and building repair.

The teams are made up of three to four K-State students who are chosen for their cultural awareness and ability to handle difficult situations. These students come back to K-State with a better understanding about community service and the rewards it has to offer.

CSP wants to give students a chance to get involved in community service. It held the seminar to educate students and encourage them to get more involved in campus organizations.

Kim Ebben, junior in social work and coordinator for the Kansas teams, provided the introductory speech.

"We have such an opportunity to influence kids who haven't had a positive influence in their lives," Ebben said. "I probably learned more in one summer than I have in my two years of college."

Members told stories of how they helped people and how the experience affected them personally. The seminar included presentations, visual displays and a reception to inform students about the wide range of possibilities in CSP.

The organization offers three credit hours for the international teams and one hour for Kansas teams. While Kansas team members receive a stipend for their time, international team members gain experience. Students interested in the international teams are selected in November for the following summer.

Founded in 1987, CSP strives to build educational partnerships with communities, both domestically and internationally.

"It's a wonderful opportunity to appreciate a completely different lifestyle while gaining real-world experience," Vickie Clements, senior in family studies and human services, said.

Clements participated in a CSP project in Glasco, working on street preservation.

"It was the best experience I ever had," Rabiha Abuzeineh, junior in elementary education, said. Abuzeineh is the international teams coordinator for CSP.

CSP encourages new students to step up and take the challenge. Each semester, certain courses are offered for students returning from these trips in order to reflect upon their experiences. Without these courses, information and advice could be lost or overlooked. Students receive scholarships to help them pay for trips.

"We try to help them get aid to go on our trips. We try to help facilitate that," Abuzeineh said.

Carol Peak, director of CSP, said the organization operates on funds provided by donations and scholarships contributed by the deans of colleges.

"This is a special group of people," Peak said. "I don't think any of us dreamed that 10 years later we would be talking to you."

Lafene's budget cuts force changes in program funding

KENNY WENTWORTH
staff writer

Saving money is quickly becoming a common goal for University-supported services. Lafene Health Center is no exception.

With less money, the health center faces the challenge of not only satisfying students, but satisfying them with a lower budget.

Last semester, 97 percent of Lafene's patients were content with the health center's services, but it has yet to be determined how cutbacks in services this semester will affect student responses.

"This is my sixth year here, and every year I've been able to utilize the services provided. Hopefully the money crunch they are in won't affect the center too much. If it does, I guess we just have to live with it," Shawn Martin, graduate student in marriage and family therapy, said.

The denial of an increase in student fees for Lafene last semester will have an immediate impact on students, Lafene director Lannie Zweimiller said.

"With cutbacks in funding, Lafene will have to limit its hours even further by not taking appointments after 6:30 p.m.," Zweimiller said. "We also are not able to fill a vacant physician's position due to the cutbacks."

The proposed increase would have set the fee at $90-100 per student. That increase was voted down by Student Senate last spring. Now the health center must find a way to run on the funds it does have, he said.

"With the new way of figuring fees, every student is estimated at paying around $83 for the student health fee. That puts us in a conservative position with our money. We just have to see how things go before we can rehire," Zweimiller said.

The one main concern students expressed in the survey was inconvenient parking. Fewer spaces have been available due to uncontrollable circumstances, such as the library's construction.

"We are trying to get more metered spots. People that just need to run in and pick up a prescription or pay a bill end up having to walk across campus just to get here. With a few more spots, that can be fixed," Zweimiller said.

Local scene rich, diversified

I hate trying to decide what to do on a Friday night.

If you're like me, most of your entertainment budget comes from scrounging around for change in the backseat of your car and looking underneath the cushions of your couch.

Perhaps one of the silliest questions I've ever heard is "Isn't there anything to do in Manhattan?"

Of course.

You just have to know where to look.

Streetside Music offers free live concerts in the afternoons and evenings both at Triangle Park and in the Streetside Records store.

DJ Smoov will play reggae at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday in Triangle Park, across the street from Varney's Book Store.

Shawn Mullins, an opener for the Indigo Girls and Matthew Sweet, will also play at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in Triangle Park .

If you're a line-dancer or if you enjoy live country music, Kickers Saloon and Grille features local musicians, such as New West and Brushfire on Friday and Saturday nights.

If you like spicy Mexican food with your country music, check out Raoul's Escondido on Wednesday nights.

This Wednesday night, Raoul's will feature country singer Mark Hank Monroe from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m.

For a quieter evening, start out at the K-State Student Union Art Gallery. The gallery closes at 5 p.m. every night, but it's a romantic start for a first date.

MY

Portia SISCO

Try different variations. Other local galleries include Strecker Gallery and Willard Gallery.

Beginning August 26, Willard Gallery will feature the works of Martha Horvay, a former K-State instructor of art.

After the gallery, you can walk over to Java or Espresso Royale for some coffee and pastries, or even a light dinner.

Espresso is nice because you can stay as long as you like and enjoy the art, the atmosphere and sometimes the live music.

If you've got the back-to-school blues, try a movie for a pick-me-up.

Manhattan has five movie theaters. Westloop Theatre and Seth Child Cinema feature first-run movies.

The Campus Theatre in Aggieville is better for a low-budget evening of entertainment, and you can catch a movie you missed the first time.

Likewise, Forum Hall in the K-State Student Union also shows second-run movies at student-friendly prices, sponsored by the Union Program Council.

The first UPC Feature Film will be "The Birdcage" at 7 and 9:30 p.m. August 30, and 7 p.m. August 31.

With the reopening of the Varsity Theatre, you can also enjoy art-oriented films, such as "Sense and Sensibility."

While McCain Auditorium events are usually more expensive than movie tickets, they're always worth it.

This fall, upcoming McCain events include "The Bible" by the Reduced Shakespeare Theater and "Pirates! The Ballet" performed by the Queensland Ballet.

If you're looking for local stars, check out the K-State Theatre. K-State Theatre will present its summer production of "The Foreigner" September 3-7 in Nichols Theatre.

From local artists to nationally acclaimed productions, Manhattan offers students rich, diversified entertainment. Friday nights don't have to be hard to plan after all.

Varsity Theatre reopens for fall

ABBI HAKE
staff writer

After a six-week hiatus, due to air-conditioning problems, the Varsity Theater in Aggieville turned on its projectors Aug. 23 just in time to entertain the returning K-State crowd.

Varsity Theater, 1125 Moro, closed down July 11 after one of the two air-conditioning units failed.

Bob Howard, city manager of Manhattan theaters, said one unit would not cool the building properly and the problem was too serious and expensive to fix.

Consequently, they were forced to close the theater until cooler weather prevailed.

"We can't do enough business to replace it," Howard said.

Jamie Pride, manager of the Campus and Varsity theaters, said there was some inquiry over the summer from customers as to why the theater closed.

"We've had a lot of people asking about it," Pride said.

Pride said he was unsure about whether the theater will remain open next summer.

"We don't know what we're doing next year for sure We're playing it by ear," Pride said.

Pride said the Varsity Theater will continue its policy of showing art films.

The theater reopened with "Stealing Beauty," a film about an American girl on vacation in Italy who discovers her first love.

"We're trying to continue on with the same idea," Pride said.

Some of the films being featured throughout the rest of August and September include "Dead Man," "Last Summer in the Hamptons," "Welcome to the Doll House," "Cold Comfort Farm" and "Lone Star."

BILL MESHANE, lead singer of Ultimate Fake Book, jams Friday afternoon in front of Van Zile Hall.

Ultimate Fake Book revamps sound

MIRANDA KENNEDY
staff reporter

live. music REVIEW

The Manhattan band Ultimate Fake Book established its new sound Friday at a concert outside Strong Complex.

Ultimate Fake Book was one of four bands that played Friday to raise money for the Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc. The shelter helps people for a variety of reasons.

Some people there have had a financial crisis, while some have had emotional or personal crises. Some are homeless people trying to travel to another community. But audience members familiar with Ultimate Fake Book might have noticed a new sound from the band.

Bill McShane, singer and guitarist, said the band used to have another singer.

"He sang a lot differently. He did a lot of screaming and yelling," McShane said. "It was really noisy."

Nick Bock, freshman in architecture, said he liked McShane's vocals.

Ultimate Fake Book now sounds less noisy and more melodic. McShane said the change was not planned. It was a natural transition for the band.

He said the former singer left the band because he got married and now has a son. Ultimate Fake Book has released one tape. McShane said because the band made the tape before its sound changed, it does not sell them anymore.

He said the band plans to release a recording this winter.

Another Manhattan band and two Kansas City, Mo., bands also played. Dustin Springer, senior in elementary education and president of Van Zile Hall, organized the event. Admission was $1 or donated soap, deodorant or food.

"Manhattan does so much for the University. I think we need to give a little back," Springer said.

Another Manhattan band, Ruskabank, played after Ultimate Fake Book.

Ruskabank is a seven-piece ska band.

The band members looked bored until their last two songs, when they started to relax.

The band had been trying to convince people to pay or donate to get inside the temporary orange fence.

"The grass is greener on this side," Jayson Sullivan, bassist and sophomore in marketing, said.

During the seventh song, keyboard player Donnyves Laroque, sophomore in music, came down from the stage and danced around with the audience. About eight people were at the front dancing.

Eva Funderburgh, Eisenhower Middle School student and one of the dancers, said, "I'm a big fan of Ruskabank. They played their first concert in our basement."

Ruskabank's singer and guitarist David Spiker, junior in biology secondary education, works for Funderburgh's father.

Her father, James Funderburgh, is a research associate professor of biology.

Spiker said the band played its first concert in the Funderburghs' basement in March.

Springer said all the bands were cooperative. He paid them with pizza and gave the two Kansas City bands $30 each for gas money. One Kansas City band, Mop, was supposed to go on at 6:15 p.m. The band members got lost and did not arrive until 7:30 p.m.

"It's my fault. I drove to Emporia and then almost to Wichita," Jon George, Mop's singer, said.

When Mop arrived, Pamper the Madman, also from Kansas City, had started playing. Pamper the Madman's singer, Theresa Schloegel, stole the stage from her bandmates. She enjoyed performing and had no inhibitions.

Female singers are rare in regional bands, and it was refreshing to see one who was such an engaging performer.

Museum almost ready

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Nearly six months behind its original schedule, yet on budget, the new Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art will open its doors to the public in mid-October.

Nelson Britt, director of the Beach museum, said the ribbon-cutting and official opening to the public is set for 1:30 p.m. Oct. 13.

Britt and the rest of the museum staff are split between two offices. Britt works mostly out of the new offices in the ground level of the museum. The rest of the staff — curator Bill North and education coordinator Kathrine Walker — have been working out of the museum's offices in the Foundation Center for the past several years, about one mile west of the museum on Anderson Avenue.

BEACH Museum of Art

"We're moving in phases," Britt said. "The gallery managers are here working out of one of the offices."

Britt said he was working at the museum because there are numerous details and decisions pertaining to the building itself that must be worked out between the contractor and the subcontractors.

"There's no reason to make trips all day down Anderson," Britt said.

He said from now until the opening, there will always be museum staff in the building — especially since a variety of people stop by unexpectedly to see the museum and to speak with him.

The architect of the museum, Arthur Andersson, visited the museum last Wednesday and was impressed with what he saw, Britt said.

The Beach museum was made possible by a gift of $3 million by Ross and Marianna Beach of Hays, both K-State graduates. Ross Beach gave the gift on behalf of Marianna Beach for their anniversary. Britt said the total cost of the building is $6 million-plus, which is on budget. He said the contingency fund was also spent, but 80 percent of the fund went for the betterment of the building and not for fixing mistakes.

"It's been a very smooth process," Britt said, "but very slow."

Britt said he thinks the University will take possession of the building Sept. 5. By that time, the building's interior, which is still a bit of a work in progress, will be finished, cleaned and ready for the staff to begin the installation of the art in the gallery spaces.

However, Britt said he thinks it will take at least eight to 10 months before the building will function as smoothly as the staff expects. There are already works of art being housed in the temporary storage spaces in the ground-level vault of the museum.

Britt said the main priority for the museum staff is getting the storage facilities up to snuff so work can begin as soon as possible on hanging the exhibits. Most of the work in the storage areas, or vault, of the museum is being done by the staff, he said. The planned cafe, which will be operated by K-State's food services, and a bookstore, operated by the K-State Union Bookstore, will also open with the museum. It will be a few weeks before the books hit the shelves, because the interior remains the most important priority to be completed.

Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and University architect, said overall the building is 98 percent to 99 percent done. Before the art collection can be permanently installed, the building's air must be brought to a satisfactory level of comfort and safety.

Carter said the building must be dried out to reduce the moisture content of the air, because much of the concrete work in the building still contains moisture. He said the building is performing well and has been stabilizing on its own.

The Beach museum, on the extreme southeast corner of campus, will house the K-State art collection. The collection has been in storage at the Foundation Center and hanging in various campus offices for decades while funds were being raised to build a museum.

NEW Evening College

Fall 1996 Evening College Courses
Kansas State University
Evening College has been added to the K-State After Hours program. Evening College/After Hours offers classes on campus at 4:30 p.m. or later, and includes courses that meet requirements for several undergraduate and graduate degrees. Evening College will offer courses, generally between 6:00 p.m. and 10:00 p.m., that are required in most degree programs and that have high enrollments during daytime hours. A popular feature of many evening college courses will be their 8-week schedule which will allow students to complete courses in half the time of the traditional semester courses. Students enrolled in Evening College/After Hours can continue their education while working full-time and meeting family obligations, improving and gaining skills which will enable them to do better on the job or move into a more rewarding position.

Students still have options to vote

MYLISSIA BLANKENSHIP
staff reporter

Students who did not take advantage of the voter-registration table during enrollment and fee payment may still register in the November elections.

Marilyn Oertle of the Riley County clerk's office said the deadline to register is Oct. 21.

In order to register to vote, a person must reside in Riley County at least 14 days before the election.

Aaron Otto, student body vice president, said the Student Government Association and the League of Women Voters is planning a registration drive.

They will be mailing voter-registration cards to K-State students and planning several other activities and events associated with this year's election.

"Registering and voting is easier than it has ever been," said Otto. "We hope to register more students than ever this year. In the last presidential election, only 25 percent of K-State students voted on campus."

Voters who registered previously in other counties may transfer their registration to Riley County by filling out a form in the county clerk's office or by completing a change-of-address card at the driver's license office.

Oertle said voters who have registered to vote in Riley County before but now live at a different address may go to the booth designated for their new address and fill out a form on election day.

New voters who have not previously registered may register at the county clerk's office, the driver's license office or the public library. Several Manhattan banks also offer voter registration.

Karen Tryphonas, who works in the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union, said that students may register at OSAS.

Students may register to vote in Riley County or in the county they come from. If they register for another county, however, they will have to travel back there to vote or vote by mail.

Voters have more options this year than they have had in the past. Advance voting has replaced absentee voting.

Trisha Champlin of the Riley County clerk's office said new laws require the county clerk to make ballots available at least seven days before the election for voters who wish to cast their ballots in advance. The clerk has the option of allowing advance voting up to 20 days before the election. Voters may stop by the clerk's office and cast their ballot.

Voting by mail is possible. Registered voters can call and request an application for a mail-in ballot until Nov. 1, but it is not a good idea to wait that long.

"People that wait until the last day to request a mail-in ballot are really taking a chance," said Champlin. "All ballots must be in on election day, or they won't be counted."

Student artwork collects awards during Chang Gallery exhibition

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

A collection of interesting design projects from the College of Architecture and Design spent its summer vacation in Seaton Hall's Chang Gallery.

Diane Potts, director of business and administrative services for the College of Architecture and Design, said the exhibition features work chosen by college faculty as being the most exceptional among the graduating seniors.

The Chang itself houses the nominated and winning projects from the 1996 Heintzelman Prize, while the display boards across the hall from the gallery feature landscape and interior architecture projects. The work will be on exhibit until Aug. 30.

The Heintzelman Prize is an annual competition of outstanding design achievements by students in the final semester of the professional bachelor of architecture degree program. The prize is named after J. Cranston Heintzelman, who taught in the Department of Architecture.

The six students nominated were Dwayne Oyler, Michael Stornello, Jeffrey Schutzler, Kurt Schultz, Yoonhie Lee and Chris Metz. Lee was chosen as the winner for her "Edward Hopper Collection and Library of American Realism."

If anything, Lee's winning entry harks back to a pre-World War II modernism of Le Corbusier which, although it occurred during Hopper's prodigious period, was never fully reflected in his work.

The prize is awarded by a jury of three. This year's jury included Jonathan Kemper, chairman of the Commerce Bank in Kansas City, Mo.; W. Cecil Steward, FAIA and dean of the College of Architecture at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln; and Manhattan's own Julie Strecker, owner of the Strecker Gallery downtown.

Once in a Lifetime

Celebrate your engagement and wedding in the Collegian

Your engagement and wedding are special moments in your life. You want to share your news with family and friends.

The Kansas State Collegian will help you share that news with your K-State family. For only $12 for an engagement or $15 for a wedding, you can put your annoucement in the Collegian's "Once in a Lifetime" special section. For an additional $5, you can also add your picture to your announcement.

"Once in a Lifetime" will run the first Friday of each month beginning in September. It will run on the following Fridays: Sept. 6, Oct. 4, Nov. 1 and Dec. 6. It will resume in February and will run the following Fridays in the spring semester: Feb. 7, March 7, April 4 and May 2. During the summer, the special section will run on Thursday, June 5 and Thursday, July 3.

The deadline for getting your announcement in the paper will be the Friday preceeding the publication date. The announcements will appear similar to the example shown.

Evening college courses provide closed-class relief

KENNY WENTWORTH
staff reporter

The most dreaded list on campus is often the closed-class list. Starting this semester, evening college, an alternative time period for introductory-level classes that fill quickly, is available.

The program will give students the opportunity to take up to 15 different courses at night.

Because many introductory-level courses are often full, more of these classes were needed, Dave Stewart, assistant dean of continuing education, said.

"We had on-campus students having to go off campus to take courses, because they were full here. They should not have to do that and hopefully won't, since evening college is now available," Stewart said.

Another group that will benefit from evening college is non-traditional students, Stewart said. Because many of them often have other obligations during the day with children or jobs, evening is the only available time.

"Students enrolled in evening college courses can continue their education while working full-time and meeting family obligations. Students can gain new skills which will enable them to do better on the job or to move into a more rewarding position," Stewart said.

The courses that will be offered cover a wide range of introductory-level subjects, including Spanish, history, chemistry and college algebra.

The classes will meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays and will last three hours. They will be taught on an eight-week program, Stewart said.

"This is another aspect that might attract students to the program. You will have to sit in class the same amount of hours, but it lasts just eight weeks," he said.

The future of the program is not certain, but the program could grow if there is ample response, Stewart said.

"Right now around 200 people are enrolled, but I would like to see that number increase to around 350 before school starts," Stewart said. "Who knows? If evening college becomes popular, a whole world of opportunities could start to exist."

Professor visits rural setting in Canada, learns new culture

BREE BISNETTE
staff reporter

Little Buffalo, Canada, has few modern accommodations to offer its visitors, but two Manhattan residents felt they had much to gain from a stay in the rural village.

Cia Verschelden, associate professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, and her husband, Dean Denner, ventured to Little Buffalo a month ago for a two-year stay with 500 Cree Indians.

The Cree have been struggling to keep their livelihood and culture from being stripped by the government who would like to exploit the land for its timber and mineral wealth.

"The Cree were living on the land, and oil was found," Verschelden said. "One Japanese company has been doing a lot of drilling in that area, and the Cree keep getting moved to smaller and smaller pieces of land."

The government has offered 95 square miles of land as a settlement.

"The Indians want the land, plus means to ensure they are self-sufficient and do not have to depend on welfare," Denner said.

The Cree want to begin farming and raising cattle and buffalo.

"It will take about six months to see how our talents can contribute to the community," Verschelden said.

Verschelden said she may be teaching at a small kindergarten through 12th grade school in the town. Denner's specialty is building and gardening.

While Verschelden and Denner are unsure of what their duties will be in serving the Cree, they know what the Cree have to offer them.

"We hope to learn about the native culture and just gain a better understanding of how some people are struggling for survival," Verschelden said.

Denner and Verschelden also hope their four children, ages 3, 5, 8 and 16, will benefit from living with the Cree for two years.

"The children don't have running water. We use an outhouse, there's not TV, and the house is about half of the size of the one we had in Manhattan," Verschelden said. "I think their needs and wants will be more modest when we return, and I hope they'll learn there's a different way to live."

First fans

DOUG WILEY, Manhattan, offers a little Wildcat support to his daughter, Sarah, 4, during team-captain introductions at Fan Appreciation Day last Wednesday at KSU Stadium. The Wileys were two of nearly 5,000 fans who showed up to see the Wildcats practice. For more details, see story on page 14.

Wareham hums with ska

staff writer

For live-music lovers, the semester started Friday night as the Wareham Opera House came alive with the insidious groove and grind of Hum, Truck Stop Love and MU330.

Hum's almost eerie winding and layers of psychedelic splintering elevated into a surreal rock that peaked with moshing and stage-diving.

Sponsored by KMKF-FM 101.5, St. Louis' MU330 launched the cosmic jam with its usual, unrelenting, hyperfunk ska.

live. music REVIEW

The band is preparing for a tour in October with Skankin' Pickle and will return to Manhattan Aug. 30 for the Welcome Back concert with Kill Creek, Fast Ball and Manhattan's Ultimate Fake Book.

"We've been touring constantly," Jason Nelson, fluorescent purple-haired vocalist, said. "Last year we put over 70,000 miles on our van, and since January we've already put 60,000 miles on our van."

In addition to an inexhaustible tour, MU330 has been as busy in the studio as it's been on the road.

In January, the band was signed to Dill Records, releasing "Chumps On Parade" in April, and recently returned to the studio for a compilation record with other Dill bands, including the Rudiments, Janitors Against Apartheid and Skankin' Pickle.

For the unmistakably ska band, it was a welcome opportunity to play with bands so far outside their genre, rather than the usual typecasted line-up.

"What I like about it is it's real diverse," said Ted Moll, drummer for MU330. "A lot of the time we don't get to play with different kinds of bands, other than just ska bills or punk bills."

The skanking crested into a mellow rock with a hillbilly edge and a touch of punk when Manhattan's own Truck Stop Love took the spotlight.

Setting a precedent as the first local band to stir national attention, TSL has been an inspiration and motivating force to most Manhattan bands, but guitarist Jim Crego said, "It's time to piss or get off the pot.

"If we don't have a record deal by the first of the year, we're done," Crego said. "We've been really slacking and coasting this year, and it's put-up or shut-up time.

"The last few months we've been in neutral," he said. "The ball is rolling right now, but we have all got a lot of other things going on and we have got to set some goals and try to attain them. We just need to get signed because we can't afford to do it on our own, but I totally love TSL, and I believe in it," he said.

The show was called off as a result of slow ticket sales, but later the Wareham was packed with approximately 350 people. The bands insisted on playing with or without a guarantee they would get paid.

"I'm really happy with the turnout," Ken Snook, promoter for STL Productions from Lawrence, said: "The advance tickets were so slow the show was almost canceled."

"For a promoter (last-minute ticket-buyers) are a nightmare. If it weren't for the guys really wanting to do the show anyway, it wouldn't have happened."

Despite the large number of last-minute patrons, there was no lack of enthusiasm or support for the bands.

"I came to see Truck Stop and basically to support local music in Manhattan," Seth Lamborn, senior in social sciences, said. "You've got to come to shows to get shows to come here.

"People should go out to every local show they can so that other bands will know that Manhattan is a cool place to go."

chapter and interact with its members. The dance continued Saturday, with rushees visiting as many as five houses again.

At each step along the way, the rushees and the chapters eliminated each other from consideration, each trying to find the best mix of personalities.

This was where the Rush counselors did the majority of their work, answering the rushees' questions and listening to their concerns.

"More than anything you just listen to them, how they're feeling about each house," Rinella said. "I think it gives them an opportunity to talk to an unbiased source."

Dougherty said by then the primary concern was finding similarities and meeting women she would get along with, and agreed the counselors were a valuable resource.

"Where I felt most comfortable, really — I was looking for where I fit in well with the girls who were already there," she said.

"The Rush counselors helped us stay focused. They didn't try to sway us one way or another, but just listened to what we had to say and helped us answer our own questions."

Sunday-morning invitations were extended for the final round of parties. Rushees were allowed to select as many as three chapters to visit for preference parties, which began that evening.

"By the time the girls have narrowed their choices down to three houses, statistics show they are likely to be equally happy in any of the three houses," Robel said.

"So the important thing is to make sure they have really thought about this decision and are not letting other people make it for them."

ANTICIPATION

Monday morning, the air could be cut with a knife. At 9:15 a.m. counselors would begin distributing invitations to pledge, but the rushees were anxiously reliving the week by 8 a.m.

"I liked all three of the houses I visited," one rushee told her cohorts. "I almost don't want to know where I'm going."

"Ten minutes," said another, followed by a long pause.

"I don't know," said a quiet voice, "but altogether I think I made the right choices."

Silence again filled the lobby.

"Five minutes."

A few minutes later, it was over. Of the 503 women originally signed up to rush, 32 had withdrawn, and seven had been dropped during the course of the week.

The remaining 464 were all extended invitations, with as many as 46 going to any individual house.

Each chapter took roll of its new pledges before beginning the journey to their new house — a journey that, for many, will be just the start of their life experiences at K-State.

Pulitzer a possibility for adviser

DAN LEWERENZ
assistant campus editor

Since 1990, anthropologist Bunny McBride has spent time on campus, unofficially advising K-State students. Last spring, K-State formalized the relationship, giving McBride the title of adjunct professor.

Little did the University know McBride was about to be nominated for the Pulitzer Prize in biography.

A practicing journalist who had studied English and fine arts in college, McBride was midway through work on her master of fine arts degree when she decided she needed a new approach.

"It was one of those unplanned career changes in that I had been in the realm of journalism, and what I was really drawn to write about was Third World development issues and cultural survival issues," McBride said. "And I felt, 'People are reading this, and people are believing it, but where's my foundational basis?'

"I felt I needed training, field training and real holistic training, not just writing training. I wanted perspective, the kind of perspective that would help me understand not just the news but the cultural context of the news."

Through work with a community youth center in Boston, McBride was introduced to the Mi' kmaq Indians, a tribe with ties to Maine and Newfoundland.

"The Mi' kmaq are the largest Indian population in Boston, and so I knew several Mi' kmaq families," she said. "A friend of mine was doing community development work with off-reservation Indians, and she said, 'Oh, you have a degree in anthropology. They just lost an anthropologist, and they need somebody. Would you help? They were left out of this huge land-claim settlement in Maine.' "

While McBride said she was apprehensive about taking the position, she had a friend coming from the Netherlands, Harald Prins, now a professor of anthropology at K-State, and suggested the position to him.

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

BUNNY McBRIDE puts her book, "Molly Spotted Elk: A Penobscot in Paris," back on the shelf at her home.

In the end, the two decided to seek the position jointly, with McBride focusing on recording oral histories and community development while still writing extensively about African issues.

It was during that time Prins found a number of articles about Molly Spotted Elk, a Penobscot dancer, actress, model and journalist.

"Why are you going to Mali when you could be writing about Molly and not leaving so often?" McBride remembers Prins asking.

But it wasn't until she saw an article about Spotted Elk in a local paper that McBride decided to write about her.

"In this article there was this portrait picture of Molly, and it really grabbed my attention. So I called Molly's sister, Eunice, and said I wanted to write an article about her sister, maybe a book," she said.

McBride talked with Eunice Nelson-Bauman, Spotted Elk's sister, and Jean Archambaud Moore, Spotted Elk's daughter, about writing a magazine article. But other projects demanded her attention until 1991, when she began work in earnest on the book "Molly Spotted Elk: A Penobscot in Paris," published by the University of Oklahoma Press in 1995.

Spotted Elk, raised in Old Town on the Penobscot reservation in Maine, was a well-known dancer and actress in the United States before performing in the Colonial Exposition in Paris in 1931.

She decided to stay in France, where she would later marry Jean ("Johnny") Archambaud (after whom her daughter would be named), a Parisian journalist. Spotted Elk gave birth to her daughter in the States and later returned to France.

In 1940, she was forced to flee France on foot with her young daughter for Portugal, where she would take a ship back to America.

Throughout her time in France, she maintained her Penobscot traditions, teaching them to young Jean.

"She was well-rooted and held on to her traditions, her strengths, and yet she was always reaching out. And that's my view of real progress — marking out what is important and carrying it forward and taking it with you," McBride said.

"Here we are today in a society struggling with its own multicultural identity, and I thought if I could write her life in such a way that people felt they were taking her arm and experience what she experienced, that would help her effort to build bridges. And not just part of her life, but something that I really believe in, which is answering the question of how we can all live together in grace."

Biography brings Spotted Elk to life

DAN LEWERENZ
assistant campus editor

Molly Spotted Elk (1903-77) led a life most people, even in Hollywood, could only dream of.

Raised to respect her traditions on the Penobscot Indian Reservation (Old Town, Maine), she modeled for internationally known artists, including sculptor Bonnie MacLeary; achieved fame and critical acclaim for her roles on the big screen; danced her way from Old Town to New York and eventually to Paris; and married a Frenchman, only to flee the invading German armies over the Pyrenees on foot with her young daughter.

Her life has been the subject of numerous interviews in Maine newspapers. But Spotted Elk's story has now been captured in full in Bunny McBride's "Molly Spotted Elk: A Penobscot in Paris," (University of Oklahoma Press, 1995).

book REVIEW

A journalist and Columbia University-trained anthropologist, McBride recreates the details of Spotted Elk's life in a rich and inviting prose born of Spotted Elk's own diaries. McBride's anthropological training allows her to examine Penobscot life in Old Town without the patronizing tone so common in books about Indian people.

Born Molliedellis "Molly" Nelson, Spotted Elk (a stage name she took) faced racism early in life, but never accepted it. Many of her early romantic interests found her a curiosity — a beautiful, intelligent woman they could never accept as their equal.

Her dancing took her away from the East Coast and allowed her to express her traditions in a comfortable setting. But the stage was defined by the audience, who wanted to see Plains Indians in feathered headdress doing a war dance. McBride chronicles Spotted Elk's struggles and triumphs in the topsy-turvy world of entertainment, including her neverending struggle to accurately represent Indian people on stage and screen.

Molly's art took her to Paris, where a more curious and less biased populace gave her more freedom to express herself. There she met Jean "Johnny" Archambaud, later her husband and the father of her daughter Jean. In France she worked as a journalist and nearly had her first book published before civil unrest forced her to escape to America without her husband.

The Saturday Evening Post lauded Spotted Elk and "The Silent Enemy" as deserving of a Pulitzer Prize as "the best American dramatic creation for the year 1930" — and in an ironic fulfillment of that commendation, McBride's book has been nominated for the Pulitzer Prize for biography.

It is worthy of that and more. Accessible to the young reader, detailed enough for the scholar of Indian history, "Molly Spotted Elk" is an enjoyable book to read.

Recreational Services

REC REPORT

August 1996

This is a Paid Advertisement

Tune in to our full page ad on the 1st day of each month for program information and monthly calendar of Recreational Services Events!

TUNE IN TO... Recreational Services' Programs

Over 80 percent of the students and more than one-third of the faculty/staff voluntarily participate in Recreational Services' programs. Feel better both mentally and physically and improve your performance by taking advantage of the many recreational sport and fitness opportunities offered by Recreational Services.

The Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex has received national recognition in facility design and function. Our facilities and programs provide you many opportunities to exercise, lift weights, shoot some hoops, participate in Intramurals, meet people, relieve stress, lose weight, and have fun! Recreational Services also offers pool hours at the Natatorium, featuring two pools plus a diving well with varying water temperatures and aquatic exercise opportunities. For outdoor enthusiasts, lighted sand volleyball courts, horseshoe pits, tennis courts and playfields are available. And the Outdoor Rental Center provides a wide variety of camping and outdoor gear!

We are here for you. Make time to tune in to Recreational Services and take advantage of the many recreational and fitness opportunities available to you!

Intramural MANIA

The Intramural program offers a wide variety of individual and team sports. All students, faculty and staff are invited to participate. It's a great way to meet people, have fun and stay fit!

Fall Sports Begin

The first Intramural entry week is August 26-30. During that week, entries will be accepted in the Recreational Services office from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. for the following sports:

- Flag Football
- Soccer
- 3-Wall Handball Singles
- 3-Wall Raquetball Singles
- Horseshoes Singles
- Tennis Singles
- Badminton Singles
- Doubles Volleyball
- 1 on 1 Basketball

An entry fee is charged for each Intramural activity. Team sports are charged $10 per team and Individual Sports are $1 per person. A yearly team fee is also available. All Intramural fees are subject to sales tax.

Captains'/Managers' Meeting

Four times during the year, Captains'/Managers' meetings are held. These meetings take place after the entry deadline and schedules will be distributed at this meeting only. Make sure your team is represented to avoid being put on Intramural Probation.

Working It Out

Come try the new moves and hear the new sounds for Wildcat Workouts at the Rec Plex. We have added a new class this year so come out to the multipurpose room on Monday and Wednesday evenings and try some new moves. The new class is Funk Aerobics. Funk is similar to aerobics with funky dance moves. We've purchased more Ultra Toner bands for toning classes and have added a lot of new tunes. There will not be any exercise sessions Monday, Sept. 2. The facility will be closed for Labor Day.

Wellness Resource Center

The resource room offers many services to Rec users. These services include a wide range of fitness tests, which include sub max VO2, flexibility, body fat, grip strength, muscular endurance and blood pressure evaluation. We also prescribe personal exercise workouts to help you achieve your fitness goals. If you are new to the Rec, we are happy to introduce you to our facility and the equipment. We hope to be expanding the services of our resource room and hope that you'll come by and check us out.

TUNE IN TO... Outdoor Facilities

Outdoor facilities at the Peters Recreation Complex include:

- 20 acres of lighted playfields for football, soccer, softball or your favorite outdoor activity
- 10 lighted tennis courts, 8 lighted 3-wall handball/racquetball courts, 4 horseshoe pits, and a basketball court
- 2 lighted sand volleyball courts
- Fitness cluster designed to help with conditioning & toning
- 1/4- or 1/2-mile running trails adjacent to fitness cluster

POOL ACTION

The first Monday evening of each month at 8 p.m., Recreational Services will provide a Stroke Mechanics Workshop for swimmers interested in improving their swimming style and stroke efficiency. Certified water safety instructors will coach you in learning new ways to improve your swimming. Sign up at the Natatorium during recreational swim hours. These are not swimming lessons for novice swimmers.

September Pool closures:
Sept. 2 Labor Day Holiday
Sept. 17 & 19 No Evening Swim (swim meet)

Wildcat Waterworks:
Aqua Aerobics Mon/Tue/Thu 12 p.m. & 8 p.m.
Deep Water Jogging Wednesday 8 p.m.

Weight & Fitness Area

Our 10,000 square foot weight and fitness area features a combination of cardiovascular equipment, selectorized weight machines, plate loaded weight equipment and free weights. Our more than 100 cardiovascular machines include stair climbers, bikes, treadmills, skiers, rowers and various others.

A variety of selectorized Cybex equipment is also located off the mall track on the upper level in a circuit configuration.

Plate loaded and free weight equipment is located on the south side of the weight and fitness area. Plate loaded machines are in a fixed position; however, the participant determines the amount of weight to be lifted by adding weight plates.

Supervisors are on duty during building hours to assist with questions and checkout of equipment specific to the weight and fitness area.

Fitness Facts

True or False! Five commonly held myths about lifting weights:

1) You have to be in shape first;
2) You'll become muscle-bound;
3) It's hard on joints;
4) You need expensive equipment;
5) It won't help you lose weight.

* False on all accounts says "Health" magazine (March/April 1996).

Rec Check

Rec Check provides program and facility information 24 hours a day by dialing 532-6000. Call Rec Check for Recreation Complex and Pool hours, exercise sessions, Intramural deadlines and more!

New jobs in city's future

▶ The Farrar Corporation has chosen Manhattan as an expansion site. Farrar will offer 280 jobs in the manufacturing industry over a 10-year period.

BRANDI HERTIG
staff reporter

Opportunities for employment may be opening up in the Manhattan area for K-State graduates and students at the Farrar Corporation, a metal casting plant and machining operation.

Farrar Corporation has announced plans to extend the corporation to Manhattan. The proposed facility will cost more than $20 million.

The company will bring about 280 jobs to the area once it is fully operational.

Joe Farrar, president of the Farrar Corporation, said the fact that Manhattan has a four-year secondary education school, K-State, was one of the reasons he decided to bring his company here.

"We look forward to exploring the possibilities of establishing cooperative internship programs with the University and other institutions to provide learning experiences in technical manufacturing areas, which may not be currently available to students," Farrar said in a press release.

The company plans to initially employ about 50 people, gradually progressing toward 280 in its first 10 years of operation. Farrar anticipates the beginning average wage will be more than $25,000 a year.

The Farrar Corporation makes specialized parts for a variety of companies. Some of the manufacturers for which it produces parts include lawn-mower and trucking manufacturers.

The Manhattan site in Pottawatomie County will be an addition to the company's current manufacturing facility in Norwich.

Manhattan was chosen as the site for the new location because it met many of the criteria set by the company, Farrar said.

Manhattan is east of Interstate 135, which was an important factor for the company's decision to come to Manhattan, as most of their raw material comes from the east. Manhattan is also connected to a four-lane highway system and has an airport, both necessary for transporting goods and materials.

Speech team places first in tourney, strives toward national ranking

The K-State speech team won first place at the Hill Country Swing Speech Tournament at the University of Texas in Austin and Southwest Texas State in San Marcos.

"We did what we had to do this past weekend," said Ric Shafer, senior in speech and political science. "We gave it our best and everything fell into place."

After seeing the level of excellence and competition at the national speech tournament last April, the speech team became focused on becoming nationally ranked and thus competitive with the big universities in the competition over the weekend.

"After nationals last year the team became much more determined to do a better job this year," speech coach Craig Brown, said. "This year we started with a pre-season work retreat before fee payment where all we did was work for this tournament."

As the speech team found out, the hard work paid off. The team, composed of 12 students, competed with 17 other schools from Texas, Kansas, Oklahoma and Louisiana. Six of those schools were ranked nationally in the top 20 for speech programs.

"This was really a great start to the year," Clayton Johnson, senior in secondary education, said. "We look at this as an affirmation of our efforts put forth thus far."

The K-State group competed in 11 different events ranging from informative public speaking to dramatic interpretation. Probably one of the most unique and interesting speeches given at the competition was the after-dinner speech.

4 killed following Israel's decision to build on holy site

RAMALLAH, West Bank — Palestinian police and Israeli troops battled with automatic weapons Wednesday, casting Israel and the Palestinians into their biggest crisis in three years. Four people died, and more than 350 were wounded as Palestinians cheered on their police against the Israelis.

The exchanges of fire in the West Bank towns of Ramallah and Bethlehem began during stone-throwing protests by thousands of Palestinians angered by Israel's decision to open an archaeological tunnel near Jerusalem's Al Aqsa Mosque compound, Islam's third-holiest site.

"The decision was good, but the timing was bad," said Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, who personally ordered completion of the tunnel.

The violence was reminiscent of the six-year Palestinian uprising against Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip that ended with the 1993 signing of a peace agreement. Nearly 2,000 Palestinians were killed by Israelis during the revolt.

But Wednesday's confrontations for the first time involved armed Palestinian forces — 30,000 armed Palestinian police were deployed in the West Bank and Gaza Strip as part of the peace accords.

Palestinian demonstrators said they took to the streets with the encouragement of their leaders.

"The Palestinian authority is giving us the green light to demonstrate and throw stones and return to the uprising," said Mohammed Kafkay.

Palestinians cheered on their police as the officers fired at the Israelis.

Students must borrow money to cover tuition

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A steep upward spiral in college costs has slowed, but increases in tuition will outpace inflation again this year, and students are borrowing more to get degrees.

"There have been times I've had two and three jobs at one time and still went to school," said Debbie Coleman, 24, a senior at Washington's private Trinity College. "I borrowed $1,000 this semester, but I have $25,000 in loans already."

Coleman, expecting her first child, said her husband wonders how they'll pay off the loans.

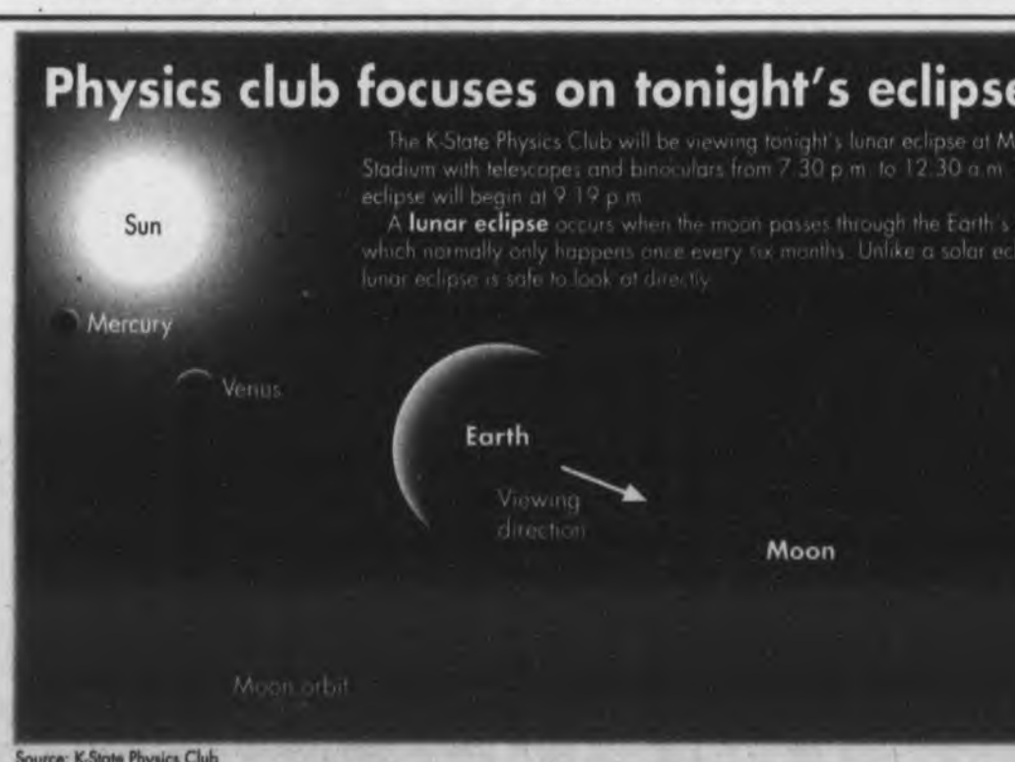
"Yeah, it's a lot of money, but it's important," she said. "I plan on looking for a good job — $30,000 or up."

A study released Wednesday by the College Board found that four-year public colleges and universities boosted undergraduate tuition this year an average 6 percent. Increases in the double digits occurred annually between 1991 and 1993.

At four-year private schools, students are paying about 5 percent more in tuition and fees this year, compared with a year ago, the survey said. That's the smallest increase in a decade but remains higher than inflation, hovering at 3 percent.

Room and board also went up an average of 6 percent to $4,152 at four-year public colleges and 4 percent to $5,361 at private schools.

The College Board, an association of 2,800 colleges, found that instate tuition and fees, not counting room and board, now average $2,811 at public four-year colleges and $12,823 at private schools. The average annual cost at two-year schools was about half that amount.



The College Board's annual report said $50.3 billion in aid was available in 1995-96 from federal, state and school sources — up 4 percent from 1994-95 and 75 percent higher than a decade ago.

Most of the increase was in the form of loans, however, not in grants. Student and parent loan volume rose 65 percent since the 1992-93 school year and, adjusted for inflation, was 8 percent higher than in 1994-95.

Physics club focuses on tonight's eclipse

The K-State Physics Club will be viewing tonight's lunar eclipse at Memorial Stadium with telescopes and binoculars from 7:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m. The total eclipse will begin at 9:19 p.m.

A lunar eclipse occurs when the moon passes through the Earth's shadow, which normally only happens once every six months. Unlike a solar eclipse, a lunar eclipse is safe to look at directly.

Students will have the opportunity to view something tonight from campus that they won't see again until after the turn of the century.

Students have the opportunity to view a full lunar eclipse tonight using telescopes at Old Stadium.

This will be the last full lunar eclipse to be seen from the United States until the year 2000, said Lloyd Verhage, astronomical coordinator for the K-State physics club.

However, this will be a full lunar eclipse. This is when the moon passes over the umbra, or nucleus, of the earth's shadow creating a pumpkin-like glow.

"This one will be really special because it's a full eclipse and a harvest moon," Verhage said.

Along with the lunar eclipse, the physics club will have a telescope fixed on Saturn and one on Jupiter, which will both be visible.

Verhage said the eclipse will be visible to the naked eye, but will be greatly enhanced with a telescope.

"Hopefully it won't be too cloudy and we will have a clear shot the entire time," Verhage said. "But gambling on a lunar eclipse is a lot like gambling on horses. You just never know."

NATION WORLD

• YELTSIN'S SURGERY POSTPONED. Boris Yeltsin's bypass surgery will have to wait six to 10 weeks to give his damaged heart time to heal, and then he'll need two months to recuperate from the operation — meaning Russia will likely be governed from a sickbed into the new year. Doctors said Wednesday that Yeltsin must remain in a hospital or health resort until he undergoes the triple-or quadruple-bypass surgery, although he can do paperwork and see visitors.

• HOUSE PASSES TWO ILLEGAL ALIEN BILLS. Cracking down on illegal aliens, the House passed two bills Wednesday — one focusing on law enforcement and the other letting states deny public school education to illegal alien children. Only the first had a chance of getting President Clinton's signature. The Senate was expected to reject the second bill and Clinton has said he would veto the measure. The far larger bill, which would nearly double the number of border patrol officers and speed deportation procedures, passed earlier in the day, 305-123.

• CIVILIAN EXPERT ARRESTED FOR SPYING. A civilian computer expert was accused Wednesday of passing at least 50 intelligence documents to a South Korean agent. American officials were scrambling to determine the scope of the security breach. In a 20-page affidavit, the FBI said it has evidence that Robert Chaegon Kim, 56, who worked for the Office of Naval Intelligence, passed dozens of classified records during a five-month span earlier this year.

• RENZ ELECTED TO NATIONAL BOARD. The President of the K-State University Alumni Association, Amy Button Renz, was recently elected to the national board of trustees of the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education. The national organization represents college and university professionals in the field of alumni and governmental relations.

• DANNELLS TO BE ACPA DIRECTOR. Michael Dannells, K-State associate professor and coordinator of the college student personnel program, has been elected as director of the commissions of the American College Personnel Association. The association, the largest in the nation for student affairs professionals, provides professional programs and services for educators who assist in the development of students' post-secondary education goals.

• K-STATE ATTRACTS HIGH-SCHOOL SCHOLARS. This fall, K-State has attracted the highest number of high school graduates who were ranked first or second in their graduating class for the fifth consecutive year with a record number of 267. The freshman class also includes 158 Governor's scholars and 24 National Merit finalists and semifinalists, all of whom are from Kansas.

SPORTS

• MARINO SIDE LINED FOUR TO SIX WEEKS. Miami Dolphins' quarterback Dan Marino required surgery Tuesday to repair a slight fracture in his right ankle and is expected to be sidelined four to six weeks. He'll be replaced by Bernie Kosar or Craig Erickson. Marino was injured during Miami's first series Monday night in a 10-6 loss at Indianapolis.

• MORRISON TO APPEAR FOR MISDEMEANOR. A week after announcing he would fight one more fight, heavyweight Tommy Morrison is scheduled to make another appearance, this time in Delaware County District Court. Police allegedly found a loaded .22-caliber pistol in Morrison's car in July. Police had to tow the car after Morrison suffered a seizure, supposedly induced by medication, while stopped at a traffic light.

Recent parolee kills roommates, takes hostages during rampage

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GREELEY, Colo. — Joseph Gallegos was known as "Crazy Joe," an 18-year-old convict who acquaintances said was obsessed with his ex-girlfriend and depressed.

SPEED READ

▶ 18-year-old ex-convict Joseph Gallegos shot and killed his three roommates and held three college students hostage before being shot by police Tuesday.

Police said he snapped Tuesday, shooting his three roommates to death just two weeks after being released from jail, then driving across the state to his ex-girlfriend's college residence hall. He shot her in the foot and took her and two other students hostage before being killed by police, authorities said.

"The entire complexion of this community has changed. This is not the town it used to be," La Plata County Coroner Dick Mullen said after seeing the three bodies in Bayfield, a ranching town of 1,400 in southwestern Colorado.

During the four-hour standoff at the University of Northern Colorado, University Police Chief Terry Urista called Bayfield authorities and told them Gallegos had described the killings and gave an address.

Bayfield officers discovered the bodies of Steven Bates and John Lara III, both 20, and Joshua Turville, whose age was not available, in a small bedroom of a home they shared with Gallegos.

The men — all construction workers — had been shot in the head, Bayfield Marshal Jim Harrington said.

Gallegos stole one of the victim's cars and drove 350 miles northeast to the UNC campus in Greeley to see his ex-girlfriend, Heidi Hocker, authorities said.

A student reported Hocker got a telephone call early Tuesday in which Gallegos said, "I've killed my roommate, and I'm coming to get you."

Carefully edited TV footage, broadcast widely in Colorado, showed the gunman sticking his head and shoulder outside the fourth-floor residence-hall window. The video then cuts away as the sounds of one gunshot, then several more, are heard. He fell back into the room, mortally wounded, as SWAT team members stormed in.

Hocker was treated for the gunshot wound in her foot; the other two hostages were unharmed.

Elizabeth Rieboldt, a roommate of Hocker's who escaped by climbing out a window, said the gunman came to the residence hall earlier in the day and returned when he knew his ex-girlfriend would be there.

"He just wanted to talk to her," Rieboldt said. "He was very depressed and upset about something.

"He told us that he had lost it and was going crazy," she said, adding that the couple broke off their relationship about a month ago.

Another student, Shannon Snider, said everybody called Gallegos "Crazy Joe" and that he was totally obsessed with Hocker.

Gallegos, whose criminal record began at age 13, was paroled two weeks ago after serving part of a two-year sentence for beating a man with a beer bottle.

A prosecutor, Patrick Sheeran, wrote to the parole board this summer and urged that Gallegos, a high-school dropout, be kept in jail.

"Mr. Gallegos, over the years, has acted in a predatory manner with no compassion for his innocent prey," Sheeran warned.

Gallegos' neighbor, Roe-Ann Sternenberger, said a friend told her one of his roommates was helping him complete a church program for troubled youth.

When authorities arrived at the Bayfield home, they said they found stacks of Christian books and Bibles in every room.

Walk-N-Roll benefit will help city's AIDS programs, patients

TONYA ALLOWAY
staff reporter

Manhattan's first Walk-N-Roll for the Heartland, an AIDS benefit, will be at 10 a.m. Sunday from Alco to CiCo Park.

Harold Conner, Walk Committee Chairperson, said the proceeds will go to preventative and educational programs as well as limited financial assistance to clients for expenses not covered by the Ryan White Fund or Medicaid.

"We're hoping the community will really get involved and want to see the prevention and education," Conner said.

He said so far there has been a lot of community support.

Pledge packets are available at Streetside Records and the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department.

Registration will be from 8:30 to 9 a.m. in the Alco parking lot, followed by a short program until 10 a.m.

Conner said he will be one of the speakers, and he will talk about what HIV is and what it is like to live with HIV.

Greg Eiselein, president of the Board of Directors and associate professor of English at K-State, will also speak.

The walk will end at CiCo Park with presentation of a trophy to the person who raises the most money.

Other awards will be given to the first three people to finish and an award for the last to finish. Participants who raise at least $100 will receive a free T-shirt.

Conner said there will be a fishbowl on the site for anyone wishing to donate. The walk is sponsored by the Manhattan AIDS Project.

Kansas' unemployment falls

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Kansas' unemployment rate in August was the lowest for that month in seven years, although it was up slightly from July.

The Department of Human Resources reported Tuesday that the state's jobless rate stood at 4.0 percent last month, up from 3.9 percent in July but down from 4.2 percent in August 1995.

The previous lowest August rate was 3.8 percent in 1989.

"We continue to see our state's economy get stronger as the manufacturing and service industries in Kansas add jobs," said Human Resources Secretary Wayne Franklin.

"We fully expected the unemployment rate to go up ever so slightly last month. This kind of pattern almost always plays itself out at the end of the summer months."

The August report showed 1,301,596 Kansans were working, with 54,139 looking for jobs. Those figures compared with 1,323,299 at work and 53,012 seeking employment in July, and 1,270,590 with jobs and 55,637 without in August of 1995.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Parking is a problem we cannot solve unless we exercise some common sense

WHY WE CARE

K-State's parking problem has been more than a little inconvenient for years. Students have to do their part to help out the situation.

The inalienable rights of humankind do not include the right to good parking.

In fact, parking on the K-State campus has turned into the ultimate privilege.

Who gets the privilege of parking? The people who get to the spaces first.

In an ever-expanding universe the space for parking on campus will shrink by 86 spaces Friday for a conference.

The lucky ring of parking-space grabbers shrinks.

This leaves most K-State students with an opportunity to explore the world's oldest aerobic exercise — walking.

Walking is better than driving in absolutely every regard.

It's better for your health, better for the environment, better for community awareness and interaction.

For those of you who can't walk, we suggest getting a group together and car pooling.

Car pooling is an excellent way to get to campus. Trade off days with your friends: "Hey George, I'll drive Tuesday if you drive Wednesday."

If you can't walk and you don't have any friends, we suggest you drive to campus very early.

If you get to campus between 5:30 and 6 a.m. you should be able to find a space specifically for friendless people who don't live in walking-distance from campus.

The parking problem on K-State's campus is very old and, like the giant Redwoods of the great Northwest, it shall be here long after we are all dead.

Many brilliant people have burned the midnight oil trying to solve the K-State parking problem to no avail.

Often times, when life is piling on the stress and we are late for a class and we can't find a parking space, violent primal energies fill our minds.

At these times of primordial aggression and frustration just count to 10.

Remember, pedestrians are your friends and manslaughter will get you at least one or two years in the slammer. Be careful and relax.

As for K-State's next huge project we suggest a five-story parking garage that completely encircles the campus.

Don't hate her because she's Beautiful

Decision to use beautifiers depends on the woman

MY

Rhett HARTMAN

I arrive in Java Espresso and Bakery to meet some friends, and I order two slices of herb bread from Greg, the friendly employee with interesting sideburns.

My bread is great, but as I sit down, the conversation is better.

I sit at the table with six other people, and the topic is flung at me like a beat-up rag doll.

"OK, Rhett, here's the question," Bruce says. "Would they look good without makeup?"

He refers to the two women seated at the table. This topic is a sticky one, because it focuses on superficiality, which just sucks.

I mean, looks are irrelevant unless all you are doing is just looking at someone. Once interaction and communication begin, that beautiful body better have a personality inside. I tell everyone at the table makeup is not important. Beauty comes from what is natural.

The closer a body and mind are to what is natural (use your higher being here), the closer to beauty someone is.

Makeup, used in an attempt to perfect what is already perfect, is futile. Unpainted eyes, uncovered lips — there is nothing as perfect as a smile from a person who doesn't need to wear makeup.

Of course if you are good enough, and makeup is more of an art form than a cover-up, then wearing it is OK but artistic makeup is not done on a daily basis.

Women are brought up pressured to wear makeup.

Across the table sits Jamie, one woman in our group. Jamie, whose eyes sparkle like fireworks, says without lipstick her lips would have no color.

What is the advantage of painting on colors only in an attempt to mimic beauty, when untainted lips never threaten to smear? Follow nature's course and beauty will follow.

Brandy, the other woman at the table, speaks up.

"If being natural is better, would that mean we shouldn't shave our legs?"

This is when my friend Ryan spoke up. "I'm sorry, but if I saw a woman who hadn't shaved her legs, it just wouldn't be attractive to me."

In this capacity, Ryan proudly represents most American men.

Brandy's question complicates things.

Leg-shaving is a cultural practice and ultimately a personal choice. Where does the incentive for silky smooth legs come from? The line between what you are told to do and what you feel is faint indeed.

Ultimately, if individuals are comfortable with it, then shaving or not shaving is up to them.

For many American women, the answer is to shave away, along with makeup and cooking and sewing, although this trend is changing.

Alternatively, makeup might be a way to boost self-image. If this is so, men are guilty of the same vanity.

Things such as cologne, after-shave, deodorant, tie clips and muscles are all male methods for boosting self-esteem.

Using makeup to boost self-esteem can be overdone, though. What happens when the ritual of lipstick or deodorant becomes habit?

Makeup as a cognitive event is one thing, but as a blind motion it becomes a crutch. Are you frightened of going into the world without your favorite hygenic goods? Without them do you feel naked and incomplete?

Back in Java, I sit with four men who would not be caught dead in makeup, and two women who feel the need to wear it.

These women are beautiful, no doubt, but not free from the cultural clutches of makeup, through every pore of their souls their inner beauty could shine.

And their smiles would cast a light that even in the depths of my darkest days would brighten.

MY

Sera L. TANK

The dean approved my graduation application. Thanks, I guess.

But I don't want to go. Really. I stared at that approval form and had an urge to cry.

I wanted to call somebody, but it was 1 a.m. For the most part, I try to make it a point not to make more than three hysterical phone calls per year after midnight.

So, I was left to complain to my cat. She's a good listener.

Until that moment, it didn't seem real. I was sure that there was going to be some class that I forgot to take or something.

I've been living in denial, you might say.

I'm going to miss this place.

I don't think I realized how much until my walking papers showed up in my mailbox.

You might ask why. There is nothing to do in Manhattan, right? Well, as my mother used to say, "Boredom is a result of lack of imagination."

Up until about a year and a half ago, I did not have many friends. I had people I worked with, roommates, old high-school friends, acquaintences, but I didn't hang out with them much.

But due to circumstances beyond my control — not entirely unwelcome circumstances, I might add — I was forced to expand my social circle.

This was probably one of the best things that happened to me.

I discovered the people who I had kept at arms length since I got here were my friends. I'm just sorry that I waited until my last year and a half here to find that out.

All too often, we spend our time complaining to our friends on the phone that there is nothing to do and no money to do it with when the solution to this dilemma is sitting at the other end of the line.

Sure, I like to go to Aggieville and the movie theater.

I love going out to dinner. There's something about eating a meal and wiping your mouth with a cloth napkin that makes you fell all grown up. But lack of cash flow prohibits those activities much of the time.

But I found out a good time doesn't require too much money or a social situation involving drunk people stumbling all over each other looking for someone they know.

Most of the things I enjoyed were just spending time with my friends.

You see it wasn't where I went or how much it cost, but it was just hanging out with them and finding out things I never knew about them.

I will never forget the night I spent with my friends Kevyn and Sara at the end of the summer. We hadn't seen each other for almost the whole summer, so there was so much to catch up on. We ate Chinese food and caught up on all the gossip.

Then we decided to go to Wildcat Creek. We went exploring in the woods when it was pitch black. Then we laid on top of the picnic tables and Kevyn told us about all the constellations. We invented some of our own, too.

Who knew that Kevyn knew where Virgo was?

And Sara, who is normally high-strung and stressed-out, slowed down and told us all about her life.

I found out so much about Sara and Kevyn — especially Kevyn — that I never knew. I would have never known any of that if we hadn't stopped and talked.

> "All too often, we spend our time complaining to our friends on the phone that there is nothing to do and no money to do it with when the solution to this dilemma is sitting at the other end of the line."

Another night, not too long ago, I went out with a friend who I will identify only as Ike (you don't want to know why). He and I were bored at 2:30 a.m. and were not ready to go to sleep, so naturally we decided to go roller blading. What else?

There were no cars on the road by that time, so we sailed down Bluemont Avenue. Apparently, a police officer, who was obviously hard up for something to do, didn't like our idea. Officer Crumpkey as I like to call him, told us it's illegal to roller blade on the streets and the sidewalks.

"Where are you supposed to roller blade?" was our question. But the officer told us he wouldn't hassle us as long as we stayed on the sidewalk. How kind of him. We were concerned he was going to pull out the club.

Anyway, Ike and I went to City Park and roller bladed.

Then we just talked. It wasn't that I'm-trying-to-impress-you kind of talk. It was the just-two-people-talking kind of talk. Really talking. We talked about our families and what we wanted to do with our lives and what we're going to do next.

There are so many wonderful times I've had with my friends in the past year or two.

Chick nights (no matter how sexist some might think that is) are some of the best nights I have had. All women know what these are. You all go out and vow to not talk about guys or think about boyfriends, past or present. But then you spend the whole time going from bar to bar because HE might be there.

And then there are the times when I get together with one or two friends to just watch movies or study and spend the whole time talking.

But I admit I like to go to the bars. You don't have to spend money. And if nothing else, it's fun to go people-watch with my friends.

I couldn't tell you how many times a certain sports editor has called me while I was studying and convinced me to go out with her. Not that I don't enjoy it. Who wouldn't?

And when my friends call me at 2 a.m. drunk, I pretend like I'm angry, but really I sort of like it. It's kind of nice to know that they feel comfortable enough to call me and that even in the thralls of alcohol they think of me.

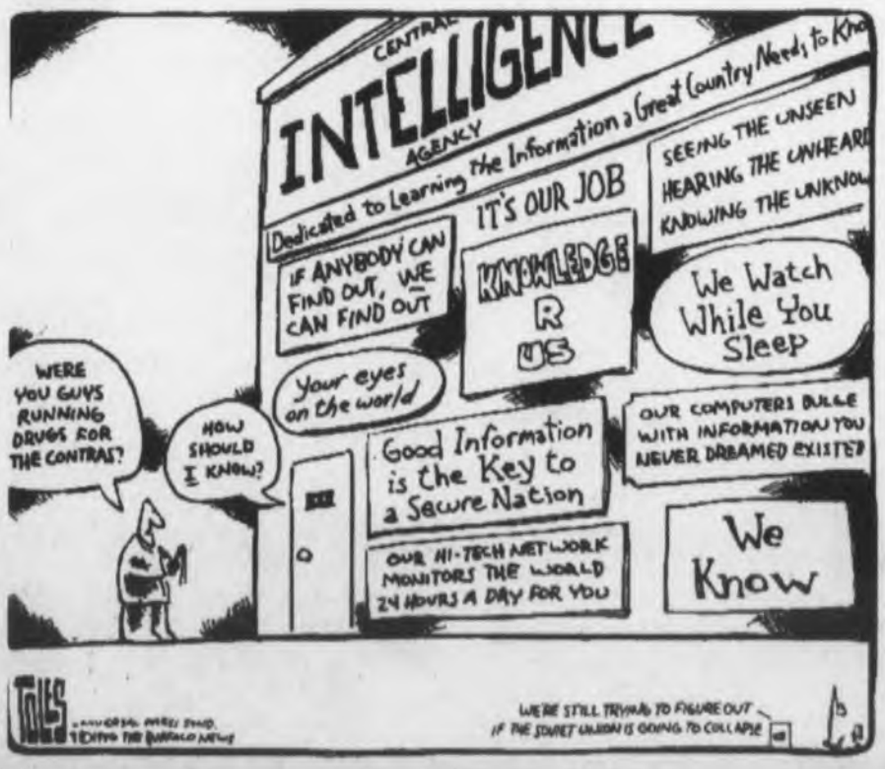
I said it was kind of nice, but I don't think my friends should get any ideas reading this.

I could go on and on. But what I'm saying is that I will never in my life find another place where I will make friends like the ones I have here.

I will treasure the time I've spent with them and the memories they've made for me.

Sometimes I look at one of my friends and get sad, knowing I'll be gone in December.

You say you'll keep in touch.



You say you'll write, but friends — even the best of friends — drift apart.

I hope I stay in touch with all my friends here, but what are the chances?

And all you have to go on then is telling people about the night you and Ike went roller blading in City Park.

When bulldozing, don't forget Durland

Editor,

After reading Russell Fortmeyer's "Bulldozing our way to a beautiful campus," I felt compelled to respond. In the early 1960s, celebrated American architect Frank Lloyd Wright visited our fine University for a lecture, and after he was taken on the tour of our campus he was asked how he would improve it.

He said he would bulldoze it. Although this seems to be the most lucrative approach many times, this is not the best course of action when deciding how to improve K-State's architecture.

I agree K-State has some of the most appalling architecture in the state, but only responsible planning and designing into the future will remedy this situation.

Anyhow, I found it especially humorous to read architectural engineering major Fortmeyer's cavalier approach to improving the campus by demolishing Lafene Health Center and Denison Hall without giving a rational alternative for the occupants these buildings house.

I also had a good chuckle when he criticized Bluemont Hall's contemporary architecture. He seemed to conveniently forget to include his beloved Durland Hall, surprisingly, home of engineering, in his list of eye-sores around campus.

So when Fortmeyer gets his hands on a Bobcat and decides to raze campus, make sure he doesn't forget to take out the architectural gem sitting at the corner of College Heights Road and 17th Street.

WALT McDONALD, professor of English at Texas Tech University, recites poetry dealing with the days he spent in the armed services, during World War II. Though now faculty at Texas Tech, McDonald was a pilot for the Air Force for a time, evident in much of his poetry.

Poet recalls friends by verse

KARI BROWN
staff reporter

Poetry inspired Walt McDonald, professor of English at Texas Tech University, after Air Force friends were killed in crashes during Vietnam. Poetry became McDonald's way of speaking to them.

"It is an attempt to say the inexpressible," McDonald said.

McDonald saID he never wanted to be a poet. McDonald was a marathon runner in a sprinter's world. He taught fiction writing while in the Air Force and wrote six novels that were never published, but he kept writing. Today, McDonald has more than 1,300 poems published.

Some of his first poems were about his days as an Air Force pilot.

McDonald has written about his first solo night flight in "Night's Solo Georgia." He admits that the flight was hauntingly exciting.

"The poetry seemed real, not flowery," Jennifer Buchanan, sophomore in English and history, said.

However, not all of McDonald's poems are about Vietnam. Most of what McDonald writes is inspired by his family, experiences and surroundings.

"He strung together poems with stories, and we got to know his wife," Stacy Janicki, creative writing instructor, said.

A poem is a piece of language — a swatch of material — and it all begins with an image, he said. Each one of McDonald's poems was accompanied by a short story which created the scene for the next one.

"Good poets don't always make good orators, but he is an entertainer," Wendy Slate, graduate student in English, said. "This was a fabulous reading."

McDonald has received awards for his poetry, including three Western Heritage Awards from the National Cowboy Hall of Fame.

Western pieces that McDonald has written include "After Eden" and "The Night of Rattlesnake Chili." These poems discuss the life and times on the prairie. Most of the western poems McDonald has written can be found in the book "All that Matters."

McDonald says he doesn't claim to be a cowboy poet. His father was a cowboy in Texas, and he grew up with it in his blood.

Lafene parking causes concern

DEBBIE WOOD
staff reporter

Parking on campus has been an issue every semester. The parking lot behind Lafene Health Center is no exception.

There are six client parking stalls behind Lafene, which makes it difficult for patients in serious need of health care to park their cars.

Dave Amaro, assistant director of parking services, said there are no plans in the mix for a new parking lot.

"We try to keep the stalls as clear as we can for student emergencies," he said.

Amaro said an idea might be to construct a parking lot next to Farrell Library once Denison Hall is demolished. In the meantime, there are 30-minute loading zones and general spaces behind Seaton Hall that may be used for Lafene patients.

Scott Hathaway, senior in electrical engineering, needed medical attention last month when he was bitten by a brown spider.

Hathaway said he did not go to a hospital because the services at Lafene were already paid for when he paid his fees in August.

"I think the stalls are mainly full with staff members. I've never seen a vacant parking spot," Hathaway said.

Hathaway ended up parking his car in the lot next to St. Isidore's University Chapel that day.

"Lafene is a service provided for the students. It just seems like to me it should be a little bit more convenient for the students," Hathaway said.

Christina Smith, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, could not find a parking stall behind Lafene when she became ill.

"It's upsetting, and I'm really sick. I can't exactly walk there with a temperature of 104 degrees," Smith said.

who soon will have two children in college, said she and her lawyer husband have thought about selling one of their two cars or moving to a smaller home to pay the children's tuition. She's also thinking about going back to work as a schoolteacher.

Greene's daughter attends Randolph-Macon Woman's College in Lynchburg, Va. Next year her son plans to go to Bowdoin College, a private liberal arts school in Brunswick, Maine.

"Between the two of them, we're talking $50,000 a year, and that's not counting transportation and phone bills," said Greene.

Despite such horror stories, John P. Joyce, an associate director at the College Board's scholarship service, said higher education remains affordable.

"If the family focuses just on the high-priced institutions, it can be downright scary, but a majority of undergraduates are paying less than $4,000 a year (in tuition and fees)," Joyce said.

The College Board survey said only 4.3 percent of undergraduates at four-year schools pay $20,000 or more a year in tuition and fees, and many of these are getting a hefty financial-aid package from the institution.

relations, which have faltered since Netanyahu took office in June, and comes at a time when Israel's relations with much of the Arab world are troubled.

Egypt has accused the new government of reneging on agreements and stalling the peace process, and the specter of war with Syria is in the air. Even ties with Jordan, Israel's closest ally in the region, are losing their warmth.

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat has warned that a new uprising could erupt if Netanyahu did not go forward with implementation of the peace accords signed by Israel's previous government.

Netanyahu also has angered the Palestinians by approving new housing construction in Jewish settlements in the West Bank, and delaying Israel's withdrawal from most of Hebron, the last West Bank city under Israeli control.

The specter of a new Palestinian uprising could also undermine domestic support for Netanyahu, who narrowly won the elections with a promise of peace with security.

The Palestinians postponed a round of talks with Israel that had been scheduled for Thursday. Israel said the talks would be Sunday.

The Palestinians claim the archaeological tunnel undermines their rights to the Muslim shrines.

Netanyahu, who insists the tunnel does not affect Islamic holy sites, personally gave orders to workers to break through the last stretch of the tunnel on Tuesday, just before he left for a three-day trip to Europe.

Arafat responded by ordering a commercial strike in Jerusalem and protest marches in all Palestinian areas Wednesday.

Four Palestinians, including a 15-year-old boy and two policemen, were killed in rioting near Ramallah, and a fifth was in critical condition with a bullet in the head, said Shawki Harb, director of the Ramallah Hospital.

More than 350 Palestinian protesters and nine Israeli soldiers were injured in both clashes.

In Ramallah, more than 1,000 Palestinians marched to an army checkpoint south of the city and hurled stones at Israeli soldiers, who responded with rubber bullets and tear gas.

The Israelis and the Palestinians accused each other of using live rounds first. Palestinian witnesses said commanding officers tried to stop junior Palestinian policemen from shooting at the Israeli soldiers, but the policemen defied their orders.

The fighting in Bethlehem began after nightfall, when about 500 Palestinians hurled firebombs and stones at Israeli troops guarding Rachel's Tomb, a Jewish holy site where the biblical matriarch is believed to be buried.

Soldiers fired bullets and tear gas after protesters burned down trees and a wooden road-divider outside the tomb at the entrance to the city. Although Bethlehem is under Palestinian rule, the tomb has remained under Israeli control.

Palestinian police, taking cover behind bushes and trees near the tomb, opened fire on the Israeli troops guarding the tomb.

In downtown Bethlehem, police and demonstrators drove through the streets in a convoy, cheering and singing nationalist songs as if in a victory parade.

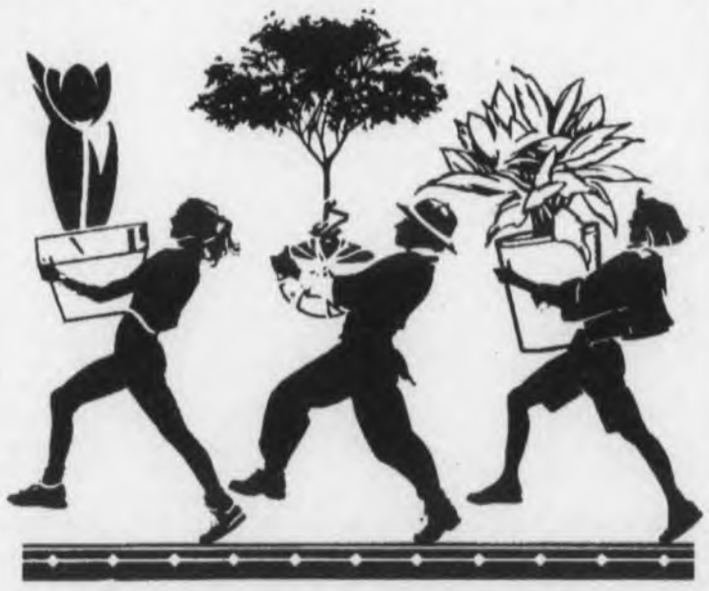
The Manhattan foundry is to be equipped with the most modern technology, Farrar said.

The proposed facility will be computer-driven and monitored. It will also have its own machine shop and heat-treating facility.

The metal casting industry is highly regulated by Occupational Safety and Health Administration, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Clean Air Act, and therefore Farrar is confident the new facility will not damage the environment.

"Our industry is one of the most environmentally friendly," he said.

The industry also recycles metal scraps by melting them down and including them in their castings. Scrap metal accounts for about 50 percent of the metal used.



Several environmental safeguards are being built into the facility to ensure safety, including vents to catch dust particles.

"This plant will meet or exceed current expectations," Farrar said.

Farrar added that the waste products produced will go into a monofill, a landfill that will only be used by the Farrar Corporation, and all of the waste products will be non-hazardous.

The ground breaking has been scheduled for summer 1997.

CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

It's not really his title, but it's definitely his job.

Met him on campus a couple of years ago. Someone knew someone who knew him. Up to his eyeballs in ASICs, with some off the wall ideas about a high speed, board-level remote access solution.

His first response to us: "Yeah, right."

So we reminded him about our bold technical leadership. Except for being surrounded by state-of-the-art everything, the sharpest minds in technology and the world's leading systems organization, we told him, he'd practically be left alone to develop his ideas. Mr. Autonomy.

TAKE US THERE

Since then he took his idea about remote computing to the Nth degree. Now it's part of our newest PCMCIA based remote network computing solutions.

Which brings us back to campus. This semester we're scouting the country again, looking for more spirited people and ideas. We're pushing this company to the Nth degree.

And you can take us there.

Greenwood

K-State guard Ross Greenwood is suspended from playing the first half of the Oct. 5 game against Nebraska, Big 12 officials confirmed Wednesday.

The suspension is a result of Greenwood's ejection from the Wildcats' 34-7 victory at Rice Saturday. Greenwood and Rice defensive tackle Jason Winship were ejected early in the third quarter for what officials called fighting.

According to NCAA rules, both players must sit out the first half of their next game. If Greenwood had been ejected in the first half against the Owls, he would have only been required to sit out the remainder of the Rice contest.

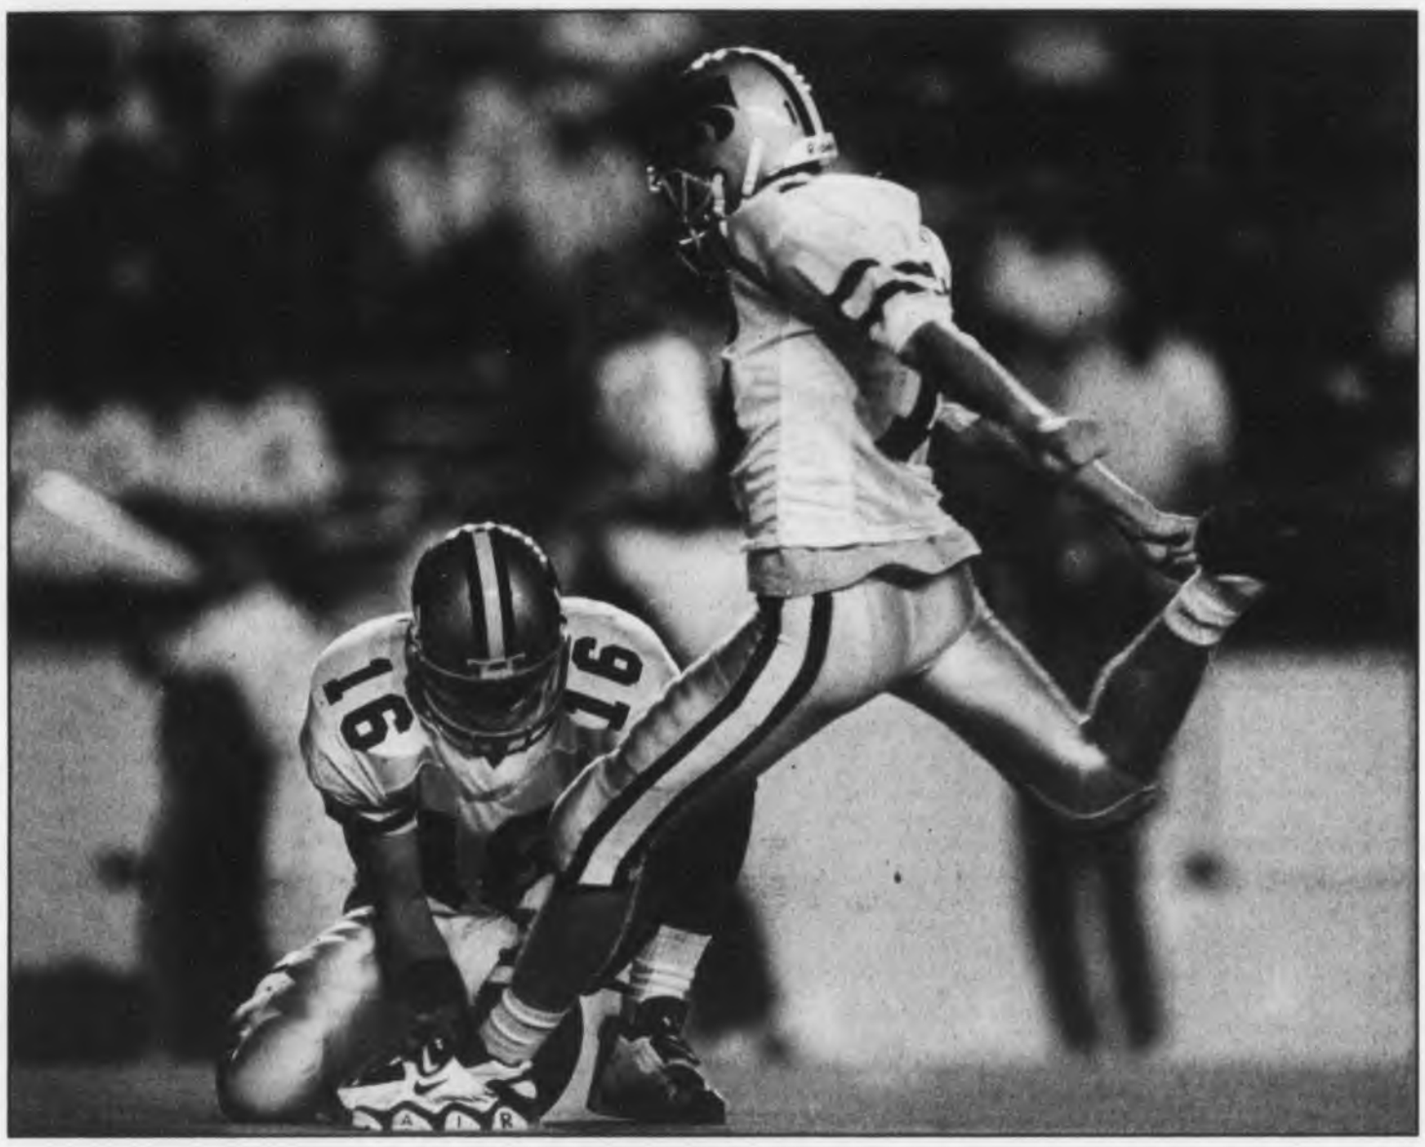
But Tuesday Coach Bill Snyder said he felt the action taken by Greenwood did not constitute fighting.

"What I was told by the officials is our youngster got hit and retaliated by grabbing a face mask," Snyder said. "My response to the official was that grabbing a face mask is a face-mask penalty."

A face-mask penalty would have resulted in either a 5- or 15-yard penalty, the distance to have been decided by the game's officials.

However, the officiating crew, composed entirely of Western Athletic Conference officials, ruled that incident a fight, resulting in the ejections. The WAC has juridisction because there were no Big 12 officials.

If Snyder should choose to appeal, K-State would have to prove the official misidentified the player ejected.



This is the second consecutive game a Wildcat player has received an ejection. Safety Mario Smith was ejected in the first half of the Sept. 14 game against Cincinnati for throwing an elbow at Bearcats receiver James Scott in retaliation for clipping on a punt that was not called by officials.

Snyder has also been found guilty of unsportsmanlike conduct on the field this season.

Against Rice, Snyder received a personal foul penalty for unsportsmanlike conduct when he protested a no-call against Rice on a play that resulted in injury to defensive end Darren Howard.

"If we have a penalty, we're wrong," Snyder said. "Mario got penalized, and Mario was wrong. There were circumstances. If you watch the film, you see him get dramatically clipped.

"But that doesn't justify anything. He's wrong. I got a penalty, a personal foul and I was wrong. Ross was wrong because the rule says you can't grab a face mask. Yes, it's certainly disturbing to me that three of us have had those penalties."

K-State punter has high hopes for team, not self

SHANE MCCORMICK

Special teams can lose ballgames for a team. They can also win games for a team.

The latter has certainly been the case this season for K-State with punter James Garcia.

A sophomore, Garcia leads the conference in punting, helping the Wildcats to a 4-0 record this season.

His 47.61 punting average is second best in the nation, a mark that has Garcia in possible all-America status.

But that isn't something Garcia worries about.

"I really don't think about leading the nation in punting or being an all-American," Garcia said.

"I'm just worried about doing my job. If the title comes to me, then it comes. But I'm not going to worry about it."

Garcia's average is a staggering improvement from his 41.5 average yards per punt last season.

Garcia said his work ethic in the off-season led to this year's improvement.

"I've really worked on my follow-through," he said. "I've also been working harder in the weight room. My leg strength has improved tremendously. It really has played a big part in my recent success."

In Saturday's 34-7 victory against Rice, Garcia tied the K-State record for highest average in a single game with an average of 52.8 yards on four punts. He joins former Cats Doug Dusenbury and Sean Snyder.

Dusenbury set the record in 1964 against New Mexico, while Sean Snyder repeated the feat in 1992 against Colorado.

Also against the Owls, Garcia booted a career-long 67-yard punt.

Garcia's booming kicks have gained praise from his coach.

"Our punting game has been very good, very solid," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I have been very pleased with

Wildcats finish lower than desired

SHANA NEWELL

To survive in the game of golf, you've got to compete.

That's the maxim K-State golf coach Mark Elliott said he hopes the Wildcats will live by.

"Right now they're not," he said.

The Cats finished in 15th place at the Kansas Invitational at Alvamar Golf Club, shooting 68 more than par, and besting only Texas Tech and Southwest Missouri State.

"We have guys who can play," Elliott said. "They're just not getting it done."

Leading the Wildcats was junior B.J. Walter who shot rounds of 73, 78 and 79 to finish tied for 37th place with a score of 230.

"He was five over par by the fifth hole, so obviously he shot well enough to finish at only one over," Elliott said.

Junior transfers Brett Sayre and Matt Murdoch and true freshman Brian Racette also added to the struggles the Wildcats faced in the tournament.

Sayre shot rounds of 80, 77 and 77 to finish tied at 54th with a final score of 234, while Murdoch finished tied at 59th with scores of 80, 76 and 79, a total of 235.

Racette finished with a total of 242 on rounds of 77, 85 and 80 and an 86th-place finish.

Chad Buckridge, the only senior on K-State's squad, struggled, finishing with a tie for 67th place and rounds of 81, 79 and 77 for a total of 237.

With a senior, two junior transfers and a junior on the squad, it could be argued the Wildcats have the talent to be a tough team.

But Elliott said he felt the team hasn't come together yet and might even be allowing the pressure of tournament play to get to them.

Murdoch and Sayre are still becoming accustomed to competing at K-State while Walter played sparingly in his first two seasons as a Wildcat. But Elliott has higher hopes for the squad.

"Walter played enough, he should be getting it done for us now," he said. "You've got to be able to play the same way in a tournament that you would play normally, where every shot counts. I think the guys are feeling more pressure, and that shouldn't affect their game."

With a poor showing at the tournament, Elliott said now is the time to find out what kind of competitors the team has.

"They have only two ways to go," he said. "They can get better, or they won't."

K-State hits the links again when it travels to Houston for the Woodlands Intercollegiate.

National honor sign of the times for K-State's women's sports

MY

Dan LEWERENZ

When K-State plays volleyball, the nation watches.

Last year, senior middle blocker Kate DeClerk became the first Wildcat ever to be named National Player of the Week by the American Volleyball Coaches Association.

And it happened again.

It didn't used to be this way. For years, K-State was the perennial whipping-boy (forgive the expression) of the Big 8. In the three years before Coach Jim Moore's arrival, the Cats compiled a 24-66 record.

It was so bad in fact, one of the winningest coaches in community college volleyball turned down the job, thinking K-State couldn't be salvaged.

But Moore turned the program around. In his first year, 1994, Moore led the Cats to their first winning season since 1988. Last year, K-State recorded 21 wins for the first time since 1985.

Moore's fast-paced, attacking style of play made winners out of the players who were here — players who simply weren't being utilized before — and has brought in some of the most talented youth in the country.

The result — K-State, at 12-1, is off to its best start in school history, and players like DeClerk, whose .463 hitting percentage ranks her No. 3 in the country, are being recognized nationally.

And it's not just DeClerk. Junior setter Devon Ryning is ranked No. 8 in assists (13.5 per game) and No. 14 in service aces (.66 per game). As a team, K-State ranks No. 7 in hitting percentage (.302) and No. 9 in service aces (2.55 per game).

"I think it's nice that people are starting to take notice of what we're doing as a team and what the individuals on our team are accomplishing," DeClerk said after winning the AVCA honor for the second time — and she's right.

Sure, it's an honor for DeClerk and for K-State. But in the grand scheme of things, it's a credit to what K-State volleyball has become, and a tribute to DeClerk's role in that metamorphosis.

K-State has never been to the NCAA Tournament — but last year the Cats fared well in the National Invitational Volleyball Championships, volleyball's equivalent to the NIT in basketball.

K-State has never been ranked in the AVCA Top 25 Poll — but the Cats received 42 votes in the current poll, placing them only four spots out.

K-State has never defeated Nebraska in volleyball, never — but even the Rabid Red Faithful are talking upset after watching the Cats dismantle Colorado State last weekend, with DeClerk setting a Nebraska Coliseum hitting percentage record in the process.

K-State had never seen a player earn National Player-of-the-Week honors — now it's happened twice in as many years.

DeClerk's, and K-State's, accomplishments will bring national attention to K-State volleyball. Now all it needs is an appropriate setting.

Ahearn Field House used to be the most feared place in college basketball. You put a few loud students in there and the feel is electric — pack the place and the building shakes.

Many people were dismayed by basketball's move from Ahearn to the sterile confines of Bramlage Coliseum. Basketball coaches Tom Asbury and Debbie Patterson are trying to revive that spirit.

Ahearn never lost it. Visitors used to claim the field house was alive, and opponents were simply devoured by the building.

For years it slept — now it's awakening. All it needs is a commitment by the fans and a winning spirit, and it will once again digest the competition.

The Wildcats' next match in Ahearn is Oct. 2 at 7 p.m. The unlucky visitor — the Kansas Jayhawks. Come, and enjoy the feast.

Swim meet sees 4 records broken

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

Intramural swimming finished competition at the Natatorium last weekend.

This year's meet provided some excitement as four school records were broken. Delta Upsilon swimmers broke three of those records.

Sophomore Ted Rose broke the 50-yard freestyle record with a time of 22.509 seconds. The previous record was 22.829.

Although last year Rose took first in the 100-yard freestyle in the swim meet, he said he didn't realize he had broken a record this year when he completed the 50-yard freestyle.

"I knew I swam fast but I didn't know I was that fast. I was really stunned," he said.

The time was the best Rose has ever had in the 50-yard freestyle.

But Rose wasn't the only DU to break individual records last weekend.

Freshman Steve Wood broke the 100-yard breaststroke record with a time of 1 minute 5.233 seconds. The previous record was 1:05.418.

"The 100-yard breaststroke was my best event in high school," Wood said. "I really didn't prepare that much for the meet. I just went out a couple days before to get used to being in the water."

Despite the record, the time wasn't a personal best for Wood. Wood posted a time of 1:02 in high school.

Wood and Rose later teamed up with Scott Marr and Jeff Calhoun to compete in the 200-yard medley relay.

Not only did the foursome break relay record, they shattered it.

The DUs posted a time of 1:46.845, besting the previous record of 1:48.734.

"We weren't able to practice our relay starts, so we were just going out there and hoping for the best," Wood said.

"I thought going into the meet we had a good shot of breaking the record," Rose said.

Also breaking an intramural swim meet record was the Gamma Phi Beta team in the 200-yard freestyle relay.

The team of juniors Meri Sias, Kelly Eakin, Jade Murphy and Kelly Rhettenmier posted a time of 1:55.829. The previous record was 1:48.734.

Dorodnova advances to 3rd round, then falls

K-State tennis player Yana Dorodnova advanced into the third round of the T. Rowe Price National Clay Court Championships in Baltimore Tuesday, but failed to defeat Harvard's Rosemary She to advance to round four.

She downed Dorodnova with scores of 7-5 and 6-2 to stop the Wildcat's bid for a berth in the main player draw scheduled to start today. Dorodnova needed only two more wins to earn the berth.

Dorodnova posted a 6-4, 6-4 first-round victory against William and Mary's Johanna Jones to advance to the second round, then defeated Susie Kocsis of Southern Mississippi 6-1, 7-6 (8) to advance to the third round.

K-State's other participants in the championships, juniors Lena Piliptchak and Dinah Watson, each failed to advance past the first round.

In doubles play, Dorodnova and Piliptchak advanced to the second round with an 8-6 victory over Abilene Christian's Ailena Cano and Julie Mavity.

Dorodnova and Piliptchak faced Penn State's Olga Novikova and P. Montgomery in the second round Wednesday afternoon.

Dorodnova and Piliptchak need three more wins to earn one of two spots available to qualifying-round participants in the main doubles draw.

Tennis practice from a reporter's view

Story by Shane McCormick

Photos by Darren Whitley

Editor's note: This is a minute-by-minute report by dontributing sports writer Shane McCormick depicting what the K-State tennis team endures through practice. Shane took part in all aspects of the practice and also went head-to-head with Wildcat Anna Pompoulva.

3 p.m.

Arrived at the tennis courts at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Coach Bietau begins handing out the uniforms for the year. He informed me that he couldn't find a skirt in my size, and although I was hurt, I didn't let it show.

3:05 p.m.

Coach told the team to jog a couple laps around the courts to slowly warm up. I ran near the back of the group, grabbing a couple of words with junior Chris Schulte. I didn't want to expend too much energy yet, and I didn't want to appear too eager.

3:08 p.m.

After the jog, senior Nikki Lagerstrom led the team in stretching, starting with some easy rolling of the neck. We then moved to the old, bend-down-and-touch-your-toes stretch.

3:20 p.m.

After our stretching exercises, coach broke the group into smaller ones to warm up our groundstrokes. We did the usual routine of volleys, groundstrokes and overheads.

After a few of groundstrokes, I noticed that there were a couple of chuckles from Bietau and assistant coach Monika Kobilikova. I found out later they were sharing a chuckle about the sound the strings on my racket were making when the ball hit it. Hey. Some people use a grunt noise when they play, but I use a ping sound to distract my opponents.

3:35 p.m.

After the warmup, coach assigned drills to each court. The first drill I participated in was a volleying drill. I did reflex volleys at the service line with junior Elena Piliptchak. Our objective was to keep a rally going while attacking each ball. That's what Kobilikova told me anyway. For some reason, all of the balls were ending up on my side of the net.

3:45 p.m.

I moved on to the next court, where I did a volley/overhead drill with Lagerstrom at the net. She would volley, then I was supposed to give her a lob. The drill would repeat itself, as long as I could keep getting balls back to Lagerstrom.

3:55 p.m.

Coach called the players in and told us to grab a drink. He then announced it was time for court sprints. After each sprint, we had about 10 to 15 seconds to catch our breath. I accomplished my main goal for the sprint portion of practice. I didn't faint, throw up or die on the court.

4:05 p.m.

Another water break.

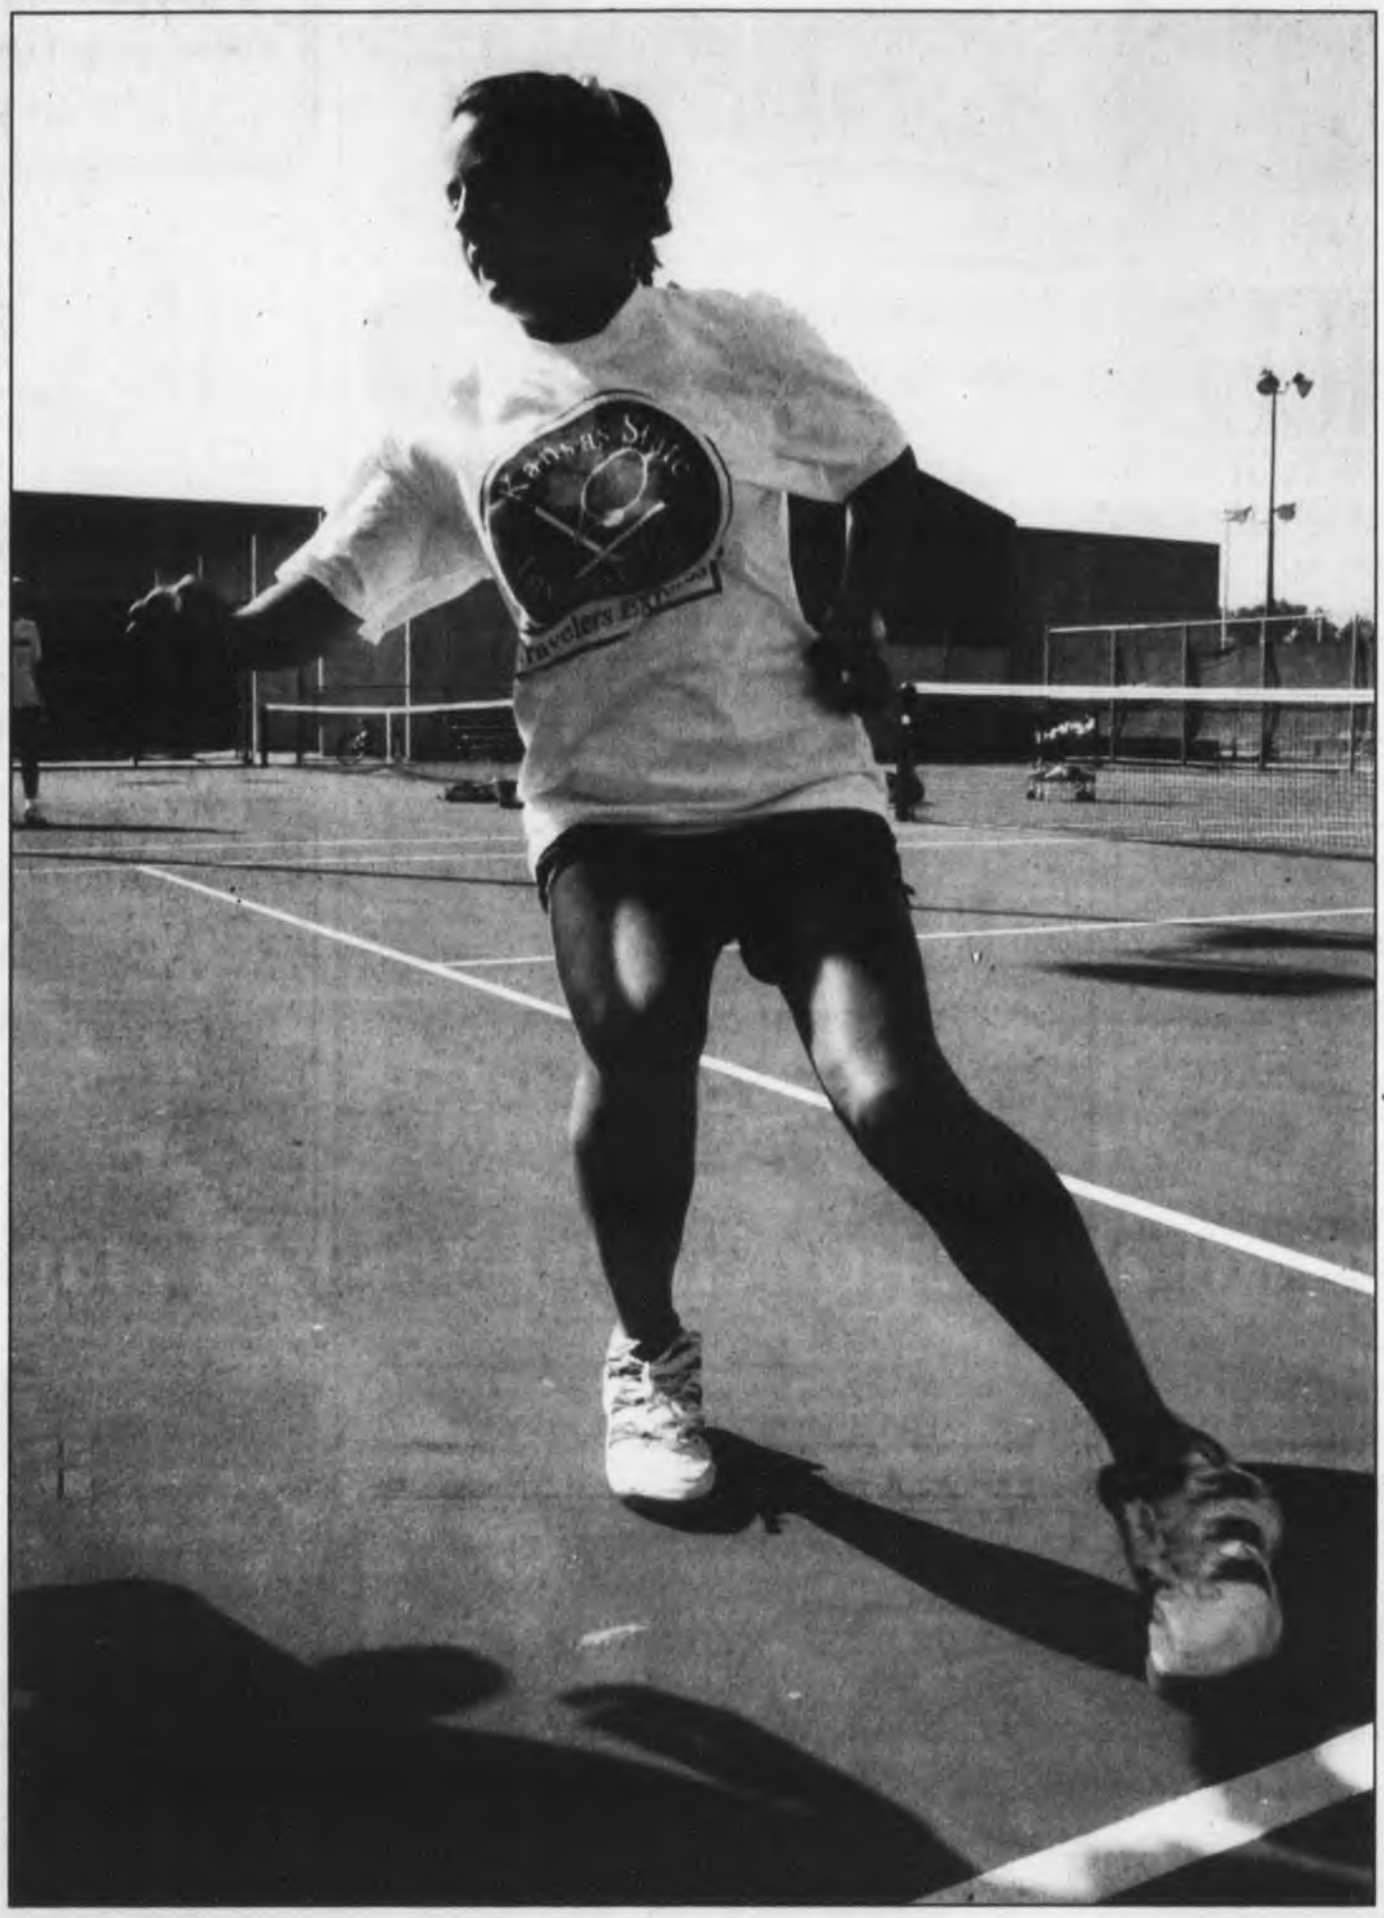
4:07 p.m.

Time for head-to-head competition. Coach announced I will play Anna Pampoulova. When I reached to get my racquet, I noticed a blister the size of a crater had developed on my right palm. I gathered some tennis balls and head over to the grandstand for the match.

4:10 p.m.

Warm up for the match.

4:14 p.m.



The match began.

5 p.m.

We gathered the tennis balls, and departed for the football complex for the weightlifting session.

5:05 p.m.

Arrival at the weightlifting room. I was introduced to the team's strength and conditioning coach. He gave me a personalized program sheet to check off all of the exercises I did.

STEVE BIETAU grabs some tennis balls out of a basket to hit them to some of his players for volley practice at Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

CHRIS SCHULTE wipes sweat from her eyes after sprints during tennis practice at Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

ANNA PAMPOULOVA turns and burns during sprints at practice at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

5:07 p.m.

First was the medicine-ball exercise. I threw the ball from my side and over my head to Kobilikova, my partner. We did 15 throws from each position.

5:10 p.m.

Next was the incline bench press. It began with one set of 10 to warm up. Then we did three sets of 10. I'm not too sure if your body is supposed to be shaking as much as mine was when doing this exercise.

5:17 p.m.

After the bench exercise, we moved on to the dips, and did two sets of 25 repetitions. After I struggled to get trough the sets, I noticed a burning feeling was starting to develop throughout my muscles.

5:22 p.m.

Next was a series of exercises with dumbbells. The first were front raises, then side raises, front squat-to-push press and bench-step-up and press. There were two sets of eight for each exercise. Junior Yana Dorodnova reminds me to make sure to raise the weights above my head.

5:30 p.m.

For the next exercise, we went to work on our glute hams. There were three sets of 10 repetitions for this exercise. This would be the sorest part of my body for the next two days.

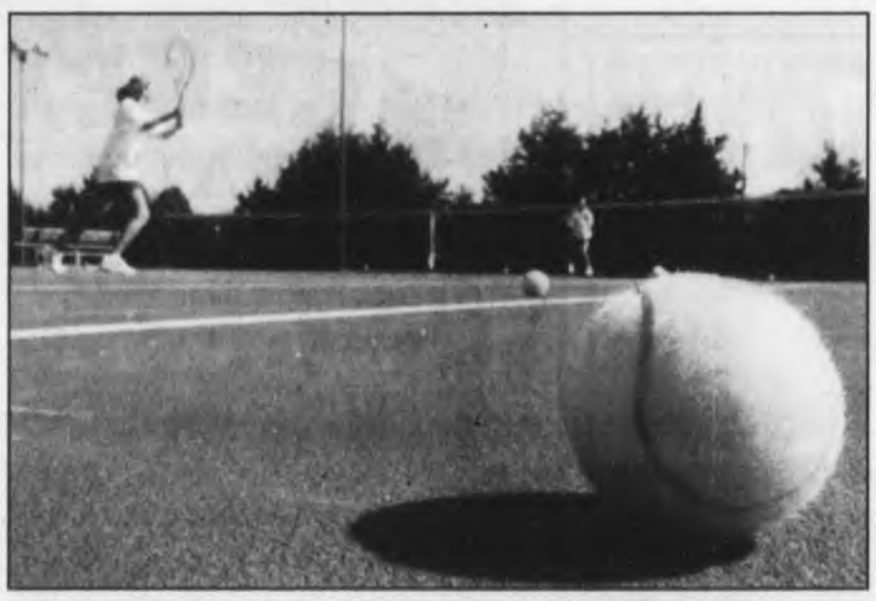
5:35 p.m.

Next we focused on the wrists and forearms. For this exercise, a 10-pound weight was attached to a bar on a string and it was rolled up to the shoulder 10 times.

5:43 p.m.

The abdominal workout came next. We raised our legs from six- to 45- to 90-degree angles for about three or four minutes. Quite noticeably, the hardest for me was coming from 90 down to six. you don't know how bad I wanted to slam those legs down on the floor. The rest of the ab workout included various leg raises and crunches.

5:57 p.m.



Now it was time for stretching. While everyone else grabbed a partner to stretch with, I continued to lay on the floor. For about two minutes, I did nothing but wallow in self pain and misery.

6:01 p.m.

Time to head for home.

NIKKI LAGERSTROM casts a shadow while jumping rope under the sun's rays during practice at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

MY

Earlier this semester, I developed what I thought would be a good story idea.

One of the beats I'm responsible for is K-State's women's tennis team. I decided to spend a day going through the practices the players go through.

I would be able to get a feel for what the players go through during an average day of practice. Then I thought I would play a set against one of the players.

I ran the idea by Coach Steve Bietau. He said it would be a great idea, but he said it with a big smile and sort of a chuckle.

I should have known at that point I might be in some trouble.

After winning the ever-so-pivotal spin of the racquet, I was faced with one of the biggest decisions. Should I choose to serve or receive?

The tension mounted, sweat dripped from my forehead and I blurted out, "I'll serve first."

I lined up at the baseline, ready to serve the first point of the match. You could almost hear a pin drop. The big match of the day was about to begin.

Pampoulova vs. McCormick.

My first serve of the day went into the net. Anna hit a forehand return off of my second serve. I proceeded to hit a forehand back, that was just about five feet too long.

With game point, Anna hit a blistering forehand down the line to break serve and go ahead one game to none.

But in the second game, I returned the favor. With game point, I came up with a forehand volley winner. I broke back and tied the match at 1-1.

We followed the same pattern for the next two games. She broke my serve, then I broke her serve.

The match knotted up at 2-2.

In the fifth game, I came up with a couple of decent serves and got a couple of unforced errors from Anna. I finally held my serve and won the game to go up 3-2 in the match.

Thanks to a couple double faults, I broke Anna's serve again. I took a two game lead, 4-2.

In the seventh game, I was able to go up 40-30 on a stretch overhead winner. I've had game point to go up 5-2 and hit a pretty good serve up the middle that Anna hit back with a lob. I was half way up to the net, hoping and praying the ball landed out.

It didn't. Instead it landed right on the line. On one shot, my momentum seemed to be drained out. Anna won the game and narrowed my lead 4-3.

While we were switching sides, coach informed us that this would be the last game. It was time to head over to the football complex to lift weights.

Anna won the first two points of the game to go ahead 30-love. On the next point, I was able to hit a backhand winner off her serve. It gave me a little bit of confidence.

But it wasn't enough. Anna proceeded to win the next two points and tie the match at 4-4.

We met at the net, shook hands and told each other good match.

Overall, I was pleased with my performance. There were times when I faltered but for someone who hadn't played in a while, I was happy to get four games off a very good player.

Ethical guidelines govern faculty, student relations

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

K-State has no written guideline that prohibits students from dating faculty members.

"Some universities do have a policy," Judy Davis, director of the Women's Center, said. "K-State does not."

Although there is no ban, there are ethical guidelines that a faculty member is asked to abide by. An instructor's No. 1 priority must be to teach the students.

If a relationship interferes with this objective, then instructors are not doing their job. Instructors are asked to have their own personal integrity. They must be fair, respectful and attentive to duty.

Faculty members do have a certain power over students, because students' fates depend on their teachers' opinions and grading procedures. It can be a potentially threatening power, and teachers are asked not to abuse it.

"There is a K-State policy that prohibits any of us from using our position or authority to coerce sexual activity," Davis said.

K-State's sexual-harassment policy states, "When people, whether students, faculty or staff feel coerced, threatened, intimidated, or otherwise pressured by others into granting sexual favors, or are singled for derision or abuse based on their gender, their academic and work performance is likely to suffer.

"In addition, such actions violate not only the dignity of the individual, but also the integrity of the university as an institution of learning."

However, if a relationship based on mutual feelings evolves, it is the instructors' obligation to remove themselves from the grading procedure, Davis said. Students should transfer to another section of that course or restrain their desires until after the semester has ended.

"If a teacher was trying to start dating a student in a class, it would probably give that student an unfair advantage," Scott Heideman, junior in electrical engineering, said.

Heideman said he has heard of a few instances when students were attracted to their teachers, but most people would try to stay away from pursuing a relationship.

Bernd Foerster, retired professor and dean emeritus of architecture, is a past president of the Kansas and local chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

He said he believes people involved in romantic relationships should be equal, but in the case of a student and a professor it would not be.

"Romantic and sexual involvement is inappropriate when a professor has control," he said. "Power or perceived power can be misused for various reasons."

However, Foerster said he believes some relationship should exist. An instructor should not only be an instructor, but a mentor and role model as well. The most difficult thing for a faculty member is to find that acceptable degree of relationship, he said.

Foerster also expressed concern that there is not enough discussion about these issues among faculty members. He said he believes they spend too much time discussing numbers and paper work.

Some universities, such as the University of Kansas, do have policies that outline rules regarding student-faculty relationships.

However, Davis and Foerster agree it would be nearly impossible to set guidelines. There are too many little details to clearly define what is OK and what is not.

"I'm actually very glad we don't have a policy," Davis said. "I don't think you can tell people they can't fall in love."

Judge says McVeigh, Nichols can face death penalty in trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DENVER — Prosecutors in the Oklahoma City bombing case can seek the death penalty despite complaints that Attorney General Janet Reno violated department policy by announcing within hours of the attack that she would press for the bombers' execution, a judge ruled Wednesday.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch also rejected defense arguments that the federal death penalty amounts to cruel and unusual punishment.

Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols are charged with murder and conspiracy in the April 19, 1995, bombing, which killed 168 people and injured 500.

No trial date has been set. McVeigh and Nichols could get the death penalty under a 1994 federal law.

Defense lawyers argued Reno violated Justice Department guidelines for seeking the death penalty when she announced on the day of the bombing, even before an arrest had been made, that she would press for capital punishment.

Department guidelines call for several steps and discussions prior to a decision, but none of those steps were taken before Reno's announcement.

Defense lawyers claimed her haste showed she was biased and their clients were being treated unfairly.

But Matsch said federal law requires only that prosecutors file a notice of intent to seek the death penalty, which they did Oct. 20, 1995.

"Nothing has been submitted to show or suggest that the notices were filed because of any discriminatory motive, invidious classification or improper motivation as to either defendant," the judge said.

Justice Department spoke$woman Leesa Brown said, "I think it's significant that the court has cleared the way for the federal government to seek the death penalty."

The Justice Department guidelines call for a meeting among staff members in which defense lawyers are allowed to present facts in opposition to the death penalty.

If the death penalty is to be sought, a memorandum is prepared by prosecutors that is to include a comprehensive discussion of the reasons.

The memo is then sent to a committee for review, and the committee makes a recommendation on whether to go forward.

The defense said none of that happened because of Reno's hasty announcement.

Stephen Jones, McVeigh's lawyer, said he did not plan an immediate appeal of the decision.

"This only becomes relevant if there's a conviction," he said.

Nichols' attorney, Michael Tigar, did not immediately return a call for comment.

Building names need presidential approval before they are installed

DEBBIE WOOD
staff reporter

Donating a sizable amount of money to K-State might result in a building named after you.

> "I'm sure (Wefald) will eventually down the road. ... I would certainly imagine he would be recognized for his service in some fashion."
> • WARREN CORMAN
> DIRECTOR OF FACILITIES FOR THE KANSAS BOARD OF REGENTS

Many of the buildings on campus are named after people who have given sizable donations to finish a project or to faculty who have given years of service to the University.

Take Bramlage Coliseum, for example. It was funded by a gift from the late alumnus Fred Bramlage and student fees.

Seaton Hall was named after R.M. Seaton, dean of engineering from 1920 to 1929. Seaton gave years of work to K-State's engineering program, and as a result, caused it to flourish while he was here.

The Kansas Board of Regents' members are the ones who officially name a building.

The policy for the last 30 years has been to present an idea for naming a building to the president of the university.

If the president concurs with the name, then he presents the idea to the board for a unanimous vote. The board is the only group that has authority to vote on a building name.

Denison Hall's name may be used for the third time.

The building is the second Denison to be built on campus. The first one was in the same general area but burned to the ground in 1934.

When the current building was constructed it was decided to keep the name. Now there is speculation about when the building will be demolished.

"There will probably be a popular push to rename Denison Hall, maybe to Denison III, " said Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and University architect.

People might wonder if a building would be named after President Jon Wefald, considering the number of years and service Wefald has put into K-State.

"I'm sure he will eventually down the road. They try not to name buildings when people are still active in the University," said Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents.

"I would certainly imagine he would be recognized for his service in some fashion," he said.

Explosive residue found on Flight 800 may be from earlier testing used by bomb-sniffing dogs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. — A test for bomb-sniffing dogs may have contaminated one of the two areas where traces of explosives were found on wreckage from TWA Flight 800, the FBI agent leading the probe into the crash confirmed.

"Based on the records of the dog training ... it's possible that at least in one of the cases, there is a likelihood that contamination could have taken place," Assistant FBI Director James Kallstrom said Tuesday.

Investigators learned only last week that the Boeing 747 had been used in June to train bomb-sniffing dogs at Lambert Airport in St. Louis.

The bomb-sniffing dog-training situation could explain why traces of chemical residue were found on the wreckage.

Kallstrom reiterated that the three original theories behind the July 17 crash — a bomb, missile or mechanical failure — were still alive.

Meanwhile, Suffolk County Medical Examiner Dr. Charles Wetli held an inquest Tuesday to certify the deaths of the other 18, clearing the way for their families to file insurance claims and settle estates.

Of the 230 victims of Flight 800, 212 bodies have been recovered.

In a letter presented at the inquest, National Transportation Safety Board Chairman James Hall said finding any more bodies is increasingly unlikely.

Also Tuesday, divers brought up five nets full of wreckage plus a 9-foot by 13-foot piece that appears to be from the center fuel tank, where the explosion originated.

Moviemakers go online to sell to audiences

ADRIAN FLEMING
Collegian

Film makers have been looking for new ways to bring people into the movie theater ever since television began competing for our free time.

First there were wide-screen movies, then 3-D and even Smello-vision. Now the big fad is homepages, and when there are hundreds of millions of dollars being blown on hype, movies try to purchase the best homepages money can buy.

The Internet Movie Database (http://us.imdb.com/)

I know I've mentioned this site before, but this is your one-stop movie resource on the Internet. It will have a listing to a movie homepage before most search engines will. So if you want to learn anything about a movie, this is the place to surf.

A Very Brady Sequel (http://www.thebrady-bunch.com/menu.html)

I, like most people my age, grew up watching the Bradys. Even though they were that perfect family who wore silly clothes, they occupy a warm spot in our generation's hearts.

When the movie came out a sequel was inevitable. I've heard the deal has been inked to make three more flicks.

This homepage wins the award for prolific use of the word groovy. Everything is retro including backgrounds, images and most of the language.

If your dream has been to make your computer groovy, the answer is here with background images that just ask for wood paneling to go with them. It's kind of nice to glance at the quote of the day, to find a nugget of Brady wisdom to steel you for those tough days.

This is not a bad homepage, and it kind of gives the feel of what the Net would be like if it existed during the 1970s.

John Carpenter's Escape from L.A. (http://www.escape-la.com/)

As you have probably already heard, Snake is back. And his homepage is cool.

The page is set up like the old text-based adventures that were popular in the late 1980s. Fortunately it has added a few twists. Cool graphics, an interesting story line and even guns make this a little more than D&D.

I recommend spending a little time in the holding cell. There are Shockwave games that let users actually surf Wilshire Canyon just like the movie or play basketball with a beretta.

The surfing is cool, but the basketball is only so-so. (Note: Shockwave is a plug-in for the Netscape and Microsoft browsers that must be downloaded before the games can be played.)

Overall, Escape from L.A. is a neat place to visit, but I wouldn't want to live there.

McCain kickoff will showcase area performance groups

DEBBIE HOLLIS
staff reporter

McCain Auditorium will kick off its season in carnival style from 5 to 7 p.m. Friday at McCain.

In the past, Friends of McCain, a group of volunteers and financial supporters of McCain, have sponsored events before the first performance of the season.

However, this is the first year sponsors have invited performing groups to participate, Richard Martin, director of McCain, said.

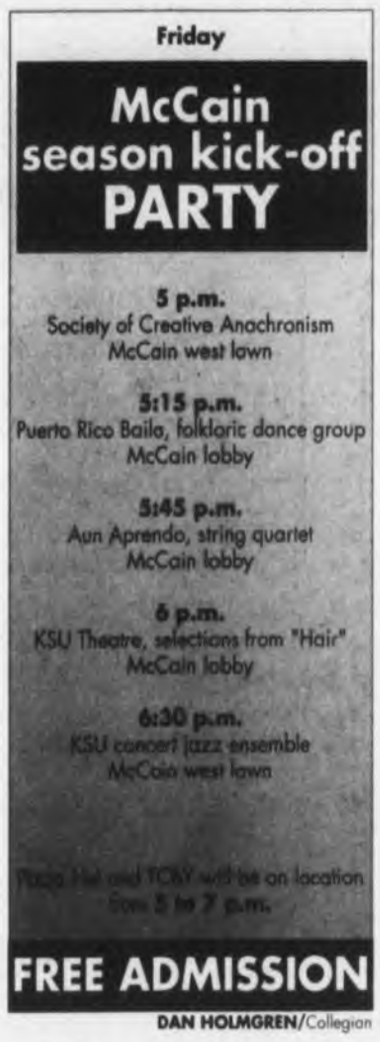
"Hopefully, if it goes well, it won't be the last," said Kristin Brighton, event coordinator and senior in mass communications.

Brighton proposed the event to Martin last spring. She said she hoped to promote the arts in Manhattan.

A variety of exhibits and demonstrations will offer a wide exposure to the Manhattan arts scene.

The Society for Creative Anachronism, Puerto Rico Baila, Aun Aprendo string quartet, KSU Theatre and KSU Concert Jazz Ensemble will perform during the event.

Martin said he felt this event would help make students more aware of what is happening on campus.



"It's an opportunity to showcase the performing groups around," he said.

"The more people we have going to and interested in the arts, the more likely people are to make the arts a part of their life."

Martin said the event might also boost ticket sales for the Reduced Shakespeare Company's presentation of "The Bible: The Complete Word of God (abridged)," which will be performed later that night.

Guests do not need to have a ticket to the Reduced Shakespeare performance to attend the party, Brighton said.

"I would like to see people there who are doing stuff with McCain for the first time," she said.

DAN HOLMGREN/Collegian

Brighton said McCain plays a key role in the Manhattan arts scene.

"It's a unique opportunity for the people of Manhattan to see professional arts that would normally cost much more," she said.

The kickoff is sponsored by McCain, Friends of McCain and McCain Ambassadors. Admission is free.

Architecture lecture

Francois de Menil, a New York City architect, will present the lecture "Mediation/Meditation: the Byzantine Fresco Chapel" at 1:30 p.m. today in the K-State Student Union Little Theatre.

He has worked for architecture firms Richard Meier and Partners and Kohn Pedersen Fox Associates, and will discuss his design for a Greek Orthodox chapel in Houston that will be home to two 13th-century Byzantine frescoes.

The design won de Menil a P/A Citation Award and a Project Honor award from the New York City chapter of the American Institute of Architects. His work has been published in the magazines Architectural Record, Interior Design, A+U and Progressive Architecture.

The lecture is accompanied by an exhibit of the chapel project in Seaton Hall's Chang Gallery. Gallery hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. The exhibit closes Oct. 4. Call Diane Potts at 532-1090 for more information.

New figure-drawing class

Need to practice figure drawing for that self-portrait you've been aching to do for your significant other?

You might consider joining the Department of Art's figure-drawing class, which meets on Thursdays beginning tonight from 7:30 to 9:30. The class is in Bluemont 118. There is a suggested donation of $10, which covers expenses and model fees. You must provide your own supplies. Call 532-6605 for more information.

Willard Gallery show closing

A show of paintings by Lawrence artist Billie Giese-Vella closes Friday in the Willard Gallery. The paintings, very personal explorations in a variety of media, are some of the artist's most recent work.

Gallery hours are from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Call 532-6605 for more information.

Manhattan Arts Center

Terri Schmidt's show of drawings at the Manhattan Arts Center closes Friday. This retrospective encompasses assistant art professor Schmidt's early work in the 1970s to the very recent.

The show is accompanied by an exhibit of portraits of Schmidt through various years by her students. The gallery hours are from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Call 539-3276 for more information.

Surveys show illegal drug use increasing among teens

■ Drug problem blamed on parental apathy.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — About 18 percent of students in junior and senior high school say they use illegal drugs monthly, a new study says.

And when they do, more students this past school year said they got very high, bombed or stoned, according to a study released Wednesday by the National Parents' Resource Institute for Drug Education.

The PRIDE survey findings are much higher than a government study released last month that said 10.4 percent of 12- to 17-year-olds used illegal drugs monthly in 1995. The Department of Health and Human Services study said teenage drug use had nearly doubled from 5.3 percent in 1992.

It is unclear why the two surveys differ, though the annual survey by PRIDE is historically higher than HHS's National Household Survey on Drug Abuse, said PRIDE executive director Doug Hall.

"For every illicit drug and tobacco, drug use by students, mostly age 11 through 18, is at the highest level PRIDE has ever recorded," Hall said.

> "This is not so-called recreational use. This is not experimentation. This is monthly, weekly and daily use."
> • DOUG HALL
> PRIDE EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Students who use drugs also are getting more intoxicated than before, the study said. When using marijuana, nearly 74 percent of 12th graders said they get very high, compared with about 63 percent in 1987-88. About 36 percent of 12th-grade beer drinkers said they get very high, bombed or stoned, compared with 27 percent nine years ago.

"This is not so-called recreational use. This is not experimentation. This is monthly, weekly and daily use," Hall said.

Teen-age drug use has become a hot topic this election year. Republican Bob Dole used last month's HHS study as an opportunity to call for better moral leadership from President Clinton.

"The motto of the Clinton administration seems to be 'We just don't care,' and so they are unwilling to act in responsible and effective ways," said William Bennett, drug policy director under President Bush.

On Wednesday, Clinton's drug-policy director, Barry McCaffrey, called for less politicking and more cooperation in fixing the problem.

"The drug problem in America is parents, not politics," McCaffrey said.

"This election's coming and going, and after the election America's kids are still going to have a drug challenge."

SPEED

▶ PRIDE and Department of Health surveys state the number of 11- to 17-year-old drug users has risen dramatically in the past few years.

Violence victims need respect

SETH GURSS
staff reporter

Domestic violence is nothing new to Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall, who spoke Wednesday at a National Rural Families Conference luncheon at K-State.

Stovall said authorities and a restraining order offered no help for a good friend of hers who was killed by her estranged husband.

The estranged husband allegedly shot her five times as she was leaving a church where she had been working.

Stovall said people can and should make a difference concerning domestic violence.

"We cannot, as a society, continue to ignore the costs and the consequences involved in domestic violence," Stovall said.

Stovall, who preferred to call it undomesticated violence, said there are several good programs in Kansas that offer help to domestic-violence victims.

Circles of Affection, a program in Manhattan, was recently recognized for its positive effect on children's lives.

"It does a great job of addressing the needs of children who have grown up in violence," Stovall said.

Another program Stovall endorsed is the Crisis Hotline.

The hotline is beneficial, because no matter where domestic-violence victims are, the hotline gives them an opportunity to dial one phone number to get help, Stovall said.

Callers can talk to someone about their situation, seek help in finding a shelter or find out how to take legal action, Stovall said.

One of the best ways to begin to help victims of domestic violence is to make sure people get proper training, she said.

"It is important so we know how to work for them and not against them," Stovall said.

Stovall offered advice to audience members who have a friend or loved one who is being abused.

"Offer your support in listening to their stories. Respect the fears and the needs of the women who are sharing with you," Stovall said.

Kansas has a new law regarding restraining orders that does a better job protecting victims, Stovall said.

She said if a restraining order is violated, the authorities can arrest the perpetrator immediately on the grounds of probable cause.

Stovall said if violators come to victims' workplaces, they will not only be arrested but will have to spend 48 hours in jail.

"This new legislation allows immediate protection for the victim," Stovall said.

Before this legislation, all that could be done was to inform the perpetrator's parole officer.

"Attorney General Stovall brings personal experience to the job, because she had a personal tragedy related to domestic violence," said Elaine Johannes, extension specialist for the community and mental health center at K-State.

K-State telecommunications protected with new generator

ALIESA GOOD
staff reporter

The old ticket booth at East Stadium has been torn down and rebuilt and contains an emergency generator to restore power to East Stadium during power outages.

When the the power goes out, the generator has a transfer switch that will automatically restore power. The generator is only big enough to keep the computers, lights and operator systems running. The generator will only be used is if the power goes out.

"It is great for the University. When the power goes out someone will be here to answer the phone," Staci Wharton, senior in education and University operator, said.

Previously, if East Stadium lost power there was no back up and telecommunications was down. Last year when the transformer went down for a large portion of the afternoon, the decision was made that a backup system was needed.

"The generator became available, because it was rejected by another part of campus. We needed one so we bought it," Fred Damkroger, director of telecommunications, said.

There were not a lot of options as to where the generator could be placed. Basically it had to be on the east side of the stadium. It couldn't be placed inside because of the fumes, and the stands were in the way on the other side.

It was ideal to place the generator in the old ticket booth, which was being used for storage. However, the roof had been damaged by termites, so the structure had to be torn down and rebuilt.

"It was the cheapest way of fixing the problem. I don't know how much it cost, but we really didn't have a choice," Damkroger said.

The project is almost complete. The structure needs a door and to be painted. The project was funded by telecommunications and completed by the Division of University Physical Facilities.

our performance in that area this season."

Punting is something Garcia has been practicing for a long time.

Garcia

"We used to get those little footballs at the high-school games, and I would take them home and practice kicking them," Garcia said. "When all the kids gathered to play football, I was always the one that was the punter or the kicker on the team. It is something I have always enjoyed."

Garcia's punting ability at Victoria, Texas, earned him first-team all-south Texas, first-team all-area and all-state honors.

But punting wasn't the only thing Garcia did in high school. He also was the kicker and played quarterback, abilities that add trick plays to Bill Snyder's playbook.

Even though he attracted offers his senior year to play at other schools, Garcia said he knew K-State was the right place.

"Coach (Mo) Latimore recruited me. As soon as I got up here, I knew this was the place for me," Garcia said.

Even though he wasn't recruited by K-State to quarterback, Garcia has been given the opportunity to show off those old skills.

Last year at Nebraska, Garcia converted two fake punts into first downs by completing two passes for 30 yards.

Can K-State fans expect to see Garcia's passing abilities again this year against Nebraska?

"I'm ready for the chance to throw the ball again," Garcia said.

"It makes the defense be careful on punt coverage if there is someone back there that can throw the ball."

But for now, Garcia is concentrating on his punting mechanics.

"My goal is to average a 4.5 hang time on my punts and put all of my punts inside the 20," he said.

"I have been working every day on it in practice, and I feel I'm doing a pretty good job so far."

$$$ MONEY $$$
The Educational Opportunity Fund (EOF) was approved on May 19,1988 by the Kansas board of Regents. This fund will generate about $210,000 for allocation next fall. Approximately 1% of student tuition monies are returned to the University for:
1) Academic scholarships and fellowships for both graduate and undergraduate students through the department and college level.
2) Need-based grants, including assistance in the areas of special expenses or for groups of students who have been historically under-represented in higher education.
3) Salaries or grants for students participating in public and community service programs.
4) Salaries for students employed in campus student services.
Applications are due in the Office of Student Activities and Services located on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union by 4 p.m. Sept. 27,1996. Applications received after this time will not be considered, regardless of delays caused by campus mail or the U.S. Postal Service.
Please direct any questions concerning the EOF or the application process to the EOF committee Chairperson Aaron Otto at 532-6541.

Harmony week to begin

Inside

Racial and ethnic issues affect the K-State campus and the country in a visceral way. Find out how the Collegian editorial board thinks highlighting diversity can help.

● Page 4

DARCIE MCCONKEY
staff reporter

Organizers are planning special events to build bridges toward racial harmony during K-State's Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, beginning Monday.

The theme of the week is "Building Bridges Toward Racial Harmony."

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week was created in 1987, when it became obvious K-State students of different cultures and races were segregating themselves.

When an offensive racial incident occurred in Aggieville, it was apparent K-State needed to find an event to promote positive race relations and help prevent future racial incidents.

Barbara Baker, academic service coordinator for Educational Supportive Services, is one of the original founders of the annual event. Without an event like this, she said she believes people would deny themselves the opportunity to learn more about other cultures.

"Many people are fearful of admitting their differences. We need to appreciate and understand those differences to improve relations among various cultural groups. That's one reason K-State needed to start a program to bring students together," Baker said.

Dina Bennett, coordinator of Multicultural Student Organizations, said Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week is an important element in creating unity among diverse K-State students.

"This week gives students a better indication of racial diversity and a chance to learn about the diversity in a safe environment," Bennett said.

The week benefits many students because the speakers serve as positive role models. They provide awareness of diverse cultures and present varying perspectives on important national issues, such as race relations and cross-cultural communication, Bennett said.

"We are an institution of higher learning, so we would be doing the students a disservice if we did not provide as many viewpoints as possible," she said.

Monday students will have the opportunity to learn more about cultures and racial issues through such speakers as Cheryl Collins, who will be presenting "Manhattan Women of Color: Local Leadership." She will highlight the accomplishments of local women of color who helped build the Manhattan community.

Former K-State player dies in car accident

KIMBERLY HEFLING
news editor

Henry Lee, a former walk-on K-State football player, died last week in an automobile accident near his home in Atchison.

The accident occurred early last Saturday morning in rural Atchison when his car came to a T in the road and hit an embankment.

The impact of the crash caused a spare tire in the back of the car to fly to the front seat and threw Lee, 20, against the steering wheel.

"He was huge," said Krisha Vertin, senior in secondary education and Lee's cousin. "He was just this great big guy, but ever since we've been little he's been sensitive — like a big teddy bear. He could see the good in anybody."

Services took place Wednesday, and more than 600 people attended, Vertin said.

In high school, Lee was extremely popular and participated in state-level wrestling, track and field, and football, Vertin said.

Fighting escalates in West Bank

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Their fragile peace going up in thick, black smoke, Palestinian police and Israeli troops fought with automatic weapons Thursday at holy sites and in the streets of the West Bank and Gaza, where thousands of Palestinians burned tires, threw stones and called for a revolution.

With at least 38 Palestinians and 11 Israelis killed in one day, the pitched level of violence surpassed that of the worst days of the six-year intefadeh — the Palestinian revolt against Israeli occupation of the West Bank and Gaza that ended in 1993 with a breakthrough peace accord.

At least 43 Palestinians, 11 Israelis and one Egyptian army officer have been killed since the clashes began Tuesday, bringing the three-day death toll to 55.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu returned to Israel on Thursday and went into an emergency cabinet meeting on the crisis, cutting short a three-day trip to Europe.

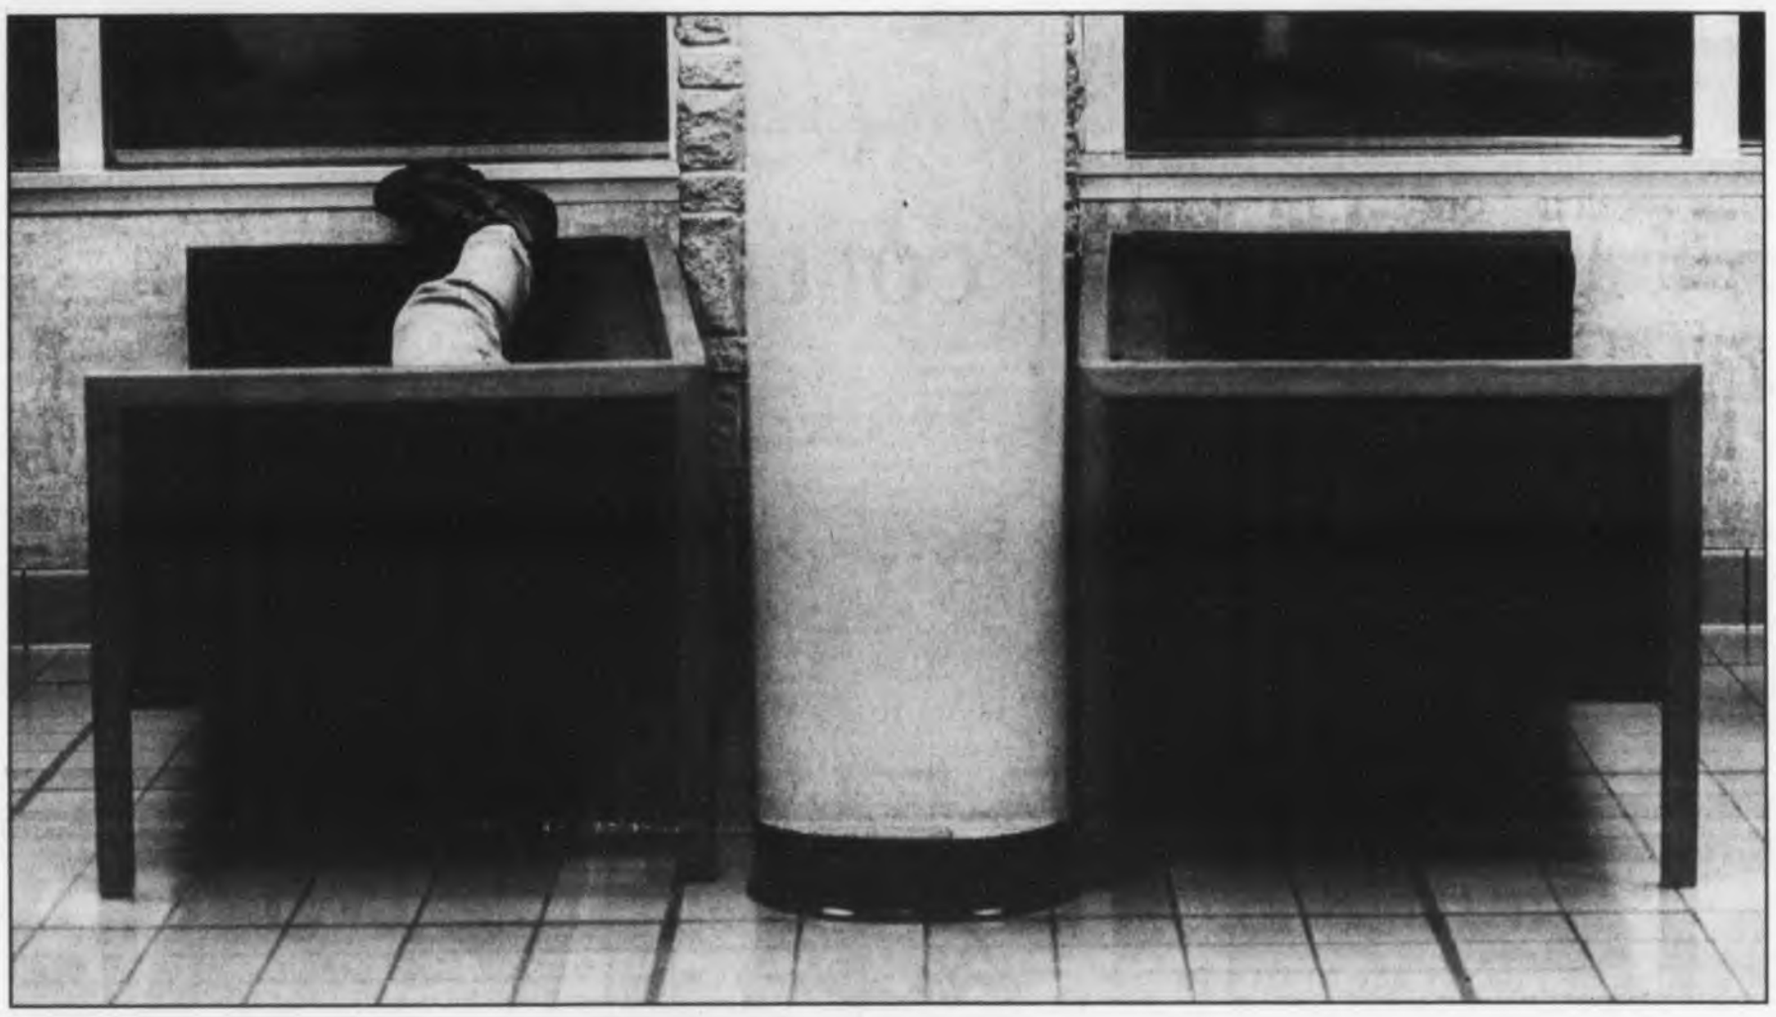
He tried to arrange a quick meeting with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to stop the fighting. Arafat told Netanyahu he saw no point in meeting unless Netanyahu presented concrete proposals for implementing the peace agreements.

Israeli TV and radio stations reported efforts were under way to arrange a meeting of the two leaders with Egyptian president Hosni Mubarak in Cairo on Friday. The Egyptian news agency MENA said the meeting would probably take place next week in Cairo.

The reports could not be immediately confirmed.

Despite opposition from the United States, the U.N. Security Council called a formal session for Friday to discuss the increasing violence.

The clashes were set off Tuesday by Israel's decision to open an archaeological tunnel near Muslim holy sites in Jerusalem. It reflected Palestinians' deep frustration with Netanyahu's hardline policies.



Many Palestinians feel their dream of statehood slipped away after Netanyahu's May election victory over Shimon Peres — who helped negotiate a preliminary peace agreement with the Palestinians — and have been frustrated by a seven-month blockade of the West Bank and Gaza that keeps them out of Israel.

"There was no alternative for us. That's why we participated in this uprising," said Mohammed Ali, a 30-year-old unemployed cleaner who hurled stones at Israeli troops.

Netanyahu has witnessed the unraveling of his campaign pledge to bring Israel peace with security. He is influenced both by hardliners in his ruling coalition and his own devotion to the Likud Party line that Israel must not abandon the West Bank.

Arafat initially encouraged the riots to warn Israel it must move forward in the peace talks, but by Thursday afternoon, Palestinian radio was broadcasting appeals in Arafat's name for police to cease their fire.

Many of Arafat's armed police officers ignored the appeals. Some took off their uniforms and proceeded to the front lines with civilians — either with weapons or to throw stones, said Lt. Ihab Abu Mustafa, commander of 100 police officers in Ramallah.

Senators hear security, parking-garage proposal

NICOLE KIRBY
staff reporter

Student Senate heard a resolution Thursday night asking the City/University Projects Fund Committee to pay for improvements such as a parking garage, security cameras and new crosswalks.

The senators will vote on the resolution next Thursday, and if it passes, it will be sent to President Jon Wefald for his approval and changes.

It would then go to the City/University Projects Fund Committee, which would send it on to the Manhattan City Commission for final approval.

The Governmental Relations Committee presented the resolution to the Senate, suggesting that the fund also provide improved lighting, stoplights, signals and bike paths.

Mandy Reese, member of both the Governmental Relations Committee and the City/University Projects Fund, said the resolution would probably pass but would be changed along the way.

"We're just putting this on here to say to President Wefald that we have a parking problem," Tracey Mann, Governmental Relations Committee chairperson, said of the parking garage.

Other than the parking garage, Reese said she thought the resolution would become reality.

"The City/University Projects Fund Committee and the city commission are pretty good about sticking with the proposals," she said. "For the most part, they have to decide the amounts and work out the details."

There was some concern the resolution did not reflect the interests of the city as well as the students because there were so many campus improvements.

"We want the community to feel like they can feel safe on our campus," Reese said.

The Senate also heard a bill from the Allocations Committee, which would allow the committee to let groups and college councils buy supplies for projects and open houses.

The current regulations prevent the committee from allocating money for such supplies.

"It's going to be very difficult to justify which bills we pay for and which bills we don't, and it's just giving some clarification as to where to draw the line of what to buy and what not to buy," Bret Glendening, allocations chairperson, said.

Phillips settles federal suit

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — St. Louis Rams running back Lawrence Phillips has settled a federal lawsuit filed against him by a woman who said he battered and sexually assaulted her, according to a published report.

The settlement between Phillips and Katherine McEwen of Topeka, a student at the University of Nebraska, was reached this week only after a federal judge agreed to allow the lawyers to black out more sensational aspects of the lawsuit, the Kansas City Star reported in Thursday's edition.

In making the decision, Chief U.S. District Judge D. Brook Bartlett severely criticized the University of Nebraska's handling of the matter, saying it warranted a substantial investigation.

McEwen, Phillips' former girlfriend, filed the lawsuit last month in Jackson County

State universities see drop in enrollment

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Enrollment in Kansas' state universities declined nearly 1 percent this fall, the Kansas Board of Regents disclosed Thursday in a preliminary report.

Total head count at the six universities, medical school, veterinary medicine school and technology college was 79,662 as of the 20th day of classes, the regents said in a statement.

That compared with 80,350 in September 1995, a decrease of 688, or 0.9 percent.

Only Fort Hays State University and the College of Veterinary Medicine at Manhattan gained in head-count enrollment from fall 1995, the regents' figures showed.

Most of the decline came in resident students, which numbered 63,376 this year, down 666 from 1995. Non-resident enrollment dropped by 22 students, to 16,286.

Of the total, the regents said, 74,617 students live on campus, and 5,045 live off campus.

Ray Hauke, regents director of planning and budget, said situations vary widely at the campuses, and enrollment changes result from a variety of demographic and economic factors.

The universities are continuing to analyze their fall enrollments, and a final report will be made at the regents' Oct. 17 meeting, Hauke said.

"It is likely that freshman enrollment will increase during the fall 1996, based upon relatively large high-school graduating classes in many districts," he said.

"However, at several campuses, those increases will be substantially offset by a loss of seniors due to a very large 1996 graduating class. The result is a negligible change in total on-campus enrollment at several of the regents universities," he said.

1996 enrollment

The following is a preliminary report of the fall enrollment in Kansas' state universities as compared to 1995.

	1995	1996
University of Kansas	25,036	24,874
Kansas State University	19,315	19,184

• DAVIS SENTENCED TO DEATH. The killer of Polly Klaas enraged her family even as he was being condemned to death Thursday. He claimed that the 12-year-old girl told him before he killed her that she had been molested by her father. Richard Allen Davis was sent to California's death row at San Quentin Prison for killing Polly after kidnapping her from a slumber party in the bedroom of her Petaluma home Oct. 1, 1993.

• LUCID BACK ON EARTH. Astronaut Shannon Lucid, NASA's space superwoman, returned to Earth on Thursday after six debilitating months of weightlessness and to everyone's amazement, walked off the shuttle Atlantis. After a record-shattering 188 days in space — most of that time aboard the Russian space station Mir — the 53-year-old biochemist was thrilled to be home.

• EGYPTIAN FERRY SINKS. An overloaded ferry crossing the Nile River in southern Egypt sank Thursday, and police feared more than 50 people drowned. Police rescued 19 of the ferry's 75 passengers, and divers were searching the water. The ferry was returning to the village of Beni Hassan in Minya province. The passengers had been attending a funeral on the other side of the river. But the boat, which was old, tilted and sank under the weight.

• BILL PENALIZES DATE-RAPE DRUG USERS. Use of Rohypnol and other powerful tranquilizers to subdue rape victims would carry a penalty of up to 15 years in prison under legislation approved by the House on Thursday. The measure, which has yet to be considered by the Senate, passed 421-1. It makes it a crime to possess Rohypnol and other similar date-rape drugs with the intent to commit a violent crime, including sexual assault. The potential jail term increases to 20 years when the victim is 14 years old or younger.

• SEX-CHANGE OPERATION INSURANCE. The city that created a task force to consider legalizing prostitution and backed the use of medicinal marijuana is mulling another bold idea — covering the cost of sex-change operations for city employees. At the request of San Fransisco's transgender community — believed to number at least 6,000 people — Supervisor Tom Ammiano plans to introduce a resolution to cover sex-change operations.

Televised debate for all candidates slated for Dole Hall center

SCOTT PHILLIPS
staff reporter

A live forum, including candidates from the Democratic, Republican, Libertarian and Reform parties, will be televised Sunday from the Kansas Regents Educational Communications Center in Dole Hall.

The broadcast will start at 9 p.m. on KTWU-TV, Channel 11.

KTWU-TV from Topeka and public radio stations from around Kansas are sponsoring the political forum, "The Democracy Project: the Kassebaum Seat," for which retiring Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., will be host.

"It will basically be a political round-table to openly discuss current issues affecting Congress," said Dave Pomeroy, program director for KTWU-TV, said.

The broadcast will include four political-party representatives and two moderators.

The Republican candidate is Pat Roberts, and the Democratic candidate is Sally Thompson. Mark Marney from the Reform Party and Steve Rosile from the Libertarian Party are also scheduled to participate.

The moderators are Dick Haines from Kansas Public Radio in Lawrence, and Dale Goter, a public - affairs director from KPTS-TV in Wichita.

"The moderators will decide upon the content in a meeting right before the round-table," Pomeroy said. "I would say that issues of foreign policy, taxation and the deficit will be discussed as well as any other timely topics of importance."

Pat Roberts' representative, Jackie Cottrell, referred to the event as an open exchange of ideas without debate.

"It will simply be a free exchange of ideas," Cottrell said. "No opinions, no closing statements, just a semi circle open forum of ideas."

KTWU-TV's main purpose with the broadcast is to build an audience of viewers who intend to promote citizen involvement and to draw voters back into the democratic process.

Clouds.

Clouds were about all anyone could see Thursday night at Memorial Stadium, where the Physics Club invited the public to view the full lunar eclipse.

"Pretty clouds," Matt Crawley, president of the Physics Club, said. "But we didn't come out to see clouds."

The crowd cheered as the first break in the clouds came at 8:30 p.m., revealing a small portion of the eclipse.

After the first break, the clouds got thicker. Most of the crowd arriving after 8:30 p.m. didn't get to see anything.

"If I could just see a little bit of it, I'd be happy," Casey Lytle, sophomore in management, said.

A steady stream of people came and went throughout the night, with the number peaking at 35.

"I'd be pleased with any turnout," Crawley, junior in physics, said. "If just five people showed up, that would be five more who got to enjoy it."

This full lunar eclipse, which was visible to nearly everyone in North, Central and South America, was the last full lunar eclipse until January 2000, astronomers said.

Hansen proposes cap on number of Student Senate seats

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

Student Body President Chris Hansen proposed long-term legislation that would include putting a cap on the number of Student Senate seats.

This legislation was discussed at Thursday's executive cabinet meeting. It is part of long-term goals to accommodate the predicted growth of students by adjusting the structure of the Student Governing Association.

Because of the predicted growth of student enrollment, Hansen discussed putting a cap on the number of Senate seats to allow the Senate to function more efficiently in the future.

T.J. Schreiner, off-campus housing director, said he felt the number of students represented by each senator should increase due to the rising enrollment.

The cabinet also discussed adjusting the number of senators per college when it is necessary to balance representation.

One of the legislation proposals included creating a chief financial officer to handle all student money on campus. This would free up more duties for the two committees that presently handle student mone: the Privilege Fee and the Allocations committees.

Hansen also proposed introducing legislation that would allow executive committee members to participate as members of Senate committees. The executive committee members would not be allowed to vote but would serve as a valuable interaction tool between the executive and legislative branches of SGA.

Currently, there are two Senate members representing the K-State-Salina campus in Senate. In the new legislation, Hansen proposed to do away with the Senate seats from K-State-Salina.

He said the students don't pay campus fees and are therefore not affected by Senate legislation.

Hansen proposed adding the K-State-Salina student body president to the executive cabinet to make up for the loss of the senators' representation.

Stovall to discuss safety force

SETH GURSS
staff reporter

Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall will attend a meeting today at K-State for the second time in three days.

The meeting for a campu- safety task force is at 1:30 p.m. in K-State Student Union 212.

The task force, called the Campus Awareness Makes for Protection and Ultimate Safety, was organized by Stovall to address campus safety in Kansas.

The presidents of the six Kansas Board of Regents schools are all invited to attend. The 19 community colleges and 17 vocational technical schools in Kansas are also represented.

"This is an issue that requires the attention of top administrators, and I look forward to their participation," Stovall said.

CAMPUS will address many safety issues affecting college students.

"I expect the discussion to cover the range from criminal-history background of students to more lighting in the parking lots," Stovall said.

The task force also includes law-enforcement officers, students and parents from across the state.

This task force will mark the end of a three-day speaking tour for Stovall, in which she visited Manhattan, Lawrence, Topeka and Wamego.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Ethnic-harmony week needs to unify campus

Unity can come out of diversity.

Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week is working toward building that unity next week at K-State.

But the organizers, speakers and students participating in the week-long celebration should tread on issues of race carefully.

WHY WE CARE

As Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week rolls around to K-State once again, the Collegian reminds people to have open discussion about racial issues in order to have unity and diversity.

Open discussion of racial issues is needed. Divisive rhetoric, which has pervaded some of the opinions of so-called diversity leaders across the academic community, should be avoided.

It is one thing to learn from the different cultures that make us all American. It is another to emphasize hurtful differences and the mistakes of the past.

When K-State students prepare to celebrate their racial or ethnic heritage, they should keep in mind that each K-State student has a viable culture that can be learned from.

Nobody's culture should be overlooked, not during Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week, or during any other week. Racial tolerance and harmony is a state of mind, not a week.

Multiculturalism and diversity are more than buzzwords. The issues behind these ideas cannot be contained in sound bites or even a week of speeches and events.

This week of events is merely a time set aside to examine and appreciate what might be ignored in the busy shuffle of everyday existence.

Yes, people are different. But the ideas and opinions of individuals should be more important than any affiliation they might be able to claim.

People cannot be pigeonholed or classified by which box they check on a government form.

Racial and ethnic identity is just one part of a person's identity.

In the end, race cannot make us take up arms against each other. Our ethnic identities cannot make us relate to one another, respect one another or even listen to different viewpoints.

These are decisions people make based on their values. In the end, harmony is up to each of us, regardless of race.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera Tank at (karolyi@ksu.ksu.edu.).

Bob Dole and President Clinton wage verbal war, but do voters realize the potential Ross Perot presents in the early election debates?

the missing candidate

STEPHENS

Clinton 1, Dole 1, Perot 0.

Last week, the acclaimed bipartisan Commission on Presidential Debates barred Reform Party presidential candidate Ross Perot from appearing in the two scheduled presidential debates. To top it off, it also barred Perot's running mate, Pat Choate, from appearing in the vice-presidential debate.

Is anyone really surprised at this?

While many have the notion bipartisan means nice, politics is still politics.

And while most analysts believe it was Bob Dole's people who put up the most resistance to allowing Perot in the debate, it should be obvious that both the Dole and President Clinton camps don't want Perot to appear, but largely for the same reason.

He's coming to take away their votes.

It has been well-publicized that Perot is going to draw votes away from Dole, but little attention has been given to how many votes Perot would take from Clinton.

If you don't believe me, look at the media. While the aforementioned stupendous Commission on Presidential Debates was debating, I did not see Democrat after Democrat protest the Dole resistance as a Republican attempt to cause gridlock, partisanship, and every other evil under the sun, as they have done on every issue they truly disagree with the GOP on.

In fact, it appeared to me they were quite relieved that all sides agreed not to invite Perot, and were even more thrilled by the fact that Dole took the heat for it.

The reason the Democrats don't want Perot in the debates can be traced to one number: 1984.

In 1984, the Democratic presidential nominee, Walter Mondale, lost in a landslide election to Ronald Reagan. In 1984, Reagan won 49 of 50 states and set a record for most electoral votes received, 525, while Mondale only captured one state and 13 electoral votes.

> "... It should be obvious that both the Dole and President Clinton camps don't want Perot to appear, but largely for the same reason. He's coming to take away their votes."

While a portion of this victory can be attributed to the fact that Reagan was an incumbent at the time, a large part of this enormous victory has to be attributed to the fact that Mondale was perceived as being too liberal, a trait Clinton shared until recently, when he began to reposition himself as a conservative.

Clinton fears Perot is because of the Reagan Democrats. These are members of the Democratic party who vote Democrat because of union affiliation, family heritage or resistance to big business, but whose world view is actually conservative.

It is these voters who gave Reagan such a lopsided victory in 1984.

If they recall Clinton's efforts in the first half of his term or are informed of the consequences of the Health Security Act, tax hikes and foreign-policy blunders such as Somalia, where 18 men were lost in an effort not to appear warlike, they will probably not vote Democrat.

Enter Ross Perot, Texas billionaire and wanna-be presidential candidate.

While Dole is having a rough time in the media, and the Republican Party is perceived as the party of the rich, cruel and insensitive, Perot offers a choice in the middle, which caters to the Reagan Democrats of Clinton's party.

In addition, Perot is perceived as not being a beltway insider, which will help sell his candidacy to voters who are disenfranchised by the current political system.

Clinton received less than half of the popular vote in 1992, and it is doubtful he will do better in 1996. While most polls show Clinton leading at this stage of the game, some analysts have found these polls have a larger sampling of Democrats than Republicans. In addition, voters are fickle, especially on Election Day.

To borrow from another sport, "It ain't over 'til the fat lady sings."

For those of you who really do want to see Perot debate Dole and Clinton, he has filed a lawsuit saying the acclaimed Commission on Presidential Debates used a mostly subjective standard of including only those candidates with a realistic chance of winning.

It still could be Dole, Perot and Clinton all tied at 1.

no false PROPHETS

Not all Americans practice standard Christian beliefs

MY

Page
GETZ

Growing up as the product of an atheist and a Jew, I had a lot of neighbors, friends and even teachers trying to save my soul.

Page Getz is a sophomore in journalism and mass communications. You can reach her by e-mail at (namaste@ksu.ksu.edu.).

I met another damn prophet the other day.

I was smoking a cigarette and dodging crickets at my favorite smoking post, just minding my own business when a rather kindred spirit approached.

I'll just call him the prophet, as opposed to the typically redundant and patronizing, well-meaning missionary-of-sorts anxious to save my soul.

We exchanged smiles and suddenly I found myself involved in a lengthy discussion on Christianity, defending my soul and trying to be patient, because I have a lot of experience with prophets.

Growing up as the product of an atheist and a Jew, I had a lot of neighbors, friends and even teachers trying to save my soul.

Unfortunately, I got the condensed versions of various Protestant and Catholic dogma. I heard something about God's illegitimate son with nails through his hands and something about burning in eternal hell.

My parents made it clear that in our family, as liberal, enlightened intellectuals, we were going to have to find our own truths, and they weren't going to tell us what to believe.

So, with all of my elementary-school logic, I decided not to believe that 2,000 years ago some supposedly blond-haired, blue-eyed Arab could erase every wrong I had ever done, which made my life in the Bible Belt inconvenient.

In the public schools, I learned songs like "Away in the Manger," "Jesus Loves Me" and a list of Christmas songs about what I perceived to be everyone else's God.

Childhood friends told me cheerfully that if I didn't go to Sunday school with them I would burn in the fires of hell. But it never made enough sense to me to disturb me any more than "Nightmare on Elm Street" did.

Various prophets seemed to pick and choose what aspects of their manifesto should be taken literally and what was dated.

It was after a series of these encounters, as well as the study of the indigestible insanities of the Crusades, multiple inquisitions and World War II, that inevitably, I began to resent Christians and to despise Christianity.

It was only when I stumbled into Eastern philosophy that I stopped burning, ripping and spitting on Bibles.

When I could see the distortion of the fear-driven dogma substituting faith in religion, I could see through the anger to find the same light in all religion that had drawn me to Eastern religion.

Resembling the infatuation of a new lover, I chattered indiscriminately about my new revelations on reincarnation, Hinduism and Buddhism, and found my ideas dismissed as flaky and misled.

I was forbidden to enter my friends' houses and was once taken to what I thought was a Christian comedian, only to find myself at a revival where my friends hoped to purify and cleanse my soul from the hold of the mighty Lucifer.

But I took comfort in knowing that other cultures and entire countries shared my path.

As a child, my mother told me never to tell anyone that I was Jewish for fear that we would be attacked or murdered by anti-Semites. Now, my mother warns me not to express my beliefs for fear that some psycho or fundamentalist Phelps-type will be offended.

We live in a society that supposedly protects our free speech, but sometimes speaking out isn't safe, or it's expensive, or God forbid, it might offend someone who has control over my grade point average or my financial aid.

When the prophet approached me, he had the kindred smile in his eyes that I recognized deeply, but a coating of condescending self-righteousness over it. He called his guru by a name I used to hate, and he found my faith to be as bizarre as I found his to be, but I knew we were both on the same side. He didn't.

At the risk of offending the few I haven't yet offended, I can't hesitate to voice what the smile in my own eyes means, and while I would not diminish the truth that others find in mainstream religion, I have not yet found the same respect.

It amazes me that others are so quick to tell me about the dominant religion in the United States, that somehow I must have missed it or I would have conformed by now.

I know Christianity.

How could I not? I have learned from what the public schools called secular books written by Protestant white men and sang their songs. I know about Christmas, Easter and the Bible.

I can find Christianity in Wal-Mart, on car bumpers, on television, in hotel nightstands and in every nook and cranny of American culture.

As an American Buddhist, or just a non-Christian, I can't help but know Christianity. But what do Americans know about us?

Panel to raise AIDS awareness

JANN STOUGH
staff reporter

Two upcoming events will try to bring AIDS awareness to campus.

The Communicable Disease Committee met Thursday to discuss possible ways of educating students on sexually transmitted diseases.

The committee is planning two upcoming events to increase awareness and combat the problems facing students. The first event is the AIDS Memorial Quilt display.

"The quilt will be coming to the Union Oct. 24," Reita Currie, Lafene Health Center health educator, said.

The committee, along with the Student Governing Association, will sponsor four panels of the quilt, which consist of 32 individual quilts.

The second event shows the many faces of AIDS.

"The week after the quilt leaves, the Union Program Council will be bringing Project Face to Face to campus," Currie said.

Project Face to Face is 18 plastered molds of the faces of people who have been infected with HIV.

The committee is also updating its brochures.

"We've added a peer educators resource number to a document we put out in the Union and the library," Bob Clark, committee member, said. "Peer education helps students strike a balance between levity and AIDS seriousness."

Committee chair Don Fallon said, "The committee has been in existence since the late 1980s. Our primary goal is communicable disease education for STDs with the main focus on AIDS."

The committee meets once a month to establish policies.

"The main problem on college campuses today is transmission for youth," Fallon said.

The problems are local and face anyone.

"The disease has shifted to the heterosexual community," Dan Martin, committee member, said. "There are some strains that are entering the United States that are suited better for heterosexual passage than in the gay community."

The committee recognized the need for college-level awareness.

"Nationally on college campuses, one out of every 250 are infected with HIV," Currie said.

Currie said if K-State is similar to the national average would have about 80 infected students.

Lafene readies itself for flu season, advises shots, healthy study habits

ANDREA COREY
staff reporter

Flu season is barreling toward Manhattan like a train, and some K-State students may be on the tracks.

October and November mark the beginning of the flu season.

Catherine Barry, director of nursing at Lafene Health Center, said college students' lifestyle makes them more susceptible to illness.

"They tend to stay up late and not get enough sleep. They grab something to eat. They're busy people," she said.

If this sounds like you, consider getting a flu shot.

Almost anyone can get a flu shot, and though the shot can't ensure you won't get sick, it is a step in the right direction.

According to documents from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, college students should get flu shots if illness would disrupt school activities.

Other groups who should get the shots include those with chronic heart or lung problems like asthma, those with any type of illness that lowers the body's normal resistance to infections and family members of high-risk people.

The CDC also said anyone who wants to reduce the chance of getting sick can get the vaccine.

Barry said symptoms of the flu include a high fever, headache, severe body aches, coughing and congestion. She said nausea and vomiting aren't always flu symptoms.

Few people react negatively to the vaccine. Anyone who has allergic reactions to eggs is not recommended to get the shot, because it is prepared from fluid in chicken eggs. Anyone who is allergic to eggs will be evaluated by Lafene to find out if they can get the shot, Barry said.

Last flu season, Lafene gave 680 flu shots to K-State students and faculty.

Flu shots will be available at Lafene beginning in late October and will cost $6 for students and $10 for faculty.

A walk-in clinic has been set up for the following Thursdays: Oct. 24, Oct. 31 and Nov. 7. Walk-in hours are from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. on those Thursdays. Regular appointments to get flu shots can also be made.

Riley County-Manhattan Health Department also gives flu shots for $10.

Farrell changes search systems

LILLIAN BEEBE
staff reporter

As the structure of Farrell Library expands on the outside, the information highways are expanding on the inside.

Farrell changed from Lynx, a text-based medium to its current system, which incorporates graphics.

"We are definitely involved in a new area. There have been difficulties. But we feel our patrons need access to information that is all over the world and on different platforms," Dave Allen, director of library network services, said.

The new system lacks a name because it is a collection of systems including servers and CD-ROMs.

"There are a variety of components that are brought together by a common user-interface. That interface continues to develop as we add different components," Allen said.

Endeavor Information Systems' Voyager 3.2 is one of those elements. It is the software that sets up an online catalog, and technical and circulation operations in the library, Allen said. The system has been running since January.

"The biggest difference is it's more graphical than Lynx," Doug Bates, chairperson of access services, said.

Voyager 3.2 also has expanded search capabilities. The screen is set up like a card file, allowing users to shuffle through and construct as broad or detailed a search as they need, Bates said.

Even though people are moving off mainframes, the software isn't written in many cases. Much of what was written for Voyager 3.2 was developed in the last year.

Allen and Bates advise students to come and spend some time with the new system.

"If you take time to sit down and learn to use the system, you can use it in a more powerful way," Bates said.

Volleyball team sets to begin Big 12 season with surprises

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

The K-State volleyball team will open Big 12 play this weekend marking the start of the most important part of regular season.

The Wildcats are 12-1 and are on a seven-match winning streak dating back to Sept. 7 and a loss to Ohio State. Even more impressive is that the Cats haven't lost a game in those seven matches.

The Cats travel to Colorado Friday. The Buffs are sitting at 5-2 and are receiving votes in the AVCA top-25 poll. Their two losses were to No. 13 Wisconsin and No. 21 Colorado State.

Saturday, K-State travels to Lincoln, Neb., to take on No. 8 Nebraska. The Cornhuskers are 8-2, with losses to to No. 1 Hawaii and North Carolina.

K-State is 0-52 against Nebraska, dating to the schools' first meeting in 1974. In that time, K-State has only won 12 games against the Huskers and has forced five games only twice.

K-State coach Jim Moore said his team cannot look past Colorado to get a shot at Nebraska.

"If we look past Colorado, they'll spank us so bad we won't know what happened," Moore said. "Still, I think we'll be thinking about Nebraska some. If 0-52 wasn't in our head, we wouldn't be very intelligent."

Possibly the biggest key to the Cats' success of late has been their ability to put games away.

"I think we're starting to develop a bit of a killer attitude," senior middle blocker Kate DeClerk said. "We go out wanting to win every game, and we go out thinking we can do it."

Moore said a prime example of the team's killer attitude came after the Iowa match last weekend. The Cats struggled with the Hawkeyes, but defeated them in three-straight games, 15-6, 15-11, 15-11.

"The girls were angry after the Iowa match," Moore said. "They wanted to play a better match and they thought they could handle them better than they did. The girls were so depressed and I had to tell them we had won. The girls just wanted Iowa to score less points."

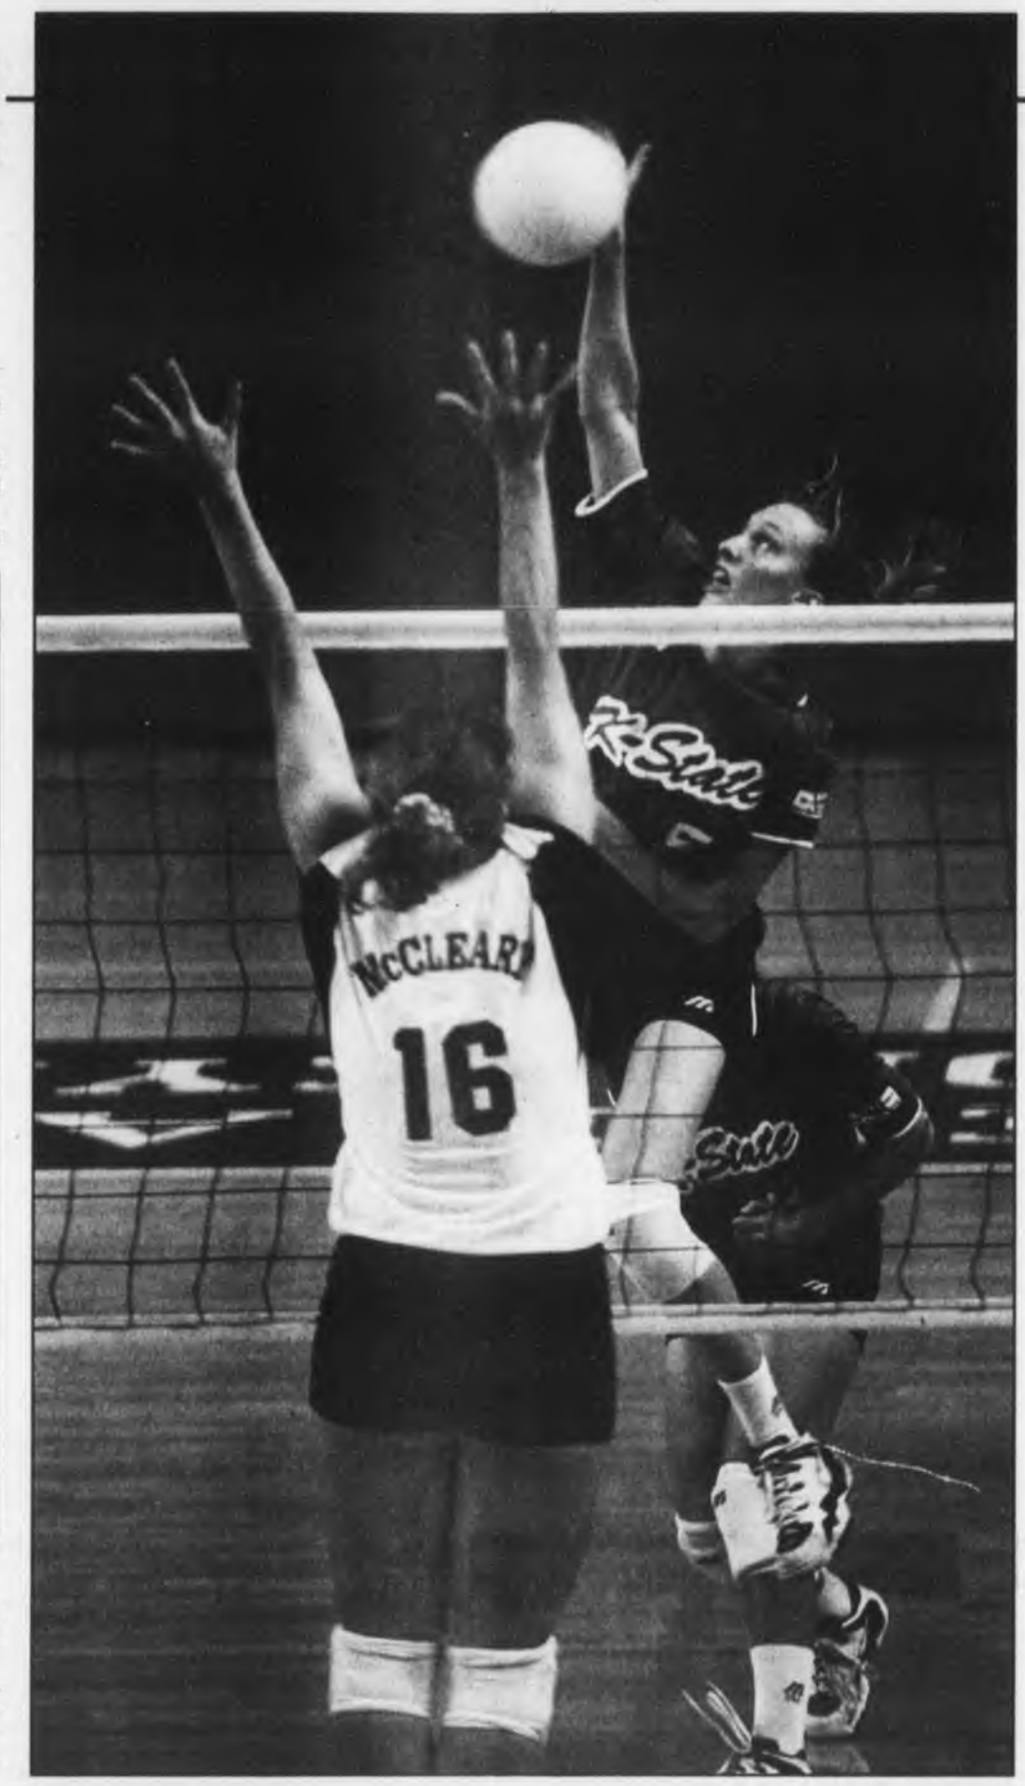
This is how the volleyball team fared in last year's games against Colorado and Nebraska.

Nov. 18, Coors Event Center Boulder, Colo.

Colorado	(3)	15	15	15
K-State	(0)	12	8	6



For K-State to make the NCAA Tournament, it had to win this match. Colorado fought off a strong offensive Wildcat effort in the first game and then single-handedly swept the next two. K-State fell to 19-10; 5-7 and had to settle for a NIVC postseason appearance.

Nov. 1, Nebraska Coliseum Lincoln, Neb.

Nebraska	(3)	15	15	15
K-State	(0)	4	9	5

K-State entered the home arena of the No.1 Cornhuskers and turned in one of its worst performances of the year. NUs defense held K-State to a pitiful -0.009 hitting percentage, its worst of the season. Kate DeClerk led the Cats with only six kills, as K-State fell to 16-8; 3-6.

SPEED

▶ The KSU Invitational will be at Warner Park Saturday. The women's race will begin at 10:30 a.m. and the men's race will start at 11:15 a.m.

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

It might not be a big meet now, but K-State cross country coach Terry Drake said he believes the KSU Invitational will become one.

"When we were putting this together, we contacted a lot of schools like Texas Tech," Drake said.

"They took an interest but because of scheduling conflicts couldn't participate."

In the meantime, Drake said he would use this meet as a stepping-stool to October, when meets kick into gear.

"I've kept it pretty low-key," he said. "We're in a heavy training cycle right now, but we'll start tapering it off as we get into October."

Competing Saturday at the KSU Invitational will be K-State and UMKC representing the Division I contingent and six community college teams. Nebraska's men's team will send some of its runners, also.

> What I'm hoping for is to give our three, four, five and six guys and girls some more confidence.
> • TERRY DRAKE
> K-STATE CROSS COUNTRY COACH

"They'll be sending in their eight, nine and 10 runners to get some experience," Drake said.

Since the team's last meet two weeks ago in Lawrence, Drake said, the Wildcats have been working hard every other day preparing for the tough schedule October brings.

He said he is also treating the KSU Invitational in a low-key manner because he doesn't want to risk injury to any of his runners.

On the men's side, Chris May is still recovering from a bout of food poisoning and will not run Saturday.

Zach Davies is also expected not to run, because doctors believe he is suffering from a stress fracture.

On the women's side, Emily Diederich, Lisa Kaul and Cristy Schwartz will not be running. Drake said they needed to take a meet off.

"What I'm hoping for is to give our three, four, five and six guys and girls some more confidence," he said.

'Hawks top list of pretending top-25 teams

So far this year football teams at the college and the professional level have been labeled pretenders and contenders.

After viewing the first four weeks of the season, I have come up with my own list.

THE PRETENDERS

• Kansas Jayhawks. The Jayhawks are pretending to be a top-25 team. But they are not fooling me. I know better. Yes, their rushing attack has looked impressive even against Ball State and TCU. But that will take them only so far.

I just can't see Matt Johner leading this team to a very successful season. I wouldn't be surprised to see it stumble at Utah Saturday.

Shane
MCCORMICK

After that, expect losses to Colorado, Nebraska, K-State and Texas. Don't be surprised if the Jayhawks finish 6-5 this season.

• Carolina Panthers. Now don't get me wrong, I would love to see the Panthers win this division, but it won't happen. Yes, the Panthers are 3-0, but look who they have played.

The first two weeks, they beat a couple of winless teams in Atlanta and New Orleans.

After a bye week, they did beat San Francisco. But it was not the same 49ers team of the past.

The Panthers have the defense for a championship team but not the offense. However, because of a weak schedule, the Panthers will probably finish with five or six losses and continue to fool everyone else.

• Arizona State Sun Devils. Yes, they beat Nebraska, 19-0. But come on, they are not a No. 6 team. This team does not deserve any national championship talk.

THE CONTENDERS

• Green Bay Packers. The Packers are the best team in the NFL right now, period. If this team gets home-field advantage in the playoffs, nobody will come close to defeating it. Their fans, along with Kansas City's, are possibly the loudest in the NFL. As long as Brett Favre can stand the pain, this team is a lock for the Super Bowl.

• Florida Gators. This team vaulted itself into the national championship game with a huge win at Tennessee. Let's hand it to the Gators. They went out and did what was necessary to get into the championship game.

They hired one of the best defensive minds in the country, former K-State coach Bobby Stoops. With a talented offense to go along with a solid defense, this team will beat Florida State. Don't look for the Gators to give up that No. 1 spot for a while.

• Kansas City Chiefs. Even though they don't have the best offense in the world, their defense is good enough to lead them to the Super Bowl.

Also, as usual, there is no dominant team in the AFC. Anyone could emerge as the conference champion. But I think the Chiefs have the best shot. They actually have a kicker this year who could help them in the playoffs.

ON THE BUBBLE

• Dallas Cowboys. The Cowboys are in real danger of losing to the Eagles Monday night and starting the season 1-4. While the defense has been adequate, the offense has been nonexistent. Only time will tell if the addition of Michael Irvin will save this team's season.

• Minnesota Vikings. Probably the biggest shock of the NFL season. Nobody expected this team to be undefeated so far. If Warren Moon goes down for any long period, I wouldn't want to rely on Brad Johnson to lead my team to the Super Bowl. Key games against Kansas City, Oakland, Denver, Detroit and Green Bay will decide this team's destiny.

• Notre Dame Fighting Irish. After a big win at Texas, a lot of people have put the Irish in the national- championship race.

I'm not too sure if they are there yet. I think Ron Powlus is the most overrated quarterback in the nation right now. Notre Dame could prove it deserves to be a contender if it defeats Ohio State Saturday. The Irish could finish the season 11-0 or 10-1 and go to a high-dollar bowl.

On the other hand, they could finish the season 7-4 and go to a high-dollar bowl.

Lacrosse to begin season Saturday

DANA LEHNER

The K-State lacrosse team opens its season Saturday and Sunday in the Third Annual Donnie Tillar Lacrosse Classic.

The tournament will feature K-State, Kansas, Wichita State, the Kansas City Lacrosse Club and the Big Scary Lions from the Denver area.

"Obviously, we want to win," K-State coach Curt Thurman said. "If we can execute like I know we can, then we can win.

"We lost quite a few starters from last year, which will hurt. Hopefully we will have some people step up and take the ball."

The five teams will play a round-robin in the tournament, which is a memorial to former K-State coach Donnie Tillar.

Tillar was the lacrosse coach from 1989 to 1991, but died when his helicopter was shot down during the Persian Gulf War.

"He meant a lot to the lacrosse community in general," Thurman said. "There are only a few of us

Holden awarded Vassar Miller Prize in Poetry

SETH GURSS
staff reporter

Picture a poet speaking. His head is tilted back, his eyes are closed as he talks with long pauses between sentences as if composing the words in his head they flow from his lips.

Jonathan Holden, professor of English, is a poet.

Holden was recently awarded the Vassar Miller Prize in Poetry for his book of poems "The Sublime."

His manuscript was selected from more than 600 entries by Pulitzer-Prize-winning poet Yusef Komunyakaa.

Holden received $500 for the award.

Despite teaching English and literature classes, he teaches mostly poetry.

In addition, he writes and publishes poems frequently.

Holden has published 14 books of poems and essays.

"From studying English, I decided it was far preferable to make poems and have people study me than to study other people's poems," Holden said.

"It's like the difference between an athlete and a sportscaster. Poets are athletes of the mind."

Holden said he became interested in writing and poetry at a young age.

"I had always written, even when I was a child. I had always lived in my imagination a great deal," Holden said.

Holden's imagination is one of the reasons he has won nine awards for his excellence in poetry.

The 1972 Devins Award, the 1985 Juniper Prize and two National Endowment for the Arts Creative Writing Fellowships are just a few of the awards he has won over the years.

Holden is highly respected by his colleagues on campus for his writing ability.

He has been awarded the University Distinguished Professor and Poet-in-Residence at K-State since June 1988.

"Jonathan Holden is one of the most prolific writers on campus," said Lawrence Rodgers, associate professor and head of the Department of English.

> "It's like the difference between an athlete and a sportscaster. Poets are athletes of the mind."
> • JONATHAN HOLDEN, PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH

Holden said he is constantly in the process of writing a poem.

He said he writes poems in his head before he ever puts them on paper.

"I'm always working on poems in my head," Holden said.

"When I choose to transcribe them depends on when I have the time."

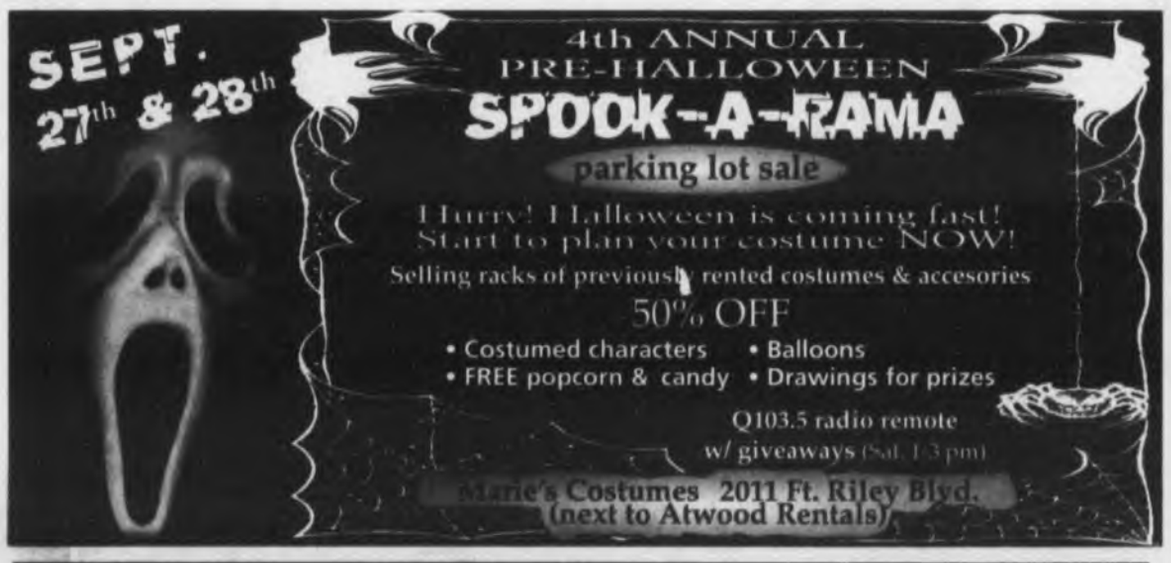
In addition to writing and teaching, Holden also organizes poetry readings on campus.

He is instrumental in getting some popular and nationally recognized poets to campus for srudents and faculty.

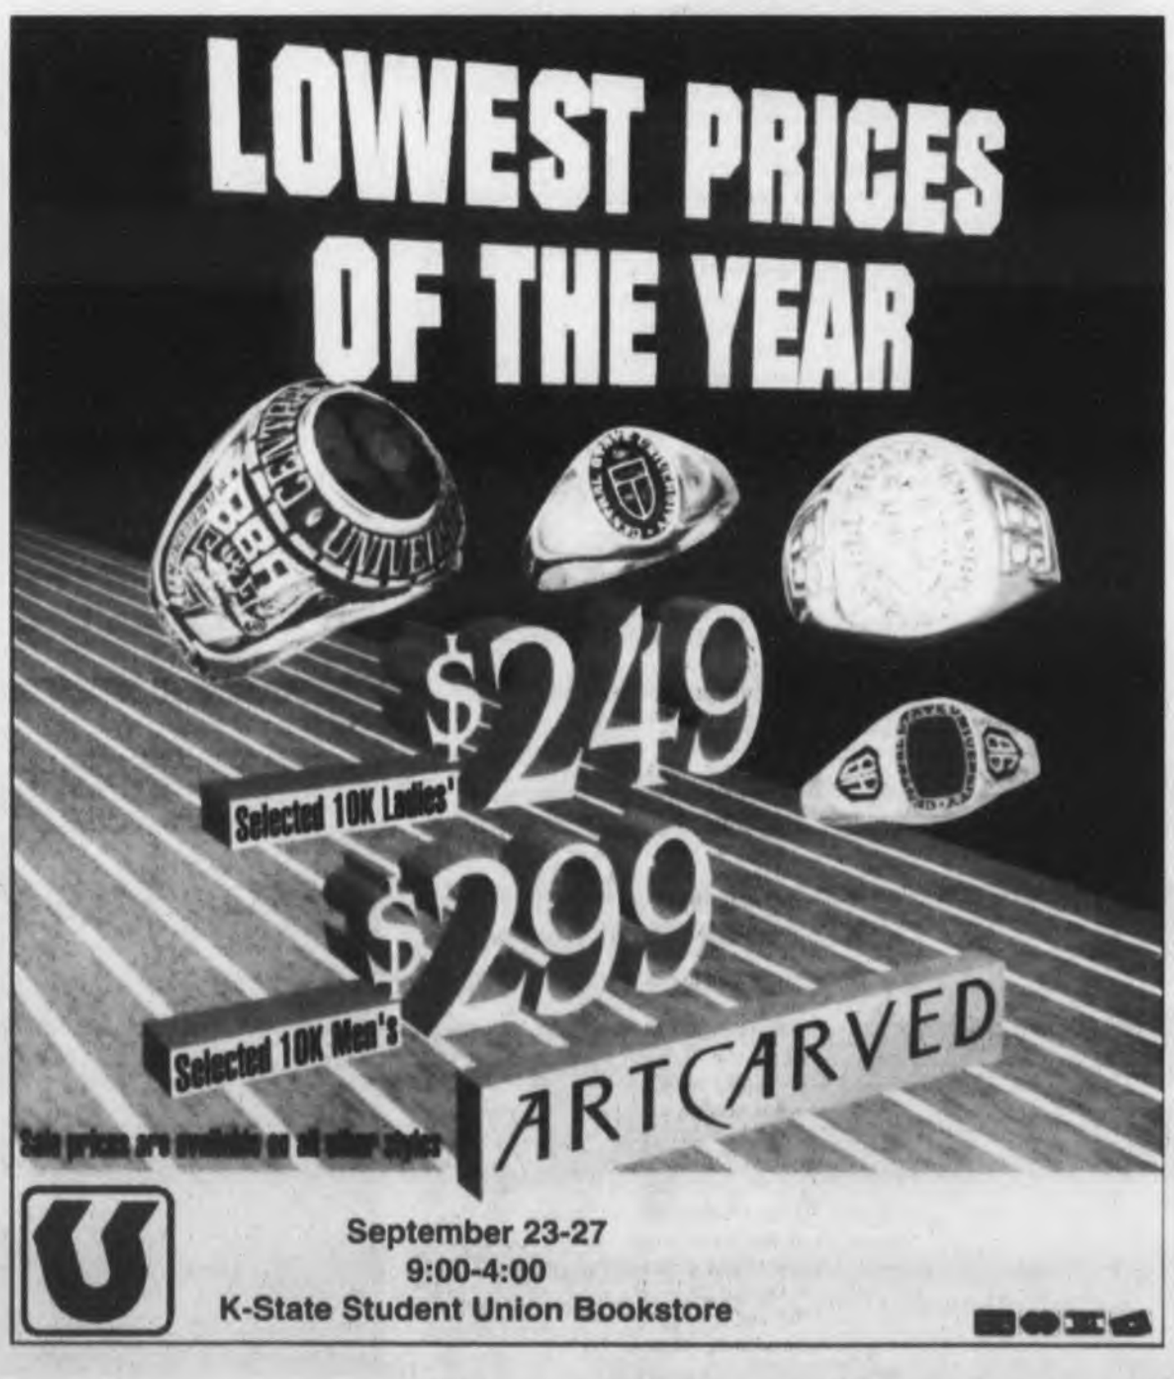
Holden, who has been at K-State for 18 years, is originally from New Jersey. After high school, he went to Oberlin College where he received a bachelor of arts degree in English in 1963.

After working for a publishing company in Bronxville, N.Y., Holden went to San Francisco State College. That is where Holden received his master's degree in English in 1970. Four years later, he received his doctorate in English at the University of Colorado.

His first teaching job was at Stephens College in Columbia, Mo.



He became the head of the English department in only four years at Stephens.



In his 22 years of teaching, Stephens is the only school where Holden has taught other than K-State.

JONATHAN HOLDEN, professor of English, was awarded the Vassar Miller Prize for his book of poems, "The Sublime."

Slaying suspect mistakenly released from prison early

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — A man suspected of killing a rural Goddard couple had been mistakenly set free from prison 17 days before the slayings took place, a Sedgwick County judge said.

State District Judge Dan Brooks said when he sentenced Gavin Scott in March to 12 months behind bars — 10 months in a state prison and 60 days in the county jail — he expected the sentence to keep Scott in custody through late October.

Scott had pleaded guilty to a felony auto theft charge and agreed to conditions of probation, but had violated them, Brooks said. At that point, he concluded, Scott was clearly wild.

"He was the kind of person who needs the shock of prison, then needs to be put in jail to see if he can work his way back into society," the judge said.

"I thought I would next see him in an orange jumpsuit toward the end of his 60 days," Brooks said. "I planned to have him either in jail or under close supervision."

Instead, Scott was released from the Topeka Correctional Facility when the 10-month prison sentence expired Aug. 27, Brooks said. Scott was freed 17 days before Doug and Beth Brittain were shot to death in their home.

"The Department of Corrections simply released him," Brooks said Wednesday. "Instead of coming back to do the 60 days, he just walked. It's a perfect example of the system not communicating. It's the kind of thing that's inherent in an overcrowded system."

Department of Corrections spokesman Bill Miskell said the department wasn't notified about the additional 60 days.

"We had an order holding him for 10 months," Miskell said. DOC officials did not know they were supposed to release Scott to Sedgwick County to serve the additional two months.

In general, Miskell said, prison officials routinely place holds on soon-to-be-released inmates who have unserved sentences from other jurisdictions.

The Brittains, who were refurbishing a farmhouse, were both shot in the head by robbers who left the home with firearms and electronic equipment. The robbers took rifles, shotguns and pistols from Brittain, a licensed gun dealer.

Teachers affect book value

ANDREW FRANCIS
staff reporter

At the beginning of every semester, students compare how much they paid for textbooks. At the end of every semester, students complain the bookstore would only buy two or three used books.

Students are quick to blame the bookstores for not buying books back. But bookstores do not decide which books they will buy back; professors do.

Professors decide which textbooks they will require for their classes. If a professor decides to use a new book every year, then the used book for that class does not carry high value when it comes time to sell the book back to the bookstores.

Jon Levin, owner and general manager of Varney's Book Store, said textbook prices have gone up, but the cost is relative to the increase in the cost of college.

Valarie Christopher, junior in elementary education, does not think textbooks are too expensive.

Christopher said many of her professors do not incorporate required text material into the class, which makes her question buying all the required books.

"The professors don't always use the books," Christopher said. "Some professors just use the book for two or three chapters."

Kay Farley, K-State Union Bookstore manager, said being able to buy used books from students depends on whether professors will use the book again. New editions and overstocking of textbooks also affect the buy-back process.

"We make more money on a used book than we do on a new book. We don't have to pay freight on the books," Farley said. "Last year we had a good year with used books.

"We try to buy as many used books as we can from the students because we can give students some return on a product they have used for the semester."

City Park to host Little Apple Festival

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

The Little Apple Festival will take place this weekend, rain or shine.

City Park will be the site of the 21st annual festival.

Every year, the weekend of festivities draws about 18,000 people from all over Kansas. Most people come from within a 60-mile radius.

Originally the festival was set for June, but due to problems with rain, it was moved to September.

Jim Colley, recreation superintendent, said there are now tents in case of rain.

However, he said he was still optimistic about this weekend's weather.

"The big draw to this festival is the craft booths," he said. "People are now starting to look for Christmas gifts. This is the perfect place."

Colley said the change to September was good.

He said it is easier to decorate with a fall theme.

Pumpkins, hay bales, corn and gourds are some of the items that will be placed throughout the area.

The park will be filled with 160 craft booths, 24 folk life and medieval demonstrations, 20 food vendors and 15 different performances.

The event begins Saturday at 9 a.m. and runs until 6 p.m.

On Sunday it is from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

Christopher, who came back to college to earn a second degree, said the cost of books does not seem to be much higher than it was 10 years ago.

"I think the money for book buyback is reasonable. Bookstores do have to pay for staff and stocking the books," Christopher said. "Something is better than nothing."

The Union Bookstore provides a used book buy-and-sell board on the first-floor concourse of the Union. It helps students sell books to other students.

"The more information the students have, the better informed they can be as consumers," Farley said.

There is also a site on the World Wide Web where students can trade and sell used books. The site is called Student Market, and it can be found at (http://www.studentmkt.com).

Circuit Court. Phillips was served with the lawsuit while he was in Kansas City when the Rams played the Chiefs in an Aug. 17 exhibition game.

The lawsuit was moved to federal court Sept. 13, and Phillips' lawyers asked Bartlett to keep the case sealed.

McEwen asked for unspecified damages for sexual assault, battery, kidnapping, assault, false imprisonment, emotional distress and the violation of her rights.

She said the attacks took place while both were students at Nebraska, where Phillips was a star running back.

Terms of the settlement were not disclosed.

"It has been settled in a way that is acceptable to Kate," her lawyer, Victor Bergman, said. "A lot of that depends on Lawrence Phillips getting his life under control and continuing on with his career."

Phillips pleaded guilty to charges of misdemeanor trespass and assault for a September attack on McEwen.

left from the original team now. What I learned about coaching, I learned from him."

The first match of the tournament will start at 9 a.m. Saturday at the Tuttle Creek River Pond Area. Kansas City and Kansas are slated to kick off the classic in the first match.

K-State will start action against Wichita State at 10:30 a.m.

"It's going to be a really evenly matched tournament," Thurman said.

"It should be a real good weekend. There won't be any blowouts. This being the first tournament of the year, it should be a lot of fun."

The Union Program Council will present "Maya Lin: A Strong Clear Vision," a detailed documentary of the woman who designed the Vietnam Veterans Memorial and the Civil Rights Memorial.

Tuesday's presentations include "The Pull: Lesbian/Gay/Bisexual People of Color: Identity Community Within A Multicultural Perspective," an interactive workshop by Richard Rodriguez, counseling psychologist.

He will focus on strategies to understand the issues of homophobia and sexism.

Jane Elliott will also provide students with the opportunity to participate in the "Blue Eyes, Brown Eyes" discrimination experiment.

The keynote speaker for Thursday's activities is Sharon Pratt-Kelley, former mayor of Washington, D.C. She will present "Race: The Defining Issue in America."

Also on the agenda for Thursday is the Mexican fiesta buffet luncheon.

Bennett said the organization chose to celebrate the Mexican culture as a prelude to Hispanic Heritage Month in October.

The meal is $9.50, and reservations are accepted at the Office of Multicultural Student Organizations.

Another event is the Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week Banner Contest, sponsored by the UPC Multicultural Committee.

The Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week Walk concludes the week.

The 45-minute walk is probably the most popular event of the week and is an excellent way to bring the community together, Bennett said.

"The response to the week has been very positive. People are very willing to become involved and participate in the planned events," Bennett said.

Willie Torres, president of the Hispanic American Leadership Organization, said he is impressed with people's interest in Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

"Many people want to find out what's going on and become more involved.

"I think it's a great opportunity for students to learn more about other cultures," Torres said.

Open House to feature Powercat Crunch cereal

BETH HUSTED
staff reporter

It's time for K-State and the Powercat to join the ranks of Toucan Sam, Tony the Tiger, Cap'n Crunch, Sugar Bear and Count Chocula.

It might be hard for students to picture the Powercat as a cereal mascot, especially when most students don't even know K-State has its own cereal.

But it does.

John Brent, assistant professor of grain science, has been working on and producing K-State's cereal, Powercat Crunch.

Powercat Crunch was one of the attractions at the All-University Open House last spring.

"Our goal for the next Open House is to try to enhance its flavor and shape," Brent said. "Right now it looks more like a K."

Powercat Crunch is produced at Shellenberger Hall in the extrusion center.

When he originally worked on it, he tried to enhance the color and shape, Brent said.

The cereal is now a bold K-State purple. And when Brent tested it in milk, it didn't turn the milk purple.

"It's pretty stable in milk," Brent said.

Brent is also working on the cereal's sweetness.

A cereal's sweetness doesn't just determine the flavor, it also affects how crunchy it is, Brent said.

One might wonder if Powercat Crunch can stay crunchy in milk. It does.

"It has a good bowl life," Brent said.

On Oct. 25, some grain science students will have the opportunity to see the cereal being made for a class they are taking.

The next time the cereal will be available to the public will probably be at the spring Open House, Brent said.

$$$ MONEY $$$

The Educational Opportunity Fund (EOF) was approved on May 19,1988 by the Kansas board of Regents. This fund will generate about $210,000 for allocation next fall. Approximately 1% of student tuition monies are returned to the University for:

1) Academic scholarships and fellowships for both graduate and undergraduate students through the department and college level.
2) Need-based grants, including assistance in the areas of special expenses or for groups of students who have been historically under-represented in higher education.
3) Salaries or grants for students participating in public and community service programs.
4) Salaries for students employed in campus student services.

Applications are due in the Office of Student Activities and Services located on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union by 4 p.m. Sept. 27,1996. Applications received after this time will not be considered, regardless of delays caused by campus mail or the U.S. Postal Service.

Please direct any questions concerning the EOF or the application process to the EOF committee Chairperson Aaron Otto at 532-6541.

Task force studies safety

SPEEDREAD

- A task force organized by Attorney General Carla Stovall discusses potential dangers associated with allowing recent parollees to enroll in Regents schools.

SETH GURSS
staff reporter

Representatives of the Kansas Board of Regents institutions proposed Friday that prison parolees be prohibited from attending colleges and universities for up to a year after their release.

The representatives were part of a task force organized by Kansas Attorney General Carla Stovall to examine campus-safety issues.

They contended that former prisoners, particularly sexual predators and others with a history of violence, were a potential threat to students.

In a memo delivered Friday at K-State, during a public meeting of the task force led by Stovall, the regents representatives suggested all parolees from certain crime categories, including rape and murder, be excluded from admission for six months to a year.

"While we firmly believe that education is an important part of rehabilitation, it may be reasonable to expect that certain parolees prove themselves before being allowed to enroll in college," the memo said.

Stovall said the purpose of the discussion is to protect the public and college campuses from the potential dangers of paroled convicts.

"It is simply to inform the general public about the individuals on parole," Stovall said.

Another proposal presented to the task force is an expanded campus police force that can also patrol off campus.

In this proposal, applying only to the regents schools, the campus police would work in conjunction with the local police department. They would have joint jurisdiction on areas close to campus.

The task force contended the expanded patrol, even though it would take good coordination, would not only help the local authorities, but also provide safer conditions for students who live

Pledge Games raise money for American Red Cross, inspire team competition

STORY BY ASHLEY WEEKLY

Buying doughnuts and being full of spirit were both requirements for being a coach at the ninth annual Pledge Games.

The Sunday Pledge Games were a Sigma Nu and Chi Omega philanthropy benefiting the American Red Cross.

"Sigma Nu and Chi Omega coaches are totally responsible for getting times and event signups to the teams participating in Pledge Games," said Brady Sawyer, Chi O coach for Delta Chi.

Four coaches were assigned to each team. They helped their teams by announcing times, explaining the events and helping with the T-shirt signup.

Wes Ashton, Sigma Nu coach for Sigma Kappa, said he thought Pledge Games was beneficial for several reasons.

"I think Pledge Games is the best way to raise money for a charity and to get all the new members involved in the greek system," Ashton said.

Rebecca Fugit, Chi O philanthropy chairwoman, said the event depends on the coaches.

"Coaches are really important. We can't do the entire thing ourselves. It depends on them," Fugit said.

Brad Ficke, Sigma Nu philanthropy chairman, said the day was going smoothly for coordinating more than 1,000 participants. He said he had been working on the event since last spring.

Reggie Hanna, Sigma Nu coach for Kappa Kappa Gamma, said he had fun getting the entire greek community together for an event. He said he had the most fun getting all the women motivated for the day.

Sara Reser, a new member of Kappa, said the atmosphere at Pledge Games was a great opportunity for representing each greek house.

The Sigma Sigma Sigma team was excited to be at Pledge Games because it was its first event. Jessica Ransom, freshman in hotel and restaurant management, said the coaches had been understanding when team members didn't know what they were doing. She said her coaches really wanted them to win.

Events at Pledge Games included softball throw, balloon toss, broom toss, three-legged race, tug-of-war and track events, Simon said. All sororities and 22 fraternities participated in the philanthropy.

Pledge Games raises more than $5,000 annually for the Riley County Chapter of the American Red Cross. Rick Bowles, director of local Red Cross programming and services, said the money raised is used for disaster, blood and armed-forces services.

The winners of Pledge Games were Alpha Chi Omega and Pi Kappa Alpha.

Candidates express views on education, spending tax money

MIRANDA KENNEDY
staff reporter

Candidates for Kansas House and Senate agreed on most issues at a forum Sunday, but they had different reasons for their answers.

The candidates elaborated on 10 questions they answered before the forum. The MAINstream Coalition, which sponsored the forum, provided the questions. The candidates also answered questions from the audience.

None of the candidates would vote to spend tax dollars on school vouchers for private and parochial schools.

Lana Oleen, however, does support publicly funded transportation to private and parochial schools that are on the routes of public school buses.

Ruth Schrum opposed school vouchers because she said they lead to low-income children having trouble keeping up academically with their peers.

Robert Littrell said, "Vouchers will lead to a deterioration in public schools. Allowing folks to opt out and funding that opting out will lead to a deterioration in quality."

Kent Glasscock said he thinks vouchers are not good for public or private schools.

"I think people want a differentiation between public and private schools," he said.

Jeff Peterson said children need to learn in strong public schools, and Sheila Hochhauser said vouchers would use tax money to create an elite, white academy.

All the candidates also agreed there should not be a required time for oral or silent prayer in public schools.

Glasscock and Peterson supported a moment of silence during which students could pray if they wanted to.

Student jobs decrease due to fewer funds

KARI BROWN
staff reporter

Student jobs in the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry have been decreased because the department has fewer operating dollars.

The departmental cutbacks resulted from lower market prices for University livestock and products, as well as an increase in feed costs, said Jack Riley, head of animal science and industry.

The new minimum-wage law is also a key factor in decreasing student job opportunities. As of Oct. 1, minimum wage for student workers will increase to $4.75 an hour. Because of the wage hike, some research units have decreased the number of student employees.

The increase in wages has created a funding offset because of lower market prices.

At the Dairy Teaching and Research Center, student labor has been cut by almost half. To deal with the staff reduction, workloads have been redistributed, Richard Scoby, dairy research assistant, said.

Along with the chore redistribution, equipment has helped workers get their jobs done quicker. This will allow them to pick up the slack from the decrease in

NATION WORLD

• MCVEIGH, NICHOLS PETITION FOR SEPARATE TRIALS. Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols return to court this week as enemies blaming each other for the Oklahoma City bombing. McVeigh's attorneys argue Nichols was the primary figure behind the bombing that killed 168 people. Nichols' attorneys say McVeigh's violent extremism appalled Nichols. They hope to convince a judge they should be tried separately.

• GINGRICH TO FACE ETHICS INQUIRY. The House Ethics Committee Saturday agreed to keep alive a complaint that Speaker Newt Gingrich broke federal gift and campaign-finance laws while dismissing — with criticism — allegations of financial irregularities by Democratic leader Dick Gephardt. The decision means the Speaker will face ethics inquiries.

• KUWAITI WOMEN CAMPAIGN FOR RIGHTS. Kuwaiti women won't be voting or running for office in next week's parliamentary elections. But if the campaign they launched Sunday succeeds, they'll be at the polls and on the ballot in the year 2000. About 300 women — including many lawyers, doctors, artists and other well-educated Kuwaitis — and scores of male supporters are trying to change the 1962 election law that gave only men the right to vote and run for office.

• SECURITY COUNCIL RULES ON PALESTINIAN-ISRAELI DISPUTE. With the United States abstaining, the Security Council passed a resolution late Saturday that indirectly calls on Israel to close a tunnel that touched off fighting between Israelis and Palestinians. The vote was 14-0. The opening of the tunnel near Islamic holy sites in Jerusalem led to four days of gunbattles and rioting that have left 72 dead. The resolution calls for the safety and protection of Palestinian civilians to be ensured. The United States had long opposed bringing the Palestinian-Israeli dispute before the Security Council.

• FARRAKHAN CALLS FOR BLACKS TO BECOME POLITICAL FORCE. In a speech laced with criticism of the government and the major-party presidential candidates, Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan called on blacks to become a third political force in American politics. A crowd of between 3,000 and 4,000 listened for more than 2-1/2 hours as Farrakhan gave the keynote address at the National African-American Leadership Summit's three-day convention in St. Louis. The convention is an effort to inject the views of minorities into mainstream politics.

• CLINTON SEEKS TO WIDEN LEAD AMOUNG WOMEN VOTERS. President Clinton, seeking to widen his lead among women voters, promised Saturday to deny government loans and payments to parents who don't pay child support. The president also attacked Bob Dole, blaming him for congressional gridlock. Praising the budget agreement reached early Saturday on Capitol Hill, the president noted that a series of popular bills — including welfare reform, a minimum-wage increase and improvements in health-care insurance — passed Congress in the last three months.

Visitor's Day gives public access to Konza Prairie

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

The Konza Prairie Research Natural Area was open to the public on Saturday for hikes, wagon rides and displays at the biennial Visitor's Day.

"Visitor's Day exists to give the public an opportunity to see the restricted interior part of the Konza Prairie. It also gives a chance for them to interact with researchers in order to get more detailed information about tall grasslands," Rosemary Ramundo, Division of Biology research assistant, said.

Visitor's Day activities included videos, guided hikes and wagon rides, displays on current research and van rides to see the bison herd that inhabits the prairie.

Beth Dickinson, sophomore in elementary education, attended Visitor's Day with her parents. She said they wanted to go on a wagon ride, but there was a two-hour wait.

David Hartnett, director of the Konza Prairie, said the prairie helps people understand how the ecological system works and how to manage it.

The Konza Prairie serves as an outdoor laboratory for research on land that has never been influenced by humans. The land has never been used for farming because its steep slopes and rocky terrain would make it unsuitable for plowing.

"The Konza is used as a benchmark of reference mark in understanding how the ecological process works compared to other areas that have been altered by human activity," Hartnett said.

Hartnett said most of the research is geared toward understanding how grasslands and the ecosystem work under productivity, stability and biological diversity. He said the more researchers understand how the system works, the more they can preserve the land.

The Konza Prairie is owned by the Nature Conservancy, a nonprofit organization that works to preserve native land throughout the world.

The prairie is managed by K-State's Division of Biology for ecological research.

K-State allows researchers to use the prairie with permission. More than 120 national and international scientists use the land for research. They study everything from geology to seeing the progress of the land through satellite imagery.

Ecological systems are tested by placing certain natural changes in the prairie. Bison and fire have been introduced to the prairie to see the historical changes that occur on human-influenced land.

The 8,600-acre prairie is south of Manhattan in the Flint Hills. It has more than 500 species of wildflowers, shrubs and trees. More than 300 vertebrates, including the bison, inhabit the prairie.

Hartnett said more than 2,000 people attended Visitor's Day.

People can get involved with Konza Prairie by becoming volunteers for the Friends of Konza Prairie. The group volunteers to teach environmental education to the community and public schools and helps with Visitor's Day.

▶ KANSAS BOARD OF REGENTS

Chairwoman visits K-State

NICOLE KIRBY
city/government editor

Kansas Board of Regents Chairwoman Phyllis Nolan met with President Jon Wefald and reporters Friday after touring campus.

She also met with students, faculty, staff and administrators in an effort to understand K-State's problems and successes.

When she visited with the faculty, Nolan said she discussed salaries and trying to improve them.

"It's problematic. It's hard to get more money for faculty salaries, but we think it's a real priority," Nolan said.

In her talk with the classified employees, Nolan said there was a possibility they might get a tuition waiver for classes at K-State.

"The basic premise behind it is that it is an investment in our employees," Stephen Jordan, executive director of the regents, said.

She said the deans were on track and didn't ask for assistance.

Nolan also discussed the regents' programs and problems in her press conference.

She discussed the regents' Crumbling Classrooms Plan, which funds renovations and technology improvements.

"These are a huge predicament that we have, and they really won't ever be solved," she said of the continual disintegration of campus facilities.

The enrollment in regents schools is down this year, which Nolan attributed to a drop in the number of high-school graduates.

Jordan said that the drop might be an effect of the improvement in the economy.

"People are not enrolling in community colleges, either, so that means there are jobs out there for them," Jordan said.

Nolan also addressed K-State's issues. She said that although the Regents thought the new linear fee-payment program would be rocky, it would probably work.

Wefald brought in Tom Schellhardt, associate vice president for administration and finance. Schellhardt addressed concerns that the linear fee program would hurt students who are getting class credit for their activities.

Schellhardt is the leader of a task force designed to tackle problems with the new system, and he said that if students want credit for a class, they could pay for it.

Little Apple Festival attracts artists, vendors to Manhattan

AMY LAGRONE
staff reporter

People from all over the state of Kansas came to Manhattan this weekend to enjoy the Little Apple Festival.

The festival was on Saturday and Sunday at City Park.

Jewelers, painters, musical performers, wood carvers and Rennaisance-era recreators were just some of the people a visitor could enjoy.

There were also several food vendors set up in the park. Customers enjoyed funnel cakes, Greek food, roasted corn-on-the cob and smoked turkey legs.

Artists came from all over to share their talents and possibly make a small profit. Some came from as far as Colorado, while others were from Manhattan.

Marilyn Frisbee, an oil painter from McDonald, said she has been coming to this event for four years. She said that all artists pay a $100 fee for having a booth.

"We keep all of our profit," Frisbee said.

Children also enjoyed the festival. There were games, things to play on, face painters and animals for the young crowd to enjoy.

"I like the bunnies best," 6-year-old Adam Cornwell of Manhattan said.

Jim Colley, recreation superintendent, said he was more than pleased with the way the weekend had turned out. He said he was surprised at the large numbers of people at the festival.

"People were just ready to get out of the house after all the rain last week," he said.

Colley said the festival is a self-supporting event. It is paid for by the booth fees and a 12-percent share of all food profits.

He said the festival usually breaks even with tent rentals, decoration costs and other fees. Any overflow would go to the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department.

The local chapter of the Society for Creative Anachronism runs this area of the park.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Students need to help Regents, Attorney General improve K-State campus safety

The Kansas Board of Regents and Attorney General Carla Stovall should be commended on their organization of a task force to reduce campus crime.

We think this is a topic that has and will continually need to be monitored, but we question how much good the Regents and Stovall can do from Topeka.

It will be difficult for them to meet the individual and different needs of every campus in the state.

WHY WE CARE

A task force to help fight campus safety has been formed. This is an opportunity for K-State to have its individual needs heard.

Some of the topics Stovall and the Regents are hoping to address with their task force are the prevention of ex-convicts attending college for a year, cracking down on fake IDs and expanding the campus police so it can patrol off campus.

These are valid issues, but we think there are more immediate issues we need to deal with at K-State. Such issues include building security, campus lighting and security in some of the outer parking lots.

Although we think that it is promising that the politicians understand that this is a problem, this is an issue that has to have the contribution of the students and administrators of each individual campus.

K-State has made a strong effort to curve campus crime statistics with the City/University Fund contribution to bike paths. Student Senate has done its part by suggesting that the Manhattan City Commission buy new lights and more security cameras.

But you, the student who is affected by campus crime, need to make an effort to do your part, too.

Contact your representatives at the University, city and state levels, and tell them what you think could be done to improve the safety on campus.

We need to let our politicians know that K-State students' needs are individual and that we care about what happens on our campus.

When I grow up, I want to be David Letterman

Columnist discovers there is no major for her career choice

No one should ever have to choose a major.

You should be allowed to take whatever classes you find interesting and useful. You should not be given grades. You should just be given a kind of pass or fail judgment based on whether the professor feels you have gotten anything out of the class.

After a few years, when you have decided what you like to do most and feel like you can do it, you should get a degree.

This strange desire for an overhaul of the system comes from personal experience and frustration.

I plan to change majors — again.

I came to K-State a pre-medicine major. I changed to print journalism and now plan to feel out the speech and theater department for a while.

I realize I am not alone in my continuing saga of changing my mind. I have heard of people who have changed their majors more than 10 times. I don't know if they ever actually graduate, though.

See, my problem is that there doesn't seem to be a major offered in what I want to be when I grow up.

In some majors, it is really obvious what you are going to do and be when you grow up.

People who are majoring in education generally want to be teachers when they grow up. Accounting majors want to be accountants. Pre-law majors want to be the slimy scum of the earth when they grow up.

For me, it is not so easy.

I have narrowed my interests down to a few things I think I would want to do until I die or until I get fired or find something more interesting to do. But none of the things I want to do are offered as a major here at our distinguished University.

I would like to be David Letterman. I don't think that is going to happen, so I would settle for making a few million dollars a year to hang out with a good band and famous people, wear great suits and make a national audience laugh every night.

I would like to be Madonna. I don't think that is going to happen either, so I would settle for making a few million dollars a year to hang out with sexy men and women, have perky boobs, be adored around the world and piss off the pope now and then.

Of course, I do have more realistic goals.

Maybe I could be president of the United States.

Yeah, right. I probably have a better chance of being Madonna or David Letterman. I won't ever have enough money to pay off everyone who knows juicy stuff about me. I am also a woman, and although I have great faith in the feminist movement, I don't plan on seeing a female president in my lifetime.

So where does that leave me?

All kidding aside, I would like to do just what I am doing now. I would like to get paid to write.

I would like to get paid to be funny.

Unfortunately, there aren't many advertisements in the Sunday paper that read:

Hey funny people. Our company is looking for people with a sense of humor, very little work ethic and no sense of style. We offer a great benefit package and incredible pay. Apply now.

If there were employers, ads and/or jobs like that out there in the real world, the University would offer a curriculum to fit the need. There would be a College of Humorous Arts.

In the College of Humorous Arts, there would be no math requirement.

No one I have ever met who is truly funny has any ability to do math.

There would be a requirement to attend Student Senate and city commission meetings to learn what is not funny. The only laboratory requirement would be to watch "Nick at Nite" every night to learn the meaning of classic comedy.

Until the system changes, I will be in search of a major. Like I have said in the past, I am in college until my financial aid runs out or I get a better job offer.

To all the other souls lost in the pursuit of a major, I offer a few words of advice:

Forget what degree will get you a job.

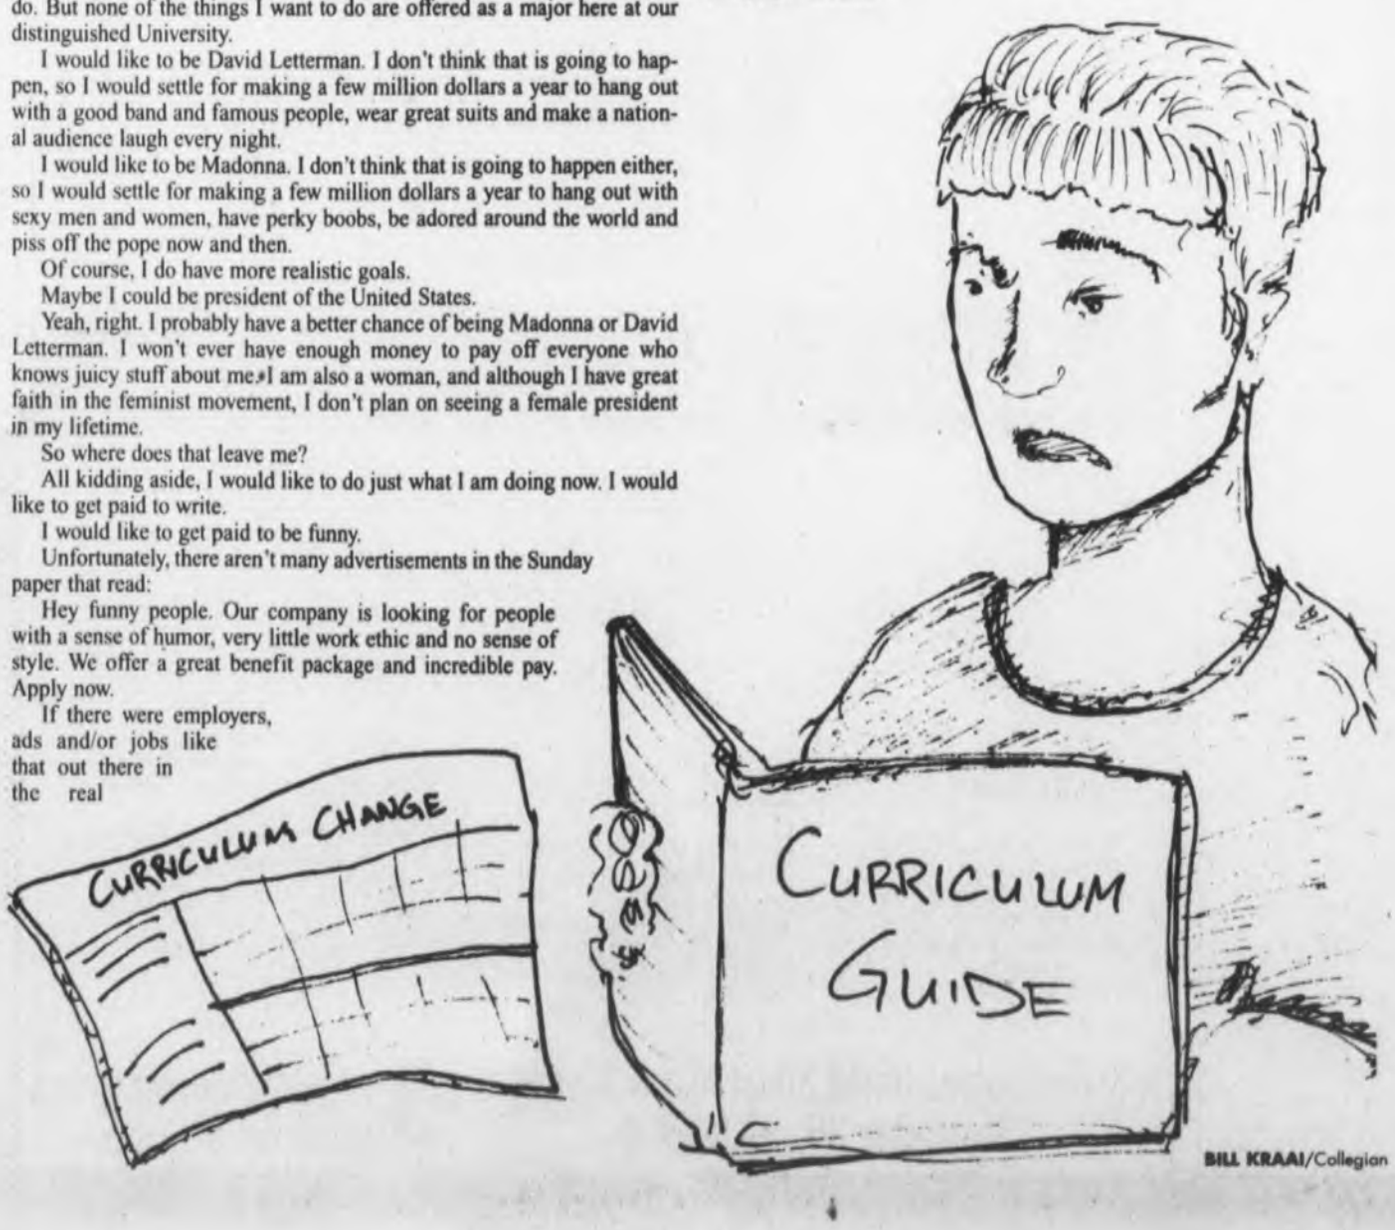

Figure out what you like, and take what classes you need to take to eventually get out of here alive.

United States' diversity no longer a melting pot, but a huge salad bowl

Schedule of events for Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week

MONDAY
Panel discussion: "Celebrating Your European Heritage."

TUESDAY
Fred C. Koch: "The Volga Germans in Kansas."

The author of the Volga Germans in Russia and the Americas, from 1763 to the present, speaks about the struggles of these migrant people who settled Kansas in the late 1800s.

WEDNESDAY
Multimedia exhibit: "Help Wanted — Irish need not apply"

As hard as it for us to believe today, prejudice against Irish immigrants was common in the United States around the turn of the century. Join us for this look back at a prejudice that we as a culture have learned to overcome. Sponsored by the Irish American Students Association.

THURSDAY
Film: "Swedes in America."

This 1943 documentary was nominated for an Academy Award for best original screenplay. Panel discussion afterwards.

FRIDAY
Panel discussion: "Oppressing the Oppressor: the Burden of Being White in a Multicultural World."

OK, I admit it. I made this schedule up out of whole cloth. But wouldn't it be great if events like these were included in the Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week schedule?

And why aren't they?

It occurs to me as I look over the real schedule events for Harmony Week that it is incredibly slanted toward those whose skin color is brown or black, yellow or red. But nothing about those of us who are light-skinned.

Nothing for European Americans.

This puzzles me, for if Racial and Ethnic Harmony Week is truly about celebrating our diverse cultures and ethnicities, why is such a large ethnic group — European-Americans — so conspicuously absent?

Where is the celebration of being English? Dutch? Italian?

Why are there no workshops celebrating the contributions of the Poles? The influence of the French?

If we are committed to celebrating our diversity, then why aren't we?

And if everyone else is celebrating their heritage, then I want to celebrate mine, too!

What's happening here is that the rules have changed.

Where before we weren't supposed to emphasize our differences, it's now OK to celebrate them.

I think a cultural shift is taking place — from the ideal of the United States being a melting pot, where all people are assimilated and give up their cultural identities in favor of becoming Americans, to the salad bowl ideal, where the United States is made up of a combination of many cultures, living and working together for a common good, each distinct and separate in itself, but flavoring the whole mix.

An ideal of unity in diversity.

Traditionally marginalized groups in the United States such as American Indians, Africans, Hispanics and Asians are leading the way in this cultural shift from melting pot to salad bowl.

This balkanization is both confusing and puzzling to those descendants of immigrants who fully assimilated into the American culture. After all, up until now, uniformity was the rule of the day.

MY

Kevyn JACOBS

If you came to this culture, you were supposed to discard your ethnic heritage in favor of becoming an American.

This pressure to assimilate has been very successful on Europeans. Most descendants of European immigrants have totally lost sight of their ethnic heritage.

Ask white students on this campus about their ethnic background, and you'll probably get a vague answer about being German or Welsh or Irish or Scandinavian or English.

But you'll quickly see that most have little or no connection or even identification with their ethnicity.

Their families have so thoroughly Americanized that almost all connection to what they were has been lost.

Take my family, for instance.

Ethnic Germans, we came to Kansas from Russia in the 1870s. In the few generations since, we've just about lost all connection with our past.

By the time I came along, the melting pot process was so complete I had no identity except that of being American. It was only as I reached my 20s and began to explore my roots that I began to identify with my German past and began referring to myself as a European-American.

> "The United States is no longer a place where you are expected to cast off your cultural roots in favor of being American. As divisive as it might seem to some, we're now a place where our strength comes from diversity, not uniformity."

But there's a significant reason why Europeans were able to assimilate.

Our skin, eye and hair colors were similar enough to the English-based dominant culture for us to blend in unobtrusively.

We Americanized because we could. English culture was able to take us in.

But the biggest weakness in the English melting-pot model is that it is very poor at assimilating those who look different. Racism makes it almost impossible for people of color.

So the melting-pot model is being abandoned in favor of the salad bowl one. The United States is no longer a place where you are expected to cast off your cultural roots in favor of being American.

As divisive as it might seem to some, we're now a place where our strength comes from diversity, not uniformity.

That's why, this Racial/Ethnic Harmony week, you'll find me taking pride in my own ethnic heritage.

Not only am I an American. I am a European-American.

THE FULL MOON, A FESTIVAL AND TRADITIONS

KATHY BUI, sophomore in business, and Phuong Vu, senior in manufacturing systems engineering, light lanterns for children during the Full Moon Festival. The festival is similar to Halloween. The children carry the lanterns through towns and receive [illegible] candy.

SANG LY, senior in chemical engineering, and Hang Nguyen, junior in public relations, perform a candle dance during the program. The candle dance is a tradition with the Vietnamese Student Association.

Vietnamese festival keeps ancestral traditions alive

The Full Moon Festival is part of a 1,000-year-old Vietnamese tradition. It is a time for farmers to celebrate the harvest and thank their ancestors for a bountiful gathering in September and October.

In Vietnamese, this holiday is called Trung Thu, which means Full Moon Festival.

The people of Vietnam would go out into the field late in the evening and gather their crops by the light of the full moon. The children would carry colorful lanterns made of tissue paper in the shape of fish, people or pagodas with candles inside to illuminate them. They would carry the lanterns down the street, going from door to door wishing the adults a happy Trung Thu. The adults, in return, would give them candy and toys.

Trung Thu is much like the American holiday Halloween except for the lack of a supernatural element.

Vietnamese students at K-State celebrate Trung Thu every year, but with a little American flair.

"We feel strongly in retaining and perpetuating our cultural legacy. Even though we live in the United States today, we have many ties to Vietnam," said Quoc Nguyen, junior in history and secretary of the Vietnamese Student Association.

Quoc and many members of the Vietnamese Student Association were born in Vietnam. They are the first generation to come to this country and said they have strong ties to Vietnam they don't want to lose.

"We feel that if we don't celebrate Thung Thu, that someday our children and our children's children will forget what Thung Thu is," Quoc said.

Another reason these students celebrate Trung Thu is that they want to share and exhibit Thung Thu with Americans, the international audience and the students and faculty on campus.

"To tell you the truth, Americans and internationals have fallen in love with Trung Thu because of the special attributes that Trung Thu possesses," Quoc said. "This holiday has been in existence for over a thousand years. Anything celebrated that long would be impossibly difficult for us to forget even though we live in this country."

At the start of the Trung Thu festival, the students sang both the American and Vietnamese national anthems, and Hang Nguyen, president of the Vietnamese Student Association greeted the audience.

Traditional Vietnamese cuisine was served. A few entrees were sôi, a yellow sweet rice and cha, a red sweet rice. They also served prawn chips, which were fried, shrimp-flavored wafers.

The festival featured many skits and acts performed by the members of the Association. The children in the audience carried lighted lanterns around the room to demonstrate the traditional Vietnamese holiday.

Many students from the University of Kansas came to celebrate the festivities. The K-State chapter of the Vietnamese Student Association was host to a challenge between the two universities with the macarena dance.

"I was really impressed with the amount of people we had turn out. We also had a lot of KU students turn out. Trung Thu also gives publicity for the organization and more people come to festivals like this one," Hang,

Cats down Buffs but miss Huskers

With win, K-State improves record to 11-2

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

LINCOLN, Neb. — K-State's volleyball team left Manhattan Thursday on a two-part mission — to beat Colorado, something the Wildcats have never done in Boulder, and to beat Nebraska, something the Wildcats have never done anywhere.

The Cats completed the first part of their mission Friday night with a 3-2 win over the Buffaloes but fell short against the No. 7 Cornhuskers, losing 2-3.

K-State drew first blood in Boulder, taking the first game 15-10. Colorado came back to win the next two games 4-15 and 10-15, but the Cats recovered, winning the final two games 15-10 and 15-9.

> "...once we got a lead, we played not to lose instead of playing to win."
>
> • JIM MOORE
> K-STATE VOLLEYBALL COACH

Although K-State coach Jim Moore said the match wasn't pretty, K-State won despite hitting only .213. He said the win was an important one.

"That is such a huge win for the program in that we were the favored team against a team with a tradition, a team that's been to the NCAA Tournament seven years running," he said.

Sophomore middle blocker Val Wieck led the Cats on offense, hitting .424, including a career-high 15 kills.

Saturday, K-State faced the defending national-champion Huskers in front of 3,717 fans in Nebraska Coliseum. Both Moore and Husker coach Terry Pettit predicted a hard-fought battle, and they got it.

"Both teams had a week to prepare," Pettit said. "I said earlier neither team would hit .200."

And neither did. Nebraska hit just .157 in its 9-15, 15-5, 9-15, 15-4, 15-11 victory. That was almost double the Wildcats' mark of .080, which included -.094 in the second game and -.050 in the fourth.

Moore attributed K-State's low hitting percentage to Nebraska's defense and timid offense from the Cats.

"I think they blocked really well," he said. "When we made stupid passes, they blocked us. Part of their game, off what I've read in the papers, was to take us out of our system. But even in system, we got blocked, and then we started hitting to avoid blocks instead of hitting to win.

"The two negative games we weren't playing to win. It was the same thing against Colorado, where once we got a lead, we played not to lose instead of playing to win."

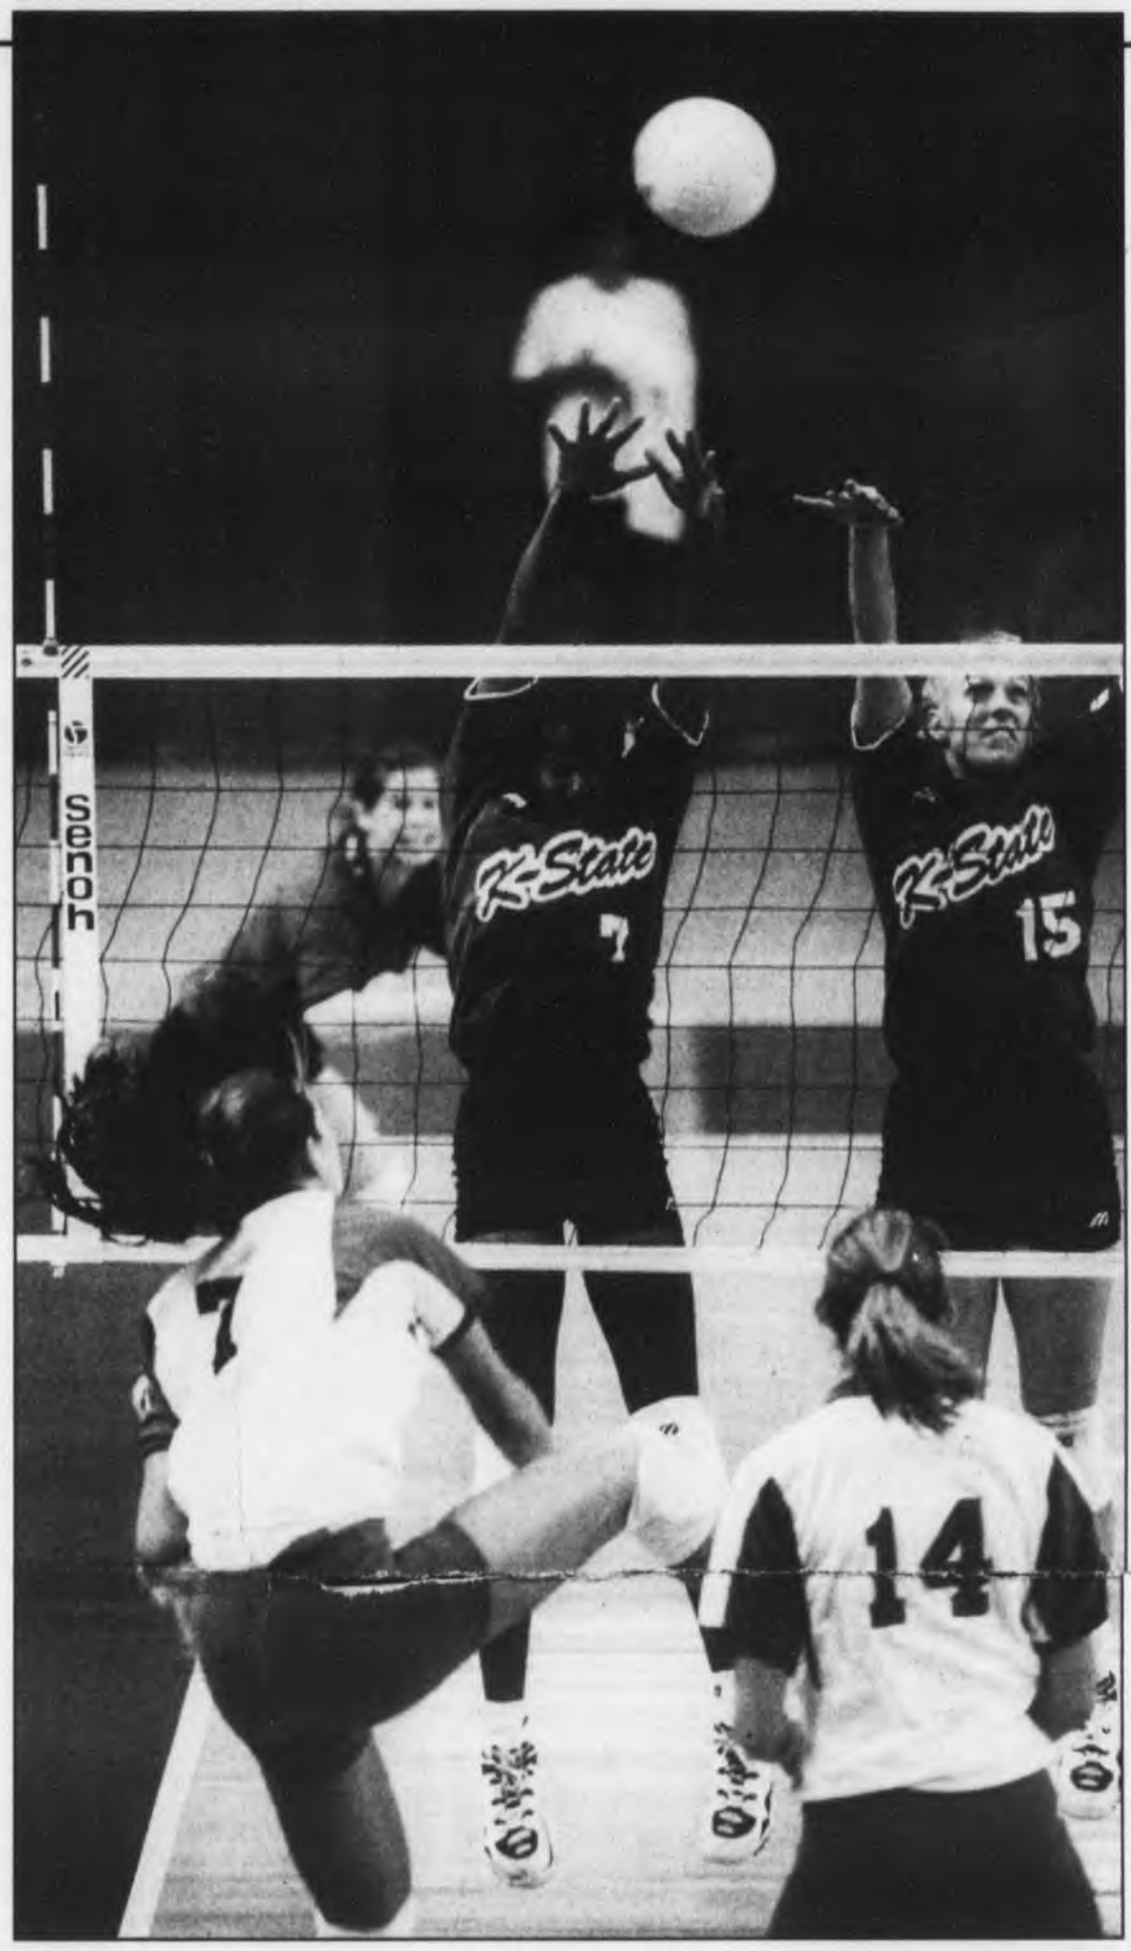
Nebraska scored first in the first game, but K-State roared back to go up 8-2 on a block by senior middle blocker Kate DeClerk and junior setter Devon Ryning. The Huskers went on a run of their own, tying the game at 8-8. The Cats regained their momentum and extended the lead to 14-8. After a side-out, Wieck's back-to-back kills gave K-State the serve and the game.

K-State's momentum ran out in the second game. The Cats kept it close early, but a six-point run by Nebraska gave the Huskers a 3-9 lead. K-State scored just twice more before Nebraska ended the game 5-15.

Game three saw more long runs, with K-State scoring the first five points before Nebraska came back to make it 5-4. The Cats took the next three scores for an 8-4 lead, but again Nebraska recovered to tie the game at 8-8. But a pair of kills by play-set hitter Toie Young, followed by three straight kills by freshman swing hitter Abbie Brown extended the lead to 13-8. The Huskers scored just once more before freshman outside hitter/middle blocker Dawn Cady.

DeClerk said both teams seemed to find rhythm in the early games, but neither could maintain it.

"It seemed like they'd all of a sudden get a lot of points," DeClerk said. "Then we'd side out, and we'd all of a sudden get a lot of points. It just went back and forth like that."



The pattern changed in the fourth game. K-State scored the first point, but Nebraska stepped up its offense, hitting .270 in the game and winning 4-15 on an ace serve.

The final game also seesawed, with Nebraska scoring and K-State answering until the Huskers put together a pair of points to go up 4-6. A later four-point run gave the Huskers a 12-6 lead before the Cats answered with three points of their own.

Again each team exchanged points until a kill by Husker all-American Lisa Reitsma gave Nebraska a 10-14 lead. Young responded with a kill, her third consecutive point, to bring the Cats within three, 11-14. But Young's serve into the net gave Nebraska the game and match at 11-15.

Although Moore said playing Nebraska close might have been a moral victory in previous years, he was disappointed with Saturday's loss.

"I hate losing. I hate it with a passion," he said. "And we lost. I'm not mad at the team. They're as mad as me, and they're as hurt as me."

TOIE YOUNG, play-set hitter, blocks a shot with assistance from Val Wieck, middle blocker, in the third volleyball game against Nebraska.

K-State women finish 1st, men 2nd

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

The K-State women's cross country team emerged victorious Saturday from its own invitational, while the men's team finished second.

K-State defeated Fort Hays State soundly on the women's side while the men's side fell to the Tigers by four points.

For the women, Samantha McNamara placed first for the first time in her collegiate career with a time of 19 minutes, 4.92 seconds.

"It's always nice to win," McNamara said. "It might not be quite as exciting as a Big 12 meet, but it's still really nice."

But even more exciting for McNamara, and for Coach Terry Drake, was the overall performance of the Wildcat women.

Ashlie Kinton and Kelly Andra finished just behind McNamara in second and third place, respectively. Kinton ran a time of 19:31.85 while Andra finished in 19:34.37 seconds.

"We saw some really positive things," Drake said. "Kelly Andra made a big jump forward from her KU race. She's going to make a big difference for us if she keeps running up there with Sam (McNamara), which I think she's going to do."

Anita Hallauer and Ann Gaubski also finished in the top 10 for K-State, giving the Cats a total of 23 points.

"We have a strong team," she said. "We're really excited about it. Most of the girls on the team are moving along pretty well, and we feel good about what we're doing and where we're going to go."

The women's team was without the services of Emily Diederich, Lisa Kaul and Cristy Swartz. Drake said they needed to take a meet off.

"Overall, our times weren't very fast, but then I didn't start them off fast," Drake said.

The KSU Invitational is K-State's last meet before it begins tougher competition Saturday at the Cowboy Jamboree in Stillwater, Okla., followed up by the Wolverine Invitational in Ann Arbor, Mich., Oct. 20.

Drake said he used this race as an opportunity to run the three, four, five and six runners on the team and to give them some experience.

On the men's side, it appearedthat experience is much needed.

While Ryan Clive-Smith, Paul Birnbaum and David Dominguez each ran well, posting second-, third- and fourth-place finishes respectively, K-State's next competitors finished no higher than 17th.

Clive-Smith finished just behind Jerry Maritim of Cloud County Community College with a time of 25:30.44 while Birnbaum ran a time of 26:19.54. Dominguez finished in 26:28.66.

"Ryan ran pretty solid," Drake said. "We ran 200s this week, and it really fatigued them. Obviously, the guys were more affected than the girls.

"Paul ran solid. Last year he would have been thrilled with his time, but this year, he's probably not so happy, because he's become a better runner. But still, he ran solid."

Chris May, Zach Davies and Brent Stover did not run for the Cats.

FHSU, although it didn't place anyone higher than fifth, had five runners in the top 11, giving the Tigers the 43 points they needed to defeat the Wildcats.

On the Division I level, K-State won both sides of the meet. The University of Missouri-Kansas City was the only four-year college to compete on the women's side. Nebraska sent its seven, eight, nine and 10 runners to compete in addition to UMKC on the men's side.

Wildcats rule North, for this week anyway

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Utah quarterback Mike Fouts went 21-for-35 for a career-high 476 yards and four touchdowns — the last a 5-yarder to Rocky Henry with 1:39 remaining — in Utah's 45-42 victory over KU.

The loss knocked Kansas from No. 20 to unranked, and left idle K-State as the Big 12 North Division's only unbeaten team.

Elsewhere in the North Division, No. 7 Nebraska shook off its Arizona State hangover and blasted Colorado State 65-9; No. 10 Colorado beat fading Texas A&M 24-10; and Iowa State's remarkable Troy Davis had the third-best rushing day in NCAA Division I history, piling up 378 yards while leading the Cyclones past Missouri 45-31.

In the South Division, No. 12 Virginia beat Texas 37-13, handing the No. 23 Longhorns their second loss in a row; Tulsa beat the wilting, winless Oklahoma Sooners 31-24; and Byron Hanspard rushed for 224 yards as Texas Tech pounded Utah State 58-20.

June Henley rushed for 216 yards and caught a 20-yard touchdown pass on a fake field goal for Kansas, but the Jayhawks just couldn't find a way to stop Fouts.

"I knew if we had the ball at the end of the game, we could win," Fouts said.

Henley had the Utah defenders raving about his own performance as well.

"Henley is the best running back we've faced," Utah defensive back Brandon Dart said. "He's got the whole package... .He's hard to tackle."

At Ames, Iowa, Davis scored four touchdowns while breaking his own school rushing record..

Even Ron Janes, who prides himself on skepticism, felt awed.

"I was thinking, 'Troy Davis? Anybody can bust a long one or two if you give him the ball 50 times a game,'" said the Missouri fullback. "But he's a great back. He lives up to all the hype."

Davis, who as a sophomore last year rushed for over 2,000 yards, broke touchdown runs of 30, 38 and 40 yards. He had non-scoring runs of 16, 21, 30, and 32 yards and had a 36-yard burst nullified by a penalty.

Nebraska piled up 628 yards of total offense while winning its 700th game — a milestone previously achieved only by Michigan, Penn State, Notre Dame, Texas and Alabama.

But quarterback Scott Frost couldn't help but take a few shots at his critics.

"People who were writing and saying some of those things don't know a lot about football," he said. "Maybe they need to take a football class."

"The Bible": a high-speed roller coaster ride

ABBI HAKE
staff writer

McCain Auditorium's seats should have been equipped with seat belts for Friday night's performance, "The Bible: The Complete Word of God, Abridged."

The hilarious comedy, performed by the traveling Reduced Shakespeare Company, was probably the speediest version of the Bible known to man.

The company, made up of three men, covered the entire Bible, Old and New Testament, in exactly two hours, including intermission.

And after it was all over, the audience members appeared dazed, yet exhilarated, as if they'd just been on the longest amusement park ride of their lives.

As the ride began, the three navigators sped past creation, spending enough time there for comprehension, but not so much as to overdo it.

The script was so ingeniously written that the audience was captivated and humored by the first line of the show.

"In the beginning, there was chaos," an ominous voice said.

Then the lights came up, and the audience was exposed to Adam and Eve.

They were played by two men, donning only leaves.

The lights went back down, and they were ready to begin the next scene.

Along the journey, the three actors stopped at only the most well-known parts of the Bible.

They reenacted Cain and Abel; the story of Jacob and Esau and their fight over the lovely Rachel; Abraham's willingness to kill his son Isaac for God; and Moses and the burning bush, which consequently turned into a flame-juggling show.

According to the program, two of the three actors in the company had spent time performing with Ringling Brothers Barnum and Bailey Circus.

Their goofy antics made this apparent.

In their portrayal of Jesus performing successive miracles, the three actors showed off their best magic tricks.

As the first half of the ride neared its end, Moses amused the crowd in one of the funniest scenes of the show.

Just after bringing the Ten Commandments down from the mountain, Moses announced to the audience that there was some good news and bad news.

"The good news is, I got them down to 10," Moses said proudly. "The bad news is, adultery is still one of them."

The second half was equally funny.

Beginning with the birth of Christ — the three wise men bring Jesus not gold, frankincense and myrrh, but three baseball gloves.

The birth of Christ was reenacted in the same crass nature as everything that preceded it.

In this scene, the audience sees Mary lying on the floor, going through about two seconds of labor before a doll flies from beneath her legs across the stage.Christ is caught and then held up for the audience to see.

The show accelerates, but just at the right pace.

Some of the highlights are the baptism of Christ, the last supper, the crucifixion, resurrection and finally the book of Revelation.

The three actors skillfully injected improvisation into their performance.

They related to the audience well by referring to the K-State football and basketball teams and also through extensive political commentary throughout the entire show.

"The Bible" was certainly one of the easiest two-hour performances to sit through.

But be cautioned. Just like any ride at Disneyland or Worlds of Fun might warn, the program also contained a warning: "This show is a high-speed, roller-coaster type condensation of the entire Bible and is not recommended for people with heart ailments, back problems, theology degrees, inner-ear disorders, and/or people inclined to motion sickness.

"The Reduced Shakespeare Company cannot be held responsible for expectant mothers."

More than 30 walk, raise $1,500 for AIDS

TONYA ALLOWAY
staff reporter

Thirty-two people raised a total of $1,500 by participating in the Walk-N-Roll for the Heartland, an AIDS benefit, Saturday morning from Alco to CiCo Park.

"We raised money for a good cause, and it will be put to very good use," said Harold Conner, committee chairman for Walk-N-Roll.

He said there was a larger turnout than he had expected, and he hopes for an even bigger turnout next year.

The walk was sponsored by the Manhattan AIDS Project and co-sponsored by area businesses.

Proceeds from the walk will go for preventative and educational programs and limited financial assistance to clients, Conner said.

This includes non-covered medication, transportation, assistance in utilities and rent, and any other help that might be needed.

Robert Littrell, representative candidate for the 62nd district, was the keynote speaker at the event.

Conner also spoke to the group about HIV and what it is like for someone to live with HIV.

"We are just hoping to keep information going out about MAP or about other places that people can go for help," Conner said. "We want them to know we're right beside them, and we're not going to let them be by themselves."

Conner said the next AIDS-benefit project MAP is planning is a Bowl-a-Strike.

"It's unfortunate that we do have to have fund raisers like this, but the involvement and the money is really necessary for the clients to survive," Conner said.

A busload of Junction City High School students won a trophy for raising $400, the most raised by a group. The individual trophy was won by Anna Drown, who raised $167.

"I think everything went real well, and I was glad I was the individual that raised the most money," Drown said. "It was a lot of fun."

First through third places to cross the finish line and the last to place in the walk received ribbons.

All the ribbons went to Junction City High School girls, Conner said.

In addition, everyone participating and all businesses that contributed received a certificate of appreciation. All participants who raised more than $100 got T-shirts for their efforts.

Collegian office equipment stolen

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

The Collegian production room in Kedzie Hall had an estimated $4,300 of equipment stolen this weekend.

"As far as we can tell it was sometime between 2 a.m. and 11 a.m. on Sunday," Kevin Klassen, Collegian editor in chief, said.

A computer monitor, keyboard, hard drive, mouse and flatbed scanner were stolen. The equipment was used for advertising and newspaper layout purposes.

"The sad thing was that the equipment stolen was funded by students," Ron Johnson, Collegian news adviser, said.

The locked production-room door was opened by what appeared to be a sledgehammer.

No one knows how Kedzie was entered because there was no sign of a break-in from an outside door. All the doors were supposedly locked.

Johnson said Kedzie is unlocked at times, because students are at the Collegian 18 hours a day.

Klassen and Johnson said they both assume an investigation will be started. The production room was fingerprinted, but there are no suspects at this time.

At this time, the dairy unit has no plans to increase employment.

"We are going to try and operate as we are now," Scoby said.

At the present time, the animal science department is monitoring money flow through the use of requisition forms.

"It's more of a mechanics than a budget aspect," Riley said.

This step is being taken to help keep a sufficient inventory of animals and products, Riley said.

The forms keep track of how department money is being spent. It also helps to record who spent the money and the reason for the purchase.

"If we continue to have an increase in input costs and a decrease in output prices, then we'll have to make additional cutbacks," Riley said.

If market prices improve, then it would help the department offset the minimum-wage increase, Riley said.

Tai Nguyen, vice president of the KU chapter, said the gathering was educational and helpful for both the Vietnamese students and their guests.

"I think that this event was great because it helps unite the Vietnamese students and demonstrate our culture. The skits were a good ice breaker and a great way to get everyone involved," Tai said.

Reform candidate discusses national issues, concerns

DARCIE MCCONKEY
staff reporter

Mark Marney, a Reform Party candidate for the U.S. Senate, met with a handful of Manhattan residents Sunday to discuss national issues and voter concerns.

He spoke at length about the financial status of the country. He said he is struggling with the fact that the United States is approximately $5.2 trillion in debt, yet politicians continue to borrow money from sources such as large banks, foreign countries and wealthy citizens.

"We have no right morally to pass on debt to our children. Each generation has the responsibility to solve their own financial situations," Marney said.

If Marney had his way, a national sales tax would be implemented, which would create an 18-to 19-percent tax rate and rely on automatic bank withdrawals instead of paperwork.

The tax rate may seem high to most people, Marney said, but they are taking home all their earnings and can invest it in savings without paying any taxes.

"I think we should repeal the 16th Amendment and adopt this type of tax system. We don't need the government to confiscate all our earnings. The public should be 100-percent in control of what they take home."

Marney is a firm supporter of states' rights.

"I do not believe we need a one-size-fits-all approach.

"We must get back to state control, because problems are solved better closer to the source," Marney said.

Welfare is one issue that he believes should be transferred to state control.

"Fifty different ideas are better than one idea, and the states should be able to handle situations as they see fit," he said.

Another issue causing political tension is abortion. Marney, a strong supporter of the pro-life movement, said it is hard to draw a line between religion and politics.

"I think it all depends on your opinion of when life begins. If you believe life begins at conception, you would consider abortion to be murder. Abortion is a very difficult issue to deal with in political campaigns," he said.

Politicians have constantly questioned family values throughout recent years, and Marney doesn't like the conclusions many of them have drawn.

"I believe mothers and fathers should take on the responsibility to raise and discipline their children, not expect the schools and educators to perform those tasks," Marney said.

Amendment that I would want to amend."

Hochhauser said that because of Manhattan's religious diversity, it would be difficult to decide what group's prayer to use.

Schrum taught school for 26 years, and she said students who wanted to pray always found time on their own.

Oleen also opposed mandating prayer in public schools.

Candidates also agreed that sex education should be more than an abstinence-based curriculum.

Peterson and Glasscock said abstinence should be an important part of the curriculum, but not all of it.

Glasscock said, "The truth is that young people are sexually active at ages that would astound us."

He said sex-education curriculums must teach that abstinence is what society expects from teen-agers.

Hochhauser said, "I think it would be great if we could teach abstinence-only sex education and have that solve our problems. The reality is, students are going to be sexually active."

Hochhauser, Oleen, Schrum and Littrell support comprehensive sex education with abstinence included as a part of it.

All the candidates also said they support stricter ethics legislation for members of Congress.

Schrum said she supports eight-year term limits and lower spending limits on House and Senate campaigns.

Oleen said she supports lowering the amounts political action committees can contribute to campaigns but does not support limits on individual contributions. She also does not support state money going to campaigns.

Hochhauser said the more important issue is whether she votes in the district's interests.

"I invite you to look at the record and to see whether you see anything that indicates lack of independence, despite financial endorsements," she said.

Peterson and Littrell said they have not accepted money from PACs.

Littrell said, "I just don't think there is any way you can avoid being influenced. If you really believe there isn't any influence, then why do these individuals give the money in the first place?"

Glasscock said he has voted to ban PACs.

"If you think I am influenced by PAC money, don't vote for me. If you thing PAC money or money can influence a candidate, don't give them any money."

He said individual contributions have just as much influence as PAC contributions and should be treated the same way.

The Flint Hills MAINstream Coalition sponsored the forum to provide information on the candidates' positions on issues related to the separation of church and state. MAIN stands for Moderate Alliance of Informed Neighbors, and the coalition is a statewide organization.

"We feel the religious-right candidates don't always make themselves known, and it's important for voters to know the candidates' views," Dolly Gudder, member of the coalition's coordinating committee, said. "Especially on these church-and-state issues, because the candidates don't always make their views known."

close to campus.

Other recommendations by the campus representatives were:

- Strengthening enforcement of laws against false or forged identification to obtain alcohol.
- Making crime statistics for campuses and communities available on the Internet to make information more easily available to students and parents.
- Funding safety-related facilities at campuses, including emergency phones, brighter lighting, bicycle patrols, campus escorts and student cadets.
- Creating a special fund for crime-prevention programs for high-school and college students.

The task force — called Campus Awareness Makes for Protection and Ultimate Safety (CAMPUS) — includes representatives from community colleges, four-year colleges, universities, law-enforcement organizations and parents and students.

The task force will meet next Oct. 21 at Fort Hays State University.

Budget harms services

JILL STORY
staff writer

Overestimations and past debts mean that the Educational Opportunities Fund has more than $12,000 less than it thought it would to allocate toward helping students.

There will be mandatory cuts for fiscal year 1998 in scholarships, child-care, academic assistance and other programs normally funded by the EOF.

"It's going to be a tough, tight year," said Aaron Otto, student body vice president and chairman of the EOF Committee.

This year's committee has to under-allocate $12,388 to make projected revenue equal expenditures and recover the deficits for fiscal year 1996 and 1997.

The budgets are prepared before enrollment begins for a fiscal year, and the fund, which is made up from student fees, is dependent upon enrollment.

Student fees are currently based upon a $60 charge for one credit hour and a $16.50 charge per each additional hour up to 12 hours.

EOF gets 2.61 percent of each student's student fee. A student with 12 or more hours pays $241.50 in student fees, with $6.30 of that going into the EOF.

Projections for 1996 and 1997 enrollment were high, and the EOF received less money than it was projected it would.

Otto said the committee will be in the black by the time he turns the reins over to the next EOF Committee chairperson.

"We've got the structure and the framework tinkered out. We are finally dealing with the debt and balancing the revenue and expenditures," said Otto.

The EOF Committee met last night to distribute proposals and to discuss general priorities for fiscal year 1998. The general consensus was that committee members will be leaning toward the proposals that benefit the most people.

The proposals fall into five categories: child-care, academic assistance, scholarships, graduate teaching assistants and grants.

For 1998, child-care, academic assistance and GTAs will likely be allocated more money than the other groups.

There were 30 proposals submitted this year, down from 40 last year. The proposals ask for a total of $361,650, and the committee has $211,000 to allocate.

"There are going to have to be compromises between what they want us to do, what we feel would be best to do and what we can afford to do," Carrie Ginn, committee member, said.

The University-wide tutoring center in Leasure Hall and the child-care center at Jardine Terrace Apartments are two of the services that are partially funded by the EOF.

The EOF is the brainchild of Stanley Koplick, a former director of the Kansas Board of Regents.

In 1988, the Board was planning to increase tuition by 6 percent in fiscal year 1990 and another 6 percent the following year.

Students voiced concern that there were not any

Today's minimum-wage increase to supercharge annual incomes

WASHINGTON, D.C. (AP) — Nearly 4 million American workers are getting a pay raise today.

The minimum wage rises 50 cents to $4.75 an hour, the first of two increases enacted by a sharply divided Congress that will boost it to $5.15 an hour next Sept. 1.

The 90-cent raise means an additional $1,800 annually for a full-time worker. The last increase, 45 cents, was in April 1991.

"The minimum wage is not going to cure poverty in one fell swoop," Labor Secretary Robert Reich said in an interview. "But clearly this is a major step forward for hard-working people at the bottom rung of our economy."

The Bureau of Labor Statistics said 3.66 million hourly workers earn at or below the current minimum.

Congress enacted the increase on Aug. 2 — a rare Democratic legislative victory during 20 months of Republican control that came only with the help of GOP moderates.

"I don't think there was a single issue in the 104th Congress on which the sides were so opposed and the debate was so clear," Reich said.

Both sides used different studies to support their arguments.

Conservative Republicans argued vehemently that raising the minimum wage would price many entry-level jobs out of market. House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, was so opposed he had pledged to fight the raise with every fiber of his being.

Democrats said if the wage was not increased, its inflation-adjusted value would fall to a 40-year low by January. They said passage would lift 300,000 people out of poverty.

April hit-and-run driver gets 6 months for DUI

SCOTT PHILLIPS
staff reporter

A former K-State student was convicted Monday at the Riley County Courthouse of DUI and leaving the scene of an injury accident in which a fellow K-State student was injured and then flown to Saint Francis Regional Medical Center in Wichita.

J. Jose Lopez was sentenced to six months in jail for DUI and a $200 fine with court costs. He also received a consecutive sentence of one year in jail for leaving the scene of an accident.

On April 26, 1996, at 1:47 a.m., Lopez was driving south on 17th Street when he struck Alex Dill, then a junior in horticulture, at the intersection of Laramie and 17th streets.

Dill was taken from the scene of the accident by Riley County EMS to the Saint Mary Hospital and was later transferred to Saint Francis Regional Medical Center by LifeStar helicopter for treatment of head injuries.

Lopez, who left the scene of the accident, later turned himself in to authorities at the Riley County Police Department. His blood alcohol content was later determined to be .215. The legal point of intoxication for driving under the influence in Kansas is .08.

Dill remained in a coma with holes drilled into his skull to alleviate pressure on the brain.

In court on Monday, both Lopez's and Dill's families awaited the sentencing by Judge Miller of the Riley County Courthouse.

Before sentencing, Dill's sister, Mallorre Dill, gave a statement to the court regarding emotional and financial burdens the family has experienced.

"Our family has suffered tremendous financial burdens, as well as painful, emotional trauma because of Lopez's decision to drive a car that night," Mallorre Dill said. "We lost $22,000, not including medical bills, and nearly $160,000 in medical bills with ongoing therapy.

"Emotionally, we would watch the monitors connected to Alex's brain and when they would climb — 27, 28, 29 and then 30 — I could see my father's eyes fill with tears, and my mother would have to leave the room," she said. "Holding his hand, we were told if the numbers were near 30, that he could die. The hospital had

Portion of Z-Bar ranch joins National Park System

senior staff writer

The U.S. House of Representatives passed the Tallgrass Prairie National Preserve As part of the Omnibus Parks and Public Lands Act, on Saturday night, the last day of the congressional session.

The Preserve is part of the 10,894-acre Z-Bar Ranch in the Flint Hills south of Council Grove. The legislation gives 180 acres to the Department of Interior to establish the preserve.

The remaining 10,714 acres will be owned by the National Park Trust, a nonprofit, private conservation organization. The preserve is the first and only park in the National Park System singularly devoted to the tallgrass prairie.

Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., is credited with helping push the legislation in the House.

Lisa Gagnon, press secretary for Roberts, said the preserve was one of the least controversial components of the omnibus legislation.

"It's been debated in the last four or five congresses," Gagnon said. "It finally made sense to people."

"Roberts did a lot of negotiation on the House side," Gagnon said. "There was a lot of work on the staff level with environmentalists and people who oppose too much federal ownership of land in Kansas."

For the most part, the preserve has been popular among Kansans, but some ranchers were concerned that cattle grazing ground would be

Televised debate provides forum for candidates seeking Kassebaum's seat

KELLY FURNAS
staff reporter

The Kansas Regents Educational Communications Center in Dole Hall televised a live forum at 9 p.m. Sunday between candidates seeking the seat that will be vacant after Sen. Nancy Kassebaum retires.

The broadcast was shown on KTWU-TV from Topeka and was aired on public radio stations around the state.

"The Democracy Project: The Kassebaum Seat," primarily ended up being a debate between Rep. Pat Roberts, the Republican candidate, and Democratic candidate Sally Thompson, who is treasurer of the state.

Although Reform Party candidate Mark Marney and Libertarian candidate Steve Rosile participated in the debate, they were given a smaller amount of camera time.

The format for the forum was open, and the content was broken into debates on a balanced budget, Medicare and Social Security, abortion, term limits and gun control.

Roberts and Thompson were also given opportunities to respond to attacks that had been made by the other candidate before the debate.

Thompson also defended Roberts' assertion that she had lost more than $20 million in the Municipal Investment Pool as treasurer.

"Pat Roberts should be sorry that he's not telling Kansans the truth," she said. "Independent auditors have audited financial statements that say I have made $700 million. Pat Roberts, the bottom line is you failed the truth test."

Roberts then responded to Thompson's assertion that he is out of touch with average Kansans and that his home is actually in Alexandria, Va.

He said calling someone "out of touch and out of Kansas is a little bizarre from someone who has spent four-fifths of their life outside of Kansas."

Roberts said he was a fourth-generation Kansan and comes back to Kansas every chance he gets.

Local political candidates explore issues during American Legion forum

CHARLI SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Ten candidates explained issues of importance to members of the Pearce-Keller American Legion Post in Manhattan Monday night.

The political forum was hosted by the legion but open to the general public. Most of the candidates were running in local districts. Steve Goodman represented Congressman Sam Brownback, who is running for the U.S. Senate.

The first question discussed a constitutional amendment providing for the passage of laws to protect the flag from desecration.

Most of the candidates responded they would favor such an amendment. Ruth Schrum, candidate for 22nd District Senator, reminded the group how difficult it could be.

"I taught American history for 26 years, and most of you know it is difficult to pass a constitutional amendment. I think making it a federal law would be easier and more enforceable," Schrum said.

Local attorney Robert Littrell, candidate for 62nd District representative, said he does not believe in amending the constitution.

Sheila Hochhauser, incumbent representative, praised the legion members who sponsor an American flag etiquette program in schools.

The legion members asked the candidates if they would work to retain the current military installations in Kansas and if they favored further reductions in the defense budget.

All the candidates in turn said they felt the military budget cuts had probably gone a little too far. Incumbent Lana Oleen explained that there had been a 37-percent reduction in troops across the country during the past six years.

"I think the military strength of this nation has been reduced unnecessarily and unwisely," Oleen said.

Ed Pugh, Wamego, said he felt the entire discussion was philosophical.

"Clearly one of the reasons for a federal government is to provide for the common defense," Pugh said.

Pugh was critical of the federal government when he answered the final question, which had to do with the candidates' support of medical services for veterans.

"One thing we lack in our government is not keeping promises. When the government says it is going to do it, they have to do it," Pugh said. "We have the right to expect it."

Each candidate was allowed two minutes to make concluding remarks. Ron Henneberg, candidate for 61st District representative, offered his change of pace for the end of the evening.

He read a poem he wrote after seeing the traveling Vietnam Wall Memorial. The poem ended the evening on a somber note.

Networks vie for McVeigh interview

DENVER (AP) — Three television networks have asked a federal judge to allow them to interview Oklahoma City bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh, arguing it would not hurt the defendants' rights to a fair trial.

CBS, ABC and NBC said in a motion filed Monday that they wanted to take McVeigh up on his offer for interviews, which the networks said could be televised no later than Thanksgiving week.

McVeigh and Terry Nichols face federal murder and conspiracy charges in the April 19, 1995, bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. Federal prosecutors and Nichols' attorney opposed the interviews, saying they could hurt chances of finding an impartial jury.

The networks said McVeigh has already granted several interviews, and said any prejudice that could result from media exposure would be minimized because the trial does not appear imminent.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch accepted the request but denied a request from media attorneys to present oral arguments.

Clinton sounded a hopeful note in announcing Sunday he had invited Netanyahu and Arafat to Washington, and that they had accepted. Clinton will participate directly in the sessions beginning Tuesday, meeting with them both individually and together, senior administration officials said Sunday. There was no assurance, though, that Netanyahu and Arafat would face each other without an American intermediary.

Language labs have more flexible hours

TONYA ALLOWAY
staff reporter

Spanish 1 and 2 students will be spending a little less time in the modern -language lab this semester.

Requirements for Spanish students have recently changed from 12 lab hours per semester to six hours because students will watch part two of the videos previously shown in the lab in class every Thursday, said Keola Mendenhall, language-lab monitor and freshman in pre-medicine.

Spanish students this semester are required to take the lab whether they pay for the lab and receive credit or not. In the future, they might not have a choice in paying for the extra credit hour.

Mendenhall said the problem was scheduling conflicts with students and lab hours. He said with the new requirements, the lab is able to help more students.

"We've had a lot of positive feedback," Mendenhall said. "This way, people can come in when they can, even with tight schedules."

> "We've had a lot of positive feedback. This way, people can come in when they can, even with tight schedules."
> • KEOLA MENDENHALL
> FRESHMAN IN PRE-MEDICINE

Mendenhall said students can still make up videos missed in class in the lab. The language lab has extended its hours to from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday through Friday, from 6 to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday, and from 1 to 5 p.m. Saturday.

During the lab time, students watch 20-minute videos that continue from one episode to the next. Spanish students watch "Destinos," which starts at Episode 1 in Spanish 1 and continues with Episode 27 in Spanish 2.

French students watch "French in Action" and listen to cassette tapes. The language lab also offers videos and cassettes to Russian students, called "Russian Language and People," and there are cassette tapes available for German, Arabic and Japanese language students.

Cherie Mendenhall, language lab monitor and sophomore in French and secondary education, said only the Spanish classes have changed their requirements. French students must watch 12 hours in the lab for lab credit, German students must spend 15 hours in lab, and Arabic and Japanese students are required to spend 12 hours in lab.

Even with the lesser requirements and more flexible hours, some Spanish students are still upset with the requirement of a lab when they aren't enrolled in the class.

Jennifer Kazar, sophomore in premedicine and a Spanish 1 student, said it isn't fair for her to have to watch the video at all.

"I am not paying for the class or enrolled in the lab, so it's a waste of time," Kazar said. "They talk too fast in the videos, anyway, so you can't understand what they are saying."

But Kazar said she was glad she would be required to spend less time in the lab with the requirement change.

Tana Wewer, senior in accounting and Spanish 1 student, said she doesn't like the requirement of the lab but sees its importance.

"I'm glad we have to spend less time in the lab, but if you're going to go on to Spanish 2, you really need to watch every episode, anyway, since it's a continuation," Wewer said.

The Department of Modern Languages will probably be changing more in the future, Michael Ossar, department head, said. He said Spanish 1 and 2 and French 1 through 4 might automatically be a five-hour class, and paying for the lab class will no longer be an option.

However, the credit change has not yet been approved by the Kansas Board of Regents, Bob Kohl, language-lab director, said.

Ossar said that in the future, the lab will allow advanced modern-language students to access more Internet sites, satellite videos and individual computer programs for people who need specific help.

"Foreign-language satellite programming will be available for people from other countries, like Spain, Japan, France, Germany, to see programs like soccer games from their country," Ossar said.

The language lab is also in the process of expanding the fast-growing Japanese programs to allow Japanese students to view as well as e-mail the language's characters, Kohl said.

Bi partisan gun ban aimed at protecting women from abusers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Under pressure from the White House and Senate Democrats, congressional Republicans agreed to a sweeping domestic-violence gun ban, abandoning most of their alternative proposal.

The final language was hammered out over the weekend as part of the huge spending bill before the Senate. It expands the current ban on gun ownership or possession by felons to include virtually anyone convicted of a misdemeanor involving domestic violence.

"This legislation will save the lives of thousands of battered women and abused children," said Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., who proposed a similar ban that was endorsed by the Senate 97-2 earlier this month.

Rep. Bob Barr, R-Ga., a former U.S. attorney, proposed an alternative last week that would have extended the gun ban to people convicted of domestic-abuse misdemeanors only if physical force was involved, and only if the person was notified of the gun ban when arrested, given the right to counsel and a trial by jury.

Last week, congressional Republicans initially agreed to substitute Barr's alternative for the Lautenberg amendment. That brought protests from Senate Democrats and the White House, since President Bill Clinton initially proposed the gun ban during his train trip to the Democratic Convention in August.

Barr contended Lautenberg's original bill was unconstitutional. States do not uniformly define misdemeanor crimes, he said, so Lautenberg's bill would have violated the equal-protection clause of the Constitution.

He also complained Lautenberg's proposal ignored the general law exemption that would have kept the gun ban from applying to police officers and military personnel. The final agreement included Barr's language removing that exemption.

In the agreement reached during the weekend, congressional Republicans dropped Barr's language requiring notification of the gun ban at the time of arrest. They also agreed to modify Barr's language extending the ban only to persons convicted after a jury trial, or after having waived a jury trial.

Democrats claimed that would have exempted most convicted abusers from the ban because few such cases carry punishments severe enough to guarantee the right to a jury trial. The final agreement simply requires that persons charged with domestic abuse who are entitled to a jury trial must be given one or must waive that right before they would come under the gun ban if convicted.

Kansas City teen arrested in slaying

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A 16-year-old girl was arrested in the death of another girl whose throat was slashed outside a fast-food restaurant in midtown Kansas City.

The girl was arrested Sunday while being treated at a hospital.

The victim, Yasmeen Majeed, 14, had gone to a McDonald's restaurant Saturday night to see a friend who worked there, and the 16-year-old entered later.

Police said there had been conflicts between the two girls, usually concerning a boy. Sgt. Jim Keane said that inside the restaurant, the two looked at each other in an offensive way.

Police said the 16-year-old went to her car in the parking lot, and Majeed followed. They exchanged more words and began shoving each other, and Majeed was slashed across the throat. She was pronounced dead at a hospital.

The victim's family said the 16-year-old was actually feuding with another girl who was at the restaurant. Majeed's father, Abdul Majeed, said his daughter defended the other girl from the 16-year-old's verbal attacks, leading to the fight.

"She was at the wrong place at the wrong time," Abdul Majeed said of his daughter. "She didn't have a feud with this girl. That girl had a feud with somebody else."

OPINION

EDITOR: SERA TANK 532-0730 (KAROLYI@KSU.EDU) | TUESDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1996 | PAGE 4

IN OUR OPINION

Drunken driving is dumb; alternatives are plentiful

It looks as though the police are starting to take drunken driving more seriously.

Friday and Saturday, Aggieville was filled not only with students cooling off from the week's brain drain, but with more than the usual number of police officers watching for signs of intoxication. On Saturday, a checkpoint was set up on Anderson Avenue in the vicinity of Nichols Hall.

WHY WE CARE

When you've been drinking, you might think you're OK to drive, but you're probably not. You might be putting other drivers in danger.

If you think your chances of getting caught are negligible, think again. And if you think you're still OK to drive after what you drank, you probably aren't. The legal limit in Kansas is a 0.08 blood alcohol level. This means the average female will reach this level after one beer. The average male will probably reach it less than another full beer later.

DUI simply has too many consequences to be acceptable.

Jose Lopez found that out Monday, when he was sentenced to a year and a half in jail for DUI and leaving the scene of an accident. And that's a light sentence for this country. Of course, in comparison with Alex Dill, whose family has had to pay over $180,000 in medical costs, and in comparison with Dill himself, who has spent the past five months learning to walk and talk again, that doesn't sound so extreme.

There are too many alternatives to drunken driving to have any kind of excuse to justify driving while intoxicated.

There is a Safe Ride organization on whose purpose is to provide free transportation to intoxicated students. The designated driver system works perfectly, and many bars have free non-alcoholic drinks for designated drivers.

However, if you tend to overestimate your capacity, remember to give your keys to the driver before you start drinking. Or if everyone needs to get a little mellow, the town isn't too big walk.

Fate, time don't always coincide when it comes to making amends

MY

Sera L. TANK

I listen to my friends complain about their parents. I hear things like "I hate my mom/dad," or "My parents suck" or "They mean nothing to me."

I used to be one of those people, too. I used to complain how my parents had screwed up my life.

But then on the morning of May 5, 1995, my dad called.

He stalled for a minute, trying to find out if I was alone. I was, and he didn't like that.

I knew that something was wrong right then.

"Mommy died last night," he said.

Oh, my God.

You can't imagine the wave of overwhelming guilt that washed over me. It didn't seem real. I've heard that's what you call shock.

The rest of the morning was like a dream. I teetered between the emotions of disbelief, sadness and guilt.

I couldn't believe it. I had just talked to her about three days before. My mom can't be dead, I thought, she was the one who was supposed to live forever to torture me and bug the hell out of me.

There were so many things I hadn't said. So many things I had said but didn't have a chance to take back yet.

Now, there are no chances left.

A lot of my friends tell me their parents are too strict, too lenient, too out there or have a variety of addictions or mental problems.

But besides the sadness I felt for them, I feel a sense of urgency. I feel as though I have to explain that there might not be as much time for acceptance and forgiveness as they might think.

Certainly, in an age of TV psychology, we can understand how alcoholism, drug abuse or an unstable parent can screw up a kid's life, and I can understand her anger.

But we're grown-ups now. We lead our own lives. We make our own choices.

It's hard growing up with a parent who has too many problems to deal in their own lives and doesn't have the time or energy to be a parent.

What our parents do now affects us very little. They live their lives, and we live ours. And all you can do is accept them for who they are.

Crying about how everything is your mother's fault not only sounds completely Freudian and immature, but it's lacking any acceptance of your own personal responsibility.

Sure, Oprah and the rest of the world of pop-psychology has shown us the root of many of our personality problems, but she's also given too many people an excuse.

Not everyone is going to be able to love their parents and go to Thanksgiving dinner with them. Sometimes the wounds are too deep.

Sometimes forgiveness will not even be in the cards.

But we can accept them. You're not going to change anyone who doesn't want to be changed. If you learn one thing in life, learn that.

And ignoring phone calls and deciding you're never going to talk to your mother or father again isn't going to punish them into changing.

Maybe you think it won't hurt that much if someone in your life dies because you hate them.

Not to go pop or anything, but Janet Jackson was right. "There's a real fine line between love and hate."

Hate is an awfully strong emotion to waste on someone you don't care about.

If you hate someone, I believe that means you loved them at one time. Perhaps they hurt you or betrayed a trust, but the point is there was love there.

And when someone dies, not only is the person you hate dead, but the person you loved is dead, too.

If you think you won't hurt, you're wrong.

My dad told me when I was little: "Every time you leave someone, treat them as though it were the last time you were going to see them. You don't know what will happen to them or you after you walk out the door."

I wish I would have heeded Dad's advice a little sooner.

You think you have so much time. And you might think you will get things in your own life straightened out and then find time to forgive.

You might not. Sometimes fate is not that kind.

Student leaders encourage student input, involvement

Editor's note: This is one in a series of columns from the Hansen-Otto administration to help students to better understand their agenda. This column was written by Chris Hansen, studen body president; Aaron Otto, vice president; and Amy Donahy, chief of staff.

A recent Collegian headline read "Senate sheds its divisive image." As a former senator and current observer of Student Senate, I think that assessment is very true. A strong willingness to work together is present throughout all three branches of the Student Governing Association. Along with that cooperation, there is also a strong emphasis on making student government more accessible to the students for whom it exists. This is a theme of many student campaigns but often becomes a forgotten promise after the election is won. The current leadership within SGA has made a sincere commitment to make sure that this year is one of legitimate change and progress. The executive branch is particularly focused on becoming more in touch with student needs and concerns.

Student Body President Chris Hansen and Vice President Aaron Otto have several ideas about how to get this input. One idea is "Feedback Friday." Every Friday at 12:30, Chris, Aaron and other SGA officers will be in the large conference room of the Office of Student Activities and Services specifically to receive student input in an informal setting. All students are invited to stop by and ask questions or share ideas. If this time doesn't fit into your schedule, you can arrange an individual meeting time with Chris or Aaron by calling 532-6541.

But Chris and Aaron won't just be waiting for you to stop by. They will also be revisiting the organizations they spoke to during their campaign last spring. This time they will be at your meetings to listen, rather than talk. These revisitations will provide an opportunity for all types of student organizations to express their particular concerns and have their voice heard throughout student government.

A third significant change involves the student body president's cabinet. This year's cabinet is focused on increasing visibility and effectiveness. Cabinet positions address a wide range of issues including teacher evaluations, restructuring student government, multicultural concerns, Union enhancement, campus safety, athletics, the concerns of international students, technology, greek and residence hall living, off-campus housing and student input in city and state government. Cabinet members have projects planned in each of these areas and would be happy to discuss them with you. They can also be contacted at 532-6541.

One of these projects starts was Safer Housing Week. The intent of this week was to encourage students living off campus to make sure their housing meets certain safety conditions.

This can be done by utilizing the city's free inspection program. At your request, by calling 537-0056, a safety inspection of your home can be conducted, at no cost and with no risk of retaliation by your landlord.

Brochures and more information about these inspections will be available this Wednesday and Thursday from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., when cabinet members and student senators will be sponsoring a table in the K-State Student Union.

The stars don't have the solutions to all problems

answers & scapegoats

MY

Keely SCHIELDS

This past Thursday, people actually stopped and cocked their heads skyward to look at what was up there.

We don't do that much anymore. These days, there are more exciting things to do at night.

What they were hoping — even expecting — to see was that night's lunar eclipse. Science had predicted it. Unfortunately, the only eclipse to be seen for any length of time was that of all the heavens by the lingering cloud cover.

The irony! We have very precise ways of knowing what moons and stars will be up to seven years, three months and nine days from now, but whether there will be clouds tomorrow night cannot be said with quite the same certainty.

When it comes to the weather, the only certainties come ex post facto. For instance, there were clouds Thursday because a cold front passed through, pushing warmer, damper air upward, thus causing their formation (or something to that effect). The weatherman might or might not have forecasted it yesterday, but he can tell you all about it today.

But after the fact, who really cares how the clouds came into existence or how they came to hang over Manhattan? They were there.

I could assert with complete confidence that clouds formed and obscured the lunar eclipse because of Nebraska's loss last Saturday, and for all it matters, everybody might as well believe me.

Isn't my explanation a more satisfying one? I like it better. It calls to mind a time when the night sky was not only the best show in town, but also a way of explaining all the weird catastrophes that happened the next day.

Bubonic plague swept the cities, or a famine wracked the countryside, and there was always at least one guy who remembered an oddity he'd observed in the stars just before the first victim was claimed.

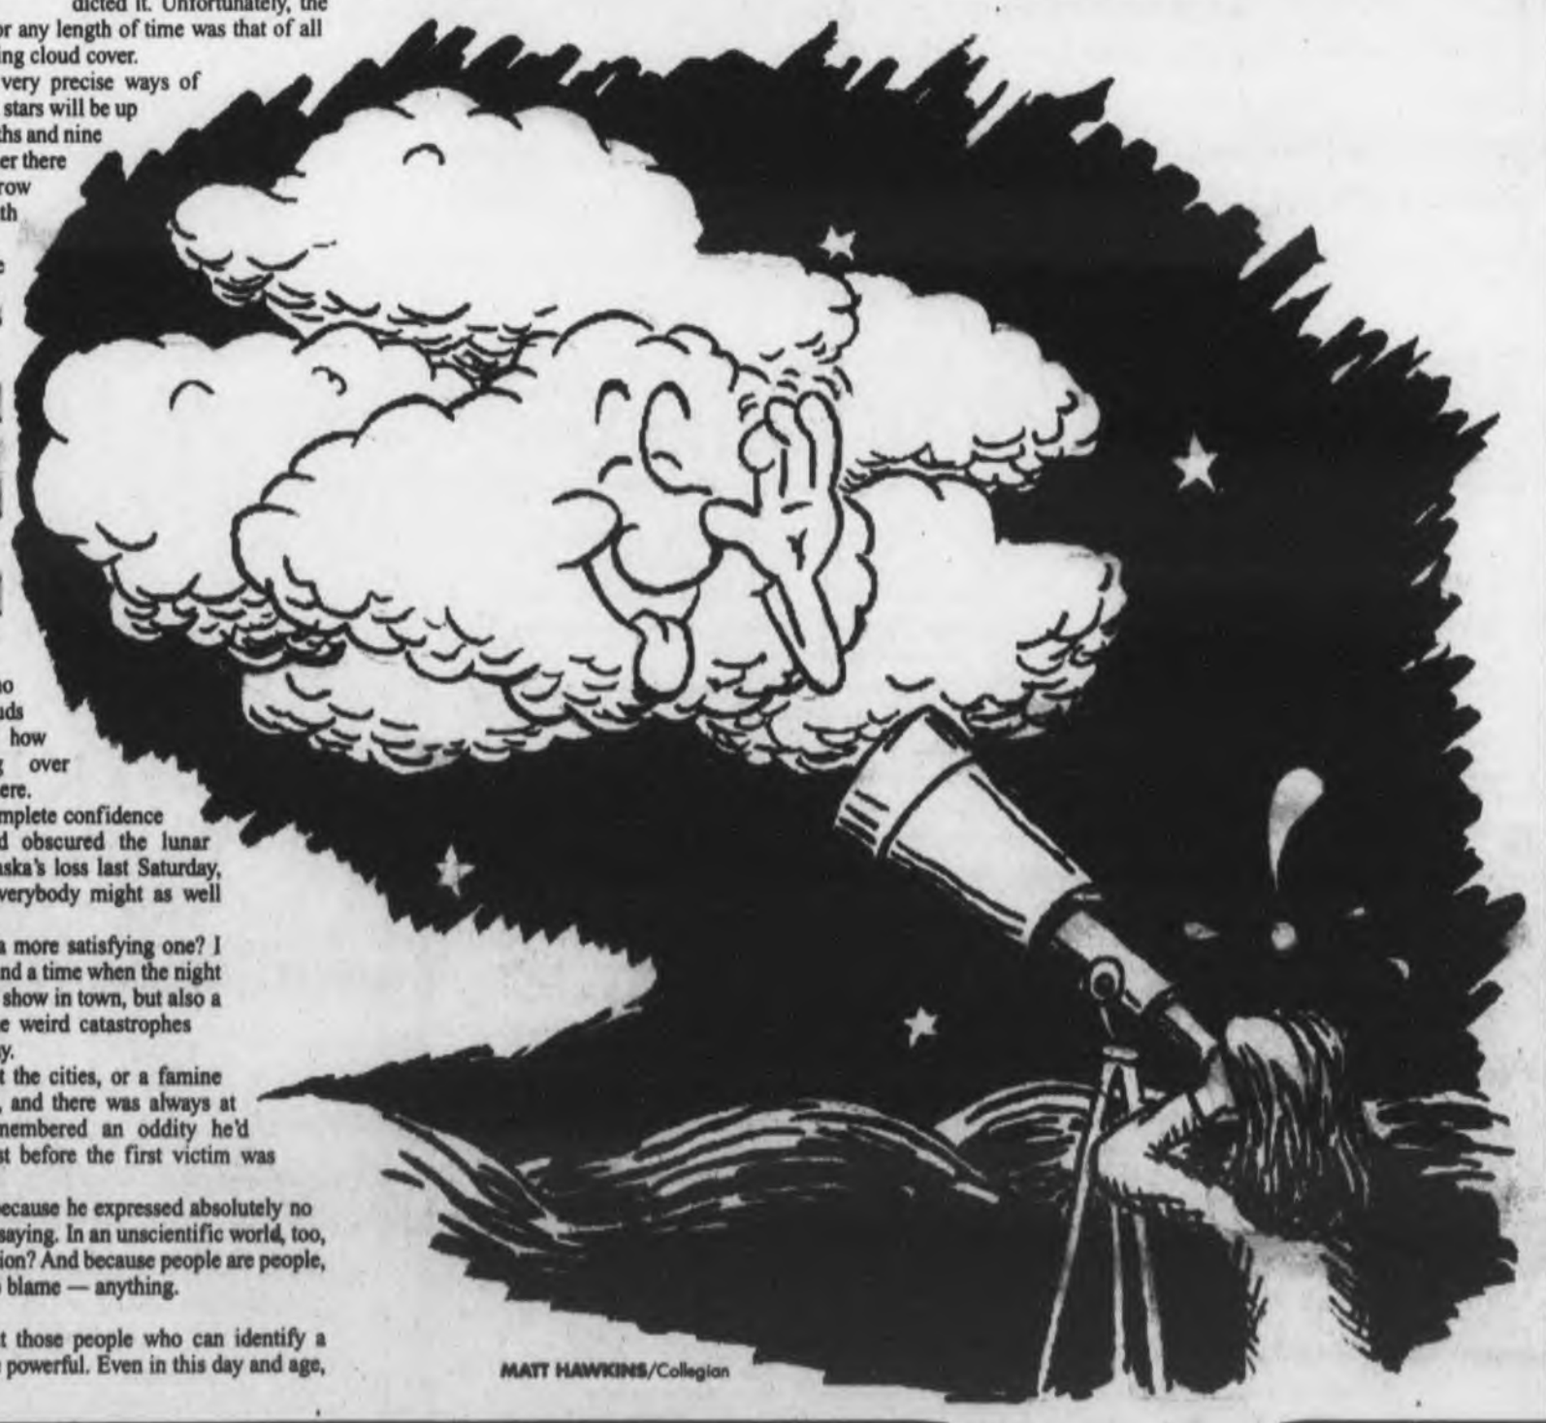
People believed him because he expressed absolutely no doubt about what he was saying. In an unscientific world, too, who had a better explanation? And because people are people, they wanted something to blame — anything.

Suckers.

History shows us that those people who can identify a scapegoat tend to become powerful. Even in this day and age, you don't have to give especially logical reasons why things are crappy as long as you give them like you mean them.

Someone might well say that the United States has become an awfull place to live because some people living here don't speak English. Or it might be said that "Friends" has caused widespread moral depravity.

See those correlations? No? That's only because they're not there, but they don't have to be.



Therefore, I suggest to any ambitious people who were disappointed by the limited view of last week's eclipse that they get all the mileage they can out of what they did see. Milk it for all it's worth.

The eerie thing that happened with the clouds the night of the lunar eclipse can be anyone's own way of knowing for a long time to come.

That way, when Ross Perot sweeps all 50 states, you can just point back to that night in September and say, "Well, it was obvious, wasn't it?"

Who's to say which candidate will win what race, though? In the end, you can't predict events — you can only shrug and point confidently to why they turned out for the worse.

Organ donation saves lives

Editor,

Last week, a Collegian columnist mentioned organ donation and the donation form on the back of Kansas' (and many other states') drivers' licenses. I would simply like to urge all K-State students, staff and faculty to consider signing their licenses. Just as we obtain life insurance out of concern for our loved ones in case of our death, we can show our concern for our fellow human beings by signing a donor card. Most religions, including Catholicism and most Protestant denominations, support organ donations and transplantation. Check with your pastor or rabbi if you are concerned about this. Also, make sure your family understands your wishes, as they might be asked to approve.

I can personally assure you that organ donation makes a difference. My husband has benefited from organ transplantation. We will be forever grateful to the family that decided to give the gift of life. Transplantation can save lives or greatly enhance the quality of life. Yet there are many people who die each year waiting for a transplant because so many people have not signed donor cards and made their wishes known. I urge you to do both today.

Common-sense solutions to age-old parking problem

Editor,

Your editorial on Thursday, Sept. 26, "Parking is a problem we cannot solve unless we exercise some common sense," offers some age-old solutions to the universal problem of automobile parking on university and college campuses.

It's true that not every student (and hey, let's not forget faculty and staff while we're at it!) should expect to drive on to campus at 8:25 a.m. and find a parking space 20 yards from class or work. But let's not forget some hard realities of the situation.

Some folks need to drive cars to campus. When the weather is bad. Freshmen that haven't had the chance to participate in the "car pool bonding" you refer to. Students that live in remote areas. And most important of all, students who combat the rising costs of a college education with a part-time job. Not everyone can work on campus. Some people may need to drive cars to campus if their last class gets out at 2:45 and they have to be at work across town by 3:00. I know about this one — my wife did it all summer.

The hardest reality of all is that over the years, we've become used to paying Parking Services for the right to park on campus. What are we getting in return? Enrollment is going up — but parking spaces are at a stagnant number, it seems. To their credit, Parking Services do an excellent job of sweeping snow, spreading sand, etc. on sidewalks and parking lots during winter.

Can you imagine Dillon's or Burger King operating under the same premise? Paying a price up front for the right to products or services, with no guarantee that you'll get what you're paying for?

If you've been throwing money at the parking problem and remain dissatisfied, perhaps it's time you stopped. I didn't buy a staff permit this year, and so far I'm doing just fine. I parked on adjacent streets most of the time last year — I'll do it all the time this year and put my money to better uses elsewhere. I'd urge others to explore this option: Do you really need to purchase a permit?

There are plenty of other opportunities for us to gamble our money away. Rather than giving my "gambling money" to Parking Services, I'll save mine for a Las Vegas casino instead. The odds are usually better, and hey, at least they'll be nice enough to serve me a couple of free drinks in the process.

'No false prophets' column insulted Catholics, Christians

Editor,

I am writing this letter in regards to a column that was printed in the opinion page Sept. 27 titled "No false prophets."

Like probably every other Catholic and Christian on this campus, I was deeply offended by this article. It was not the opinion of the writer that was offending, though; it was the way she presented her opinion about a subject she obviously knows little about.

First off, I can't believe one would go as far as to call Jesus Christ "illegitimate."

I hope you know how many people on this campus that statement offended.

> "I don't expect everyone on this campus to share the same beliefs as I do, but I would never disrespect someone else's beliefs the way that your paper has."
> • MATTHEW NAGEL
> SOPHOMORE IN ELEMENTARY EDUCATION

Second of all, how could you be so ignorant as to say that Jesus supposedly existed? It is a historical fact that Jesus of Nazareth existed. It not only is recorded in the Bible but in the writings on many historians at that time — some of whom were not Christians.

I don't expect everyone on this campus to share the same beliefs as I do, but I would never disrespect someone else's beliefs the way that your paper has.

Also, if a Christian ever knocked another religion in the paper, you could bet your life that the people of that religion would be up in arms.

As for Ms. Getz, I'm truly sorry for the bad encounters you have had with some other Christians, but I assure you that their motives were pure.

Please though, before you write another column, please research before you slam.

You said that you "know Christianity," but it is obvious you could not know the first thing about it.

Even a little research would help you understand the basics of this religion, and then maybe you wouldn't have to write so ignorantly in our paper.

This is still considered an conservative campus.

It's not KU.

Also, I would appreciate any reply that you, the editor, might have. I'm not looking to get my letter printed. However, if you want to, I'm not against it in the least. The purpose of this letter is to let you know that you offended me and every other Christian and Catholic on this campus by not editing this article. In almost two years at K-State I have never had a complaint about the Collegian. Please keep your paper with the same quality that it's always had.

Thank you for your time and consideration. I'm anxious to hear your reply.

Club gives money back to agronomy and community

Editor,

The Wheat State Agronomy Club would like to thank everyone who has supported us by parking at the north agronomy farm during K-State football games.

We would like to explain the use of our funds from parking cars.

In appreciation for community support, we feel we should give back to the community.

We accomplish this through an annual donation to the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

This year, we are participating in the Cats for Cans food drive at Thanksgiving.

Participation in the Adopt-A-Family program is also planned this year.

A final service to the community is that after each game we clean up the trash on the farm.

The rest of our money goes back to the students in agronomy.

We have purchased equipment for student use and assisted in the financing of student crops and soil-judging teams as they travel to regional and national competition.

Each year, there are national and regional agronomy meetings around the country.

Club funds offset the cost of attending these meetings.

The meetings give the students the opportunity to meet other agronomy students and faculty from other colleges.

The students also get the chance to see what is happening in agronomy around the country.

Finally, we have several picnics and social events for the students, faculty and their families.

This gives everyone a chance to relax, get to know each other and have a little fun.

Again, we would like to thank everyone for coming out and supporting us and hope you will continue to support us in the future.

Politically correct opera

Editor,

Shouldn't it be "it ain't over 'till the short, skinny man with big ears sings?" I feel for the women of opera who have had an eternity of this mantle of large busty matrons hanging over their heads. Especially with the likes of Pavarotti standing around.

At the risk of being accused of the crimes of the politically correct, I say enough already.

Paraphrasing from political campaigns of recent years "It's the voice, stupid."

Make up is superficial; beauty comes from within

Editor,

I would like to thank Rhett Hartman on behalf of many of the women of K-State. You are exactly right: "Superficiality does suck." I think beauty comes from within and shines outward.

When you said "women are brought up pressured to wear makeup," you were right. Magazines rely on makeup and other beauty products to make it in the magazine business.

Our mothers and grandmothers even promote it.

This is a very superficial world we are living in, and sometimes all we need is someone to stand up and say, "You're beautiful just the way you are."

This year's Cats won't be able to stop Nebraska's weaker offense

For K-State, it is a matter of bad timing.

One year, and one year only, separates history from, well, history.

The fact is, this 1996 Wildcat football team will not beat Nebraska. The Cats are outmatched on both sides of the ball, and the Cornhuskers should be able to handle the Cats.

MY

Todd STEWART

But give me the '95 Cats, and it might be another story.

Last season, K-State was no match for the national-champion Cornhuskers. Tommie Frazier was too much, and playing in Nebraska's own back yard made it a hurdle the Cats just could not quite clear.

Nebraska, under the helm of Scott Frost, is just not quite the same team this year, as evidenced by the 19-0 shutout loss at Arizona State.

Despite the Cornhusker dropoff, however, the Cats are still strides behind.

All of this brings me to why I say the Cats are victims of bad timing.

I want to see the '95 Cats against the '96 Huskers.

The '95 Cats match up well with this season's Huskers. Frazier was the variable the Cats just could not contain last season or, for that matter, any other team could contain. Frost, however, would not fare as well against the Cats, and the difference between the '95 and '96 teams is personnel.

Last year's No. 1 defense, with Tim Colston, Dirk Ochs and company, would easily contain the less-explosive, less-talented Frost.

The '95 front seven would be able to take away Frost on the option, allowing the team to concentrate on halfback Ahman Green and keep him somewhat in check.

I am not so sure a front seven with four untested players in Andrew Timmons, Thad Swazer, Jerome Brown and Mark Simoneau can do the same. The team is not battle-tested, and even though it is a much weaker Nebraska team, it is a much weaker Cat defense.

On the offensive side of the ball, there is as much a dropoff as on the defense.

The '96 Cats have not been able to click for more than one or two drives at a time. The passing game has become a stand-around-and-watch-what-Kevin Lockett-can-do attack, and the running game has been consistently inconsistent.

The '95 Cats offense saw quite different results.

Quarterback Matt Miller had the luxury of the best receiving corps in the conference with Lockett, Tyson Schwieger and Mitch Running. Those three receivers helped Miller set a Big 8 record with 22 touchdown passes in a season. Also helping the '95 offense was Miller's ability to elude the rush, something now-quarterback Brian Kavanagh has been unable to do.

> "The team is not battle-tested, and even though it is a much weaker Nebraska team, it is a much weaker Cat defense."

Eric Hickson led the ground game, but the loss of Hickson to a season-ending broken leg leaves the Cats searching for answers on the ground.

Marlon Charles has shown the ability to make plays at times but has yet to do it against a formidable opponent. This Nebraska team is certainly that.

But bad timing is timing nonetheless, and this is the '96 Cats and the '96 Huskers.

And the Cats just do not have the horses. Prediction No. 1: '96 Huskers 35, '96 Cats 7.

Let us, however, just dip back into my fantasy world for second. Imagine a sold-out KSU Stadium, Colston and Ochs wreaking havoc of the untested Frost and Miller surveying the field for Lockett, Running and Schwieger.

All of that, the '95 Cats, the '96 Huskers and KSU Stadium would spell a Wildcat victory and a place in the history books. Prediction No. 2: '95 Cats 24, '96 Huskers 13.

But Saturday's game will not take place in a fantasy world. It will take place on the field, where Nebraska will remind us that it will always be Nebraska.

And Nebraska will leave Cat fans wondering: "What if?"

SGA to take on Anderson Hall

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

President Jon Wefald will attempt to get his name in the news once again today.

At 4:30 p.m. today at Cico Park, Wefald will take the mound for the Anderson Hall Annihilators as they prepare to take on the Student Governing Association.

This will be the eighth meeting of the two teams, and the Annihilators lead the series 6-1.

Wefald said that to defeat SGA, the Annihilators had to bring in personnel that would help the faculty squad achieve its seventh victory.

"We can't field a team unless we get a couple of ringers in there," he said. "There are too many decrepit people here in Anderson Hall."

Among the ringers are expected to be K-State baseball coach Mike Clark, Associate Sports Information Director Dan Ballou and basketball coach Dave Campbell.

Last year, the SGA team brought in its own ringers with former K-State baseball players Dan Albrecht and Jon Albrecht, both of whom were drafted onto a minor-league baseball roster.

But Student Body Vice President Aaron Otto said bringing in ringers this year isn't going to be acceptable.

"This year is totally a student team," Otto said.

Aubrey Abbott, student senate chair, will be pitching for SGA this year.

"We had practice yesterday, and she looked really good," Otto said.

Student Body President Chris Hansen is also expected to see some time on the mound.

Otto said the SGA squad will have its own cheerleaders and has enlisted the help of a first-aid crew in case the Annihilators need emergency help.

Last year, Wefald pitched a shutout against SGA as the support behind him held the SGA bats to only two hits.

Offensively, the Annihilators shelled the SGA pitching staff, driving in 21 runs in five innings.

GRAPPLING FOR THE BALL, a KU (left) and a K-State lacrosse player play in the Donnie Tillar Lacrosse Tournament Saturday. K-State defeated KU 13-5. The lacrosse team hoped the tournament, which drew teams from as far away as Colorado, would pique interest in the unique sport of lacrosse.

The K-State lacrosse team continued its domination of the 1996 Donnie Tillar Lacrosse Classic last weekend.

In fact, the third-annual event saw the Wildcats sweep the tournament for the third consecutive year.

K-State had a lot of questions to answer heading into the tournament with several key players gone from last year. However, the Cats had one advantage on their side — emotion.

The tournament is a memorial for former K-State lacrosse coach Donnie Tillar, who died in 1991 in the Gulf War. The team members have not forgotten what Tillar meant to them.

"It feels great to win the three tournaments, and we were undefeated in doing so," Coach Curt Thurman said. "It's kind of funny, though. It's kind of a tingling feeling, like Donnie Tillar was around us. It's almost a scary feeling, like his spirit was around us, motivating us to go out and win."

K-State opened play Saturday against KU. The question of inexperience was answered quickly as the Jayhawks were dismantled 13-5.

"They did very well," Assistant Coach Jay Sweet said.

"The guys on the bench really stepped up and played hard. A lot of people think this is a hard sport to pick up, but new guys can come in and contribute by getting the ball to people who can score. What new guys lack in skill they have to replace with hustle and tenacity," he said.

K-State followed its win against KU with an 8-7 overtime victory against the Big Scary Lions from the Denver area. When the sudden-death overtime rolled around, the Cats realized what they had to do.

"The Big Scary Lions were comprised of about 50-percent KSU alumni," Sweet said.

"They were some of the best guys on the team that we ever had. We had to play hard and play basic lacrosse. We needed to win the face-off and work it around and score. Possessions are everything."

Waiting for K-State in the finals was the Kansas City Lacrosse Club. Kansas City earned a right to play for the championship after blistering KU 22-3 and then knocking off the Big Scary Lions 14-6.

Led by Phil Mandry, K-State stunned Kansas City 12-11 to claim the title. Mandry had nine of the Cats' 12 goals in the finals and was named the tournament's most valuable player for his efforts.

"This was particularly sweet because we lost to Kansas City in our league championship last spring and in the final four last year," Sweet said.

Although K-State's official season doesn't start until spring, the fall tournament played an important part of the team's year.

"We've got a lot of passion for this tournament since it is Donnie Tillar's tournament," Matt Wass de Czege, defensive captain, said.

"A lot of the guys were wearing patches that said, 'Friend, Leader, and Hero.' I didn't know him personally, but I really get an idea of who he is by being around these guys."

Fogle always knew he would be a Cat

JOHN BERGOREN
sports writer

Down-to-earth, good person, great work ethic, solid player and a quiet leader.

Those are all expressions teammates have used to describe K-State linebacker DeShawn Fogle.

Fogle

Fogle, in his senior season as a Wildcat, has contributed to the defense ever since his arrival in 1993. His contributions have helped accomplish a nine-win season every year since becoming a freshman.

As a stand out football player from Chapman, Fogle knew all along he would someday wear purple. Kansas and Oklahoma State both recruited Fogle, but they couldn't touch what K-State had to offer.

"Ever since my first visit I liked the staff, and I could tell that the players were real tight," Fogle said. "The team is very close. We don't all hang out together all the time, but when we're on the field, it's like we're family.

"It's even more close-knit, considering when you see 100 guys for four years. We'll still all be friends when we're all 80 years old."

Fogle has taken his senior role seriously this season and has made the most of it. He is second on the team with 36 tackles including one sack.

Although this is his first season back as co-defensive coordinator since he left in 1991, Coach Bob Cope said Fogle. He has been impressed with Fogle's performance.

"DeShawn has played really well," Cope said. "If you're going to be a good team, seniors have to have good games.

"He's even more of a player now than since he first got here, from what I can tell from looking at old tapes."

But second on the team in tackles isn't good enough for Fogle who thinks he still has plenty of room for improvement.

"I think I've been playing OK," Fogle said. "If I were to grade myself, I think I would give myself a C. I see myself as the glue between the front and the secondary."

Fogle's successful season thus far in 1996 might be due to the fact that he feels he has something to prove. Fogle was sidelined for the last three games of the 1994 season after an injury to his knee.

> "I made a pact with myself this summer to become a better player."
> • DESHAWN FOGLE
> K-STATE LINEBACKER

In 1995, Fogle returned from surgery to start eight games and finished tied for sixth on the team in tackles with 73. But he still thought he could do better.

"I've been really disappointed the past couple of years from injuries and all," Fogle said. "I made a pact with myself this summer to become a better player."

His dedication has helped his team earn recognition with the 10th-best total defense and the fifth-best scoring defense in the nation.

Fogle said he tries not to compare this year's defensive team with last year's defense, a squad which was ranked No. 1 in the nation at the season's end.

"I don't think about trying to be No. 1," Fogle said. "I think it's most important that our defense works on being assignment-sound."

Season tickets have students flocking to McCain box office

LILLIAN E. BEEBE
staff reporter

The McCain season has started. The posters are up, the programs are ready, and the ushers are waiting. The only thing left to think about is getting tickets.

"It's amazing how many people are buying season tickets in the last few weeks," David Frain, McCain assistant director, said.

This season's ticket sales are ahead of last year's by about 2 to 3 percent, Frain said.

The top five ticket-selling shows so far this season are "Singin' in the Rain," "The Odd Couple," The Who's "Tommy," "Reduced Shakespeare" and "Sleeping Beauty," Frain said.

No show has sold out yet, but only a third of the seats (600-700 seats), are left for "Singin' in the Rain" and "The Odd Couple," Frain said.

Nothing will sell out within the next week, Frain said. But students should think ahead about what they would like to see and where they would like to sit and purchase tickets as soon as they can.

"It's easier to sell tickets based on your preferences," Frain said.

Students should also consider the size of the group going to a performance.

"The bigger the group you are trying to seat together, the harder it is to find seats. So if you can split up, it is easier to find seating," Frain said.

The center section of the orchestra is usually the first section to sell out.

More people are purchasing tickets closer to the stage in the center section of the orchestra seating this season, he said.

McCain has widened the price difference between the orchestra and balcony seating, making it less expensive to see shows, Frain said.

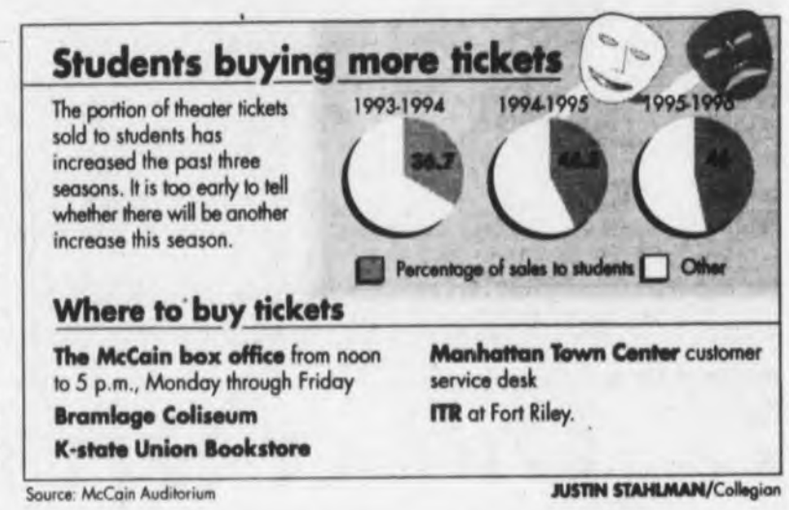
Students pay $2 less for a balcony ticket than an orchestra ticket. General-admission tickets are $4 less for balcony seating than orchestra seating. Ticket prices vary for different performances.

The response has been good, and there has been a growth in ticket sales for the lower balcony.

Student tickets are half the price of regular-admission tickets, Frain said. The price difference also applies to the Select a Series and Performance Series ticket plans.

Select a Series allows students to purchase seven or more tickets with a 10-percent discount on the student list price.

"It's a good deal, and every little bit helps. If there are more than six shows you want to go to, it helps," said Nikki Speer, senior in life sciences.



The Performance Series offers a 15-percent discount on the student list price for all the performances this season, except the Count Basie Orchestra.

"The student prices are great. Even the regular prices aren't bad, and the productions are excellent," Ryan Rostine, sophomore in advertising, said.

Student ticket sales have grown in the past three years. Students purchased 36.7 percent of total ticket sales in the 1993-94 season; 44.5 percent in the 1994-1995 season; and 46 percent in the 1995-96 season, Frain said.

It's too early to tell if there will be another increase this season, he said.

The McCain Box Office is open from noon to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Tickets can also be purchased at other outlets including Bramlage Coliseum, the K-State Student Union Bookstore, the Manhattan Town Center's customer-service desk and ITR at Fort Riley.

Women beef up education

MORE

There is a new addition to the colorful tapestry of clubs and organizations at K-State — the KSU Collegiate Cattlewomen.

The club will focus on supporting the beef industry, developing educational programs for the public and establishing relations with other professionals in the beef industry.

The national cattlewomen's organization has been around since 1952. The KSU Collegiate Cattlewomen worked with the Kansas Cattlewomen to establish a chapter at K-State. The club is affiliated with the Kansas Livestock Association.

"We help support the beef industry and promote it to the best of our abilities," said Abby Janssen, president of the club and senior in animal science and industry.

The group tried to get started last year, but it never got off the ground. There wasn't enough organization and enthusiasm, Julie Strickland, junior in agricultural journalism, said.

"This year it just all fell together," Strickland said.

The club is working mainly on establishing membership and organizing activities this year, said Becca Dikeman, vice president and junior in animal science and industry.

The club plans on sending members to the annual National Cattlemen's Beef Association convention in Kansas City and the Kansas Livestock Association convention in Wichita this winter.

Members want to dispel some of the myths and set the record straight concerning the public's view of beef, Janssen said.

The public's fear of fat has driven consumer demand toward healthier alternatives such as chicken. Research has improved the quality and consistency of beef to cater to popular desires, Janssen said.

The KSU Collegiate Cattlewomen will organize activities to help promote the beef industry and educate the public, especially children.

"Kids are naive to what's going on," Strickland said.

Members plan to go into elementary schools to educate youth about where their food products come from in a program called "There's No Such Thing as an Ag-Less Day," Dikeman said.

"It's got to come from somewhere before they get it from the supermarket," Janssen said.

Also in the works is a cookoff.

"We hope to plan an all-University beef cookoff that is open to anyone who enjoys preparing beef dishes," Janssen said. This would also function as a fundraiser for the club.

The club members are enjoying their new organization and encourage anyone interested to join. Sorry guys, girls only.

No parking pass? Bring quarters to Rec

BETH HUSTED
staff reporter

Students don't have much of a choice when it comes to parking at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Students who don't have K-State parking permits must use parking meters during the day.

Many students say they think there should be specialty parking permits for different complexes on campus.

Right now there is no specific parking pass for the Rec Complex.

"Any valid K-State parking permit will work for parking at the Rec," Lance Lunsway, manager of external operations, said.

When students petition for parking passes or other parking matters, the proposals are run through the Parking Council.

"We handle the proposals for parking issues, making policies and writing regulations, but we don't handle ticket appeals. That's a different committee," John Lambert, director of public safety, said.

He said permits for the Rec Complex are not a bad idea and Parking Services is not dead-set against them. There's just no way to monitor who buys them, and Rec Complex officials want people to be able to park there when they want to use the Rec Complex, Lunsway said.

Every year several students ask if there is a specific parking pass for the Rec Complex, usually after someone has received a ticket at the Rec Complex, Peggy Winkler, acting director for Parking Services, said.

"I usually spend about an hour and 15 minutes there when I go. It costs about 50 cents for an hour at the meters," said Ben Warta, senior in life science and preoptometry. Students don't have to pay meters in the evenings.

"The meters are sort of a joke. The Rec is set up for our use and enjoyment, and I don't want to spend the money on a parking pass," said Steve McGinn, junior in agribusiness.

Hastings now open

JASON WALLS
staff reporter

Hastings entertainment store opened the doors to it's sixth Kansas location Monday morning in Manhattan.

The new store boasts more than 70,000 books, 24,000 magazine titles, countless video rentals and a software and video game department.

Gary Smith, Hastings store manager, said he feels confident the Manhattan store will be every bit as successful as the other five Kansas locations.

"We're very excited to be here in Manhattan," Smith said.

"The college market is what we like to cater to."

Smith said he encourages local writers to contact him. Hastings will be happy to sell books in efforts to promote their work, Smith said.

Hastings is also sponsoring K-State's Society of Creative Writers by donating 25 cents for every video membership signed. They also plan to help the group with fund raising throughout the year.

The store has more than 10,000 used compact discs, the most of any Hastings. They are happy to trade or buy any CDs people would like to bring in, Smith said.

The privately owned family business, headquartered in Amarillo, Texas, started as a mall store exclusively selling music.

More recently, it has sold all mall locations to Camelot Music and initiated triple combo stores consisting of books, music and video cassettes, Smith said.

> "After six years of trying to get located in Manhattan, we could not pass this offer up."
> — GARY SMITH, STORE MANAGER FOR HASTINGS

After spending six years trying to break into the Manhattan market, they were finally able to purchase the 21,000-square-foot location on Poyntz Avenue last summer.

The building was formerly a rent to own furniture store.

Real estate large enough to accommodate a store like Hastings isn't easy to come by in Manhattan, Smith said.

"Usually in a college town, we like to be in about a 25,000-square-foot building," Smith said.

"After six years of trying to get located in Manhattan, we could not pass this offer up."

Smith said Hastings also offers discounts on all ordered items.

Hastings is planning to have book signings of local and national authors through the year.

Mark Minor, senior in advertising, works part-time at Hastings.

"The majority of employees are K-State students," Minor said. "They're doing everything right. The next wave of entertainment stores is already like Hastings."

Dear Cassie

by Cassandra Duveaux

Chewing and spitting in public: a nasty habit, according to student, Cassandra

Dear Cassandra,

As an animal science major, I have seen some gory things — animals dissected, manure everywhere, etc.

The things that gross me out more than anything is not the animals or animal by-products but the fact that everywhere I walk I have to avoid stepping in someone's tobacco spit.

What possesses those people to just walk along the sidewalk and emit the foul-smelling slimy goo from their bad habit?

And the sound they make too — don't they have any more tact than to cough up a lung in public?

I don't know of any place besides the bathroom (and some farms) where spitting in public is allowed.

Can't they just hit the john when they need to spit?

And if they don't have time for that, swallow it like a man (or woman).

Quit making fools of yourself in public!

Sincerely,

Disgusted

Dear Disgusted,

I once thought I was all-seeing and all-knowing, but the problem you address baffles even me.

The Surgeon General has repeatedly warned of the health hazards of tobacco, both chewed and smoked. Not only does it cause cancer, but it makes people stupid and insensitive.

Surgeon General's Report No. 4397702b (which I just made up) documented the adverse personality affects of tobacco usage.

There is a significant correlation between bad judgment and tobacco use.

How else can one explain people who smoke/chew upon waking up in the morning?

It's not as if tobacco is full of vitamins and minerals that help you start your day ("Skoal: Part of this Nutritious Breakfast.")

Second, tobacco tends to make people insensitive slobs, blowing their smoke into otherwise foul air, spitting their slime on the sidewalk and tarnishing the landscape with their butts (uh, their cigarette butts that is.)

Although a cure for this affliction is yet unknown, many physicians and psychologists recommend a healthy dose of shame at regular intervals.

Next time you see someone performing a tobacco-related crime against humanity, shout "That's disgusting, you slimy son-of-a-tobacco-butt," at the top of your lungs.

Although medical science cannot guarantee this action will stop an individual from perpetuating such vile acts, most agree it will make you feel much, much better.

Cassandra

plans to offer additional financial aid with the increases.

The Board then proposed that 1 percent of the 6-percent increase could be given to financial aid if a program could be developed to distribute the money on the campuses of the regents schools.

The EOF was the result.

The EOF Committee at K-State is comprised of the student body president and vice president, the chief student affairs officer, the director of financial aid and six students, including two senators, who represent diverse campus constituencies.

After proposals are submitted requesting funds, the committee has a hearing and review process, and prepares a budget. An appeal process is then available for applicants before the budget for the fund is sent to Student Senate for approval.

Otto said that normally there are 15-20 amendments to the EOF committee's proposed budget in Senate. This is due to individual senators' response to groups who want their senators to lobby for more funding for their groups.

The last step is approval from President Jon Wefald.

brought the chaplain in because they were expecting Alex to die."

In a tearful conclusion, Mallorre Dill explained how strong the ramifications of Lopez's deciding to drive affected what might have been.

"If only he had decided not to drive after a night of drinking and would have walked home like Alex did, they might have simply just bumped shoulders," she said. "Instead, Alex was hit and thrown in the air 12 to 15 feet."

Alex Dill's health has improved, although brain damage has left him with vision problems, limited coordination and slurred speech. He has been through a lot of therapy, which included learning to walk, talk and even feed himself again.

Alex Dill remained outside the courtroom by recommendation of his doctor. His mother, Sandy Dill, said stress in the courtroom could trigger a deadly seizure for her son.

"We're glad it's all over," Sandy Dill said. "As a family, we have really re-evaluated our priorities and have drawn together."

Alex Dill was surprised by the sentencing when he was told.

"I'm not sure what to think," Dill said. "The judge gave him more than any of us thought he would."

When Lopez was given the chance to speak on his behalf before sentencing, he apologized for his actions and said he hoped the Dill family would be able to forgive him.

"I am very sorry for what I have done to Alex and your family," Lopez said. "I am willing to do whatever it takes. I just wish I could take back that night that I drove."

"As Christians, we have forgiven Joe Lopez, but we will never forget him," Sandy Dill said.

During the sentencing, Judge Miller referred to between 30 and 40 letters that were written to him in reference to Alex Dill and who he was. The support from friends at K-State and his family was crucial in his recovery.

Alex Dill said he anticipates coming back to K-State either next spring or next fall to continue his education.

"It all just takes time," Dill said. "I'll be back."

The Dill family said it was thankful for all the thoughts and prayers friends from K-State had provided.

"Thanks to everyone who prayed for me. I have really learned about not taking things for granted, even my own physical ability," Dill said. "I had to learn to simply walk again."

Besides being thankful to everyone, Alex Dill maintained a sense of humor by offering advice to everyone.

"Make sure you look both ways when you cross the street," he said.

Lopez remains in custody at the Riley County jail until Judge Miller considers whether parole will be given.

removed from public use, which is not the case with the ranch.

All four delegates to the House from Kansas voted in favor of the legislation. Rep. Jan Meyers, R-Kan., was an outspoken proponent of the preserve, but neither Rep. Todd Tiahrt, R-Kan., nor Sam Brownback, R-Kan., publicly expressed support.

Gagnon said Secretary of Agriculture Dan Glickman worked many years on the preserve while he served as representative, but after redistricting, the preserve fell into Roberts' district.

Gagnon said she did not know what the legislation's chances were in the Senate.

The legislation's main proponent has been Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., who has tried for the past two years to get a bill passed in the Senate.

Michael Horak, press secretary to Kassebaum, said it is difficult to say when a similar or new piece of legislation could reach the floor of the Senate.

"The legislation has been rolled into a comprehensive parks package for consideration either today or tomorrow," Horak said. "It's difficult to anticipate when it might be considered."

Horak said the Senate will likely wrap up its session early this week, perhaps as late as Wednesday.

Horak said the tallgrass preserve was one of Kassebaum's biggest priorities before closing the session.

"Sen. Kassebaum has done everything in her power to get it passed," Horak said. "Not a week has gone by where she hasn't worked to get this legislation through."

INVASION OF THE ROACHES

STORIES BY ANDREA COREY

Creepy crawlers continue living off coattails of college housing conditions

When Jay Krause and his roommate moved in, they didn't expect to have extra roommates sharing their home and food.

Krause, junior in finance, lives in a four-apartment house, and although Krause said he and his roommate didn't see cockroaches the day they moved in, they noticed them soon afterward.

"I'm sure a lot of people have them and don't know," he said.

Krause is a prime example of what many K-State students deal with.

Krause managed to get rid of the roaches, but not without some effort.

Within a week of telling the landlord, Krause's apartment was sprayed by pest control. Krause and his roommate then fogged the apartment twice after removing everything from the cabinets.

"We pretty much had to move out," Krause said.

The apartment was also sprayed for insects three times.

Most people think roaches are disgusting, disease-carrying insects and try, as Krause did, to get rid of them as soon as possible.

And although roaches have the reputation of being dirty, Ted Hopkins, professor of entomology at K-State, said roaches are only as dirty as the people they live with.

"If they're dirty, then I guess we're dirty," he said.

Hopkins said wherever humans have gone in the world, roaches have gone with them, a sort of international hitchhiker.

"Without humans around, they wouldn't have much to feed on," he said.

Roaches have seen about 300 million years without much physical change, Hopkins said.

And although there are 3,500 species of cockroaches worldwide, most of them live in tropical areas, quietly recycling dead forest materials.

Hopkins said only three or four kinds live in Manhattan.

No pest species living in Manhattan is native because Kansas weather is simply too harsh for roaches to exist unless they are in homes with humans.

Hopkins said two species of roaches are really pests to Manhattanites, the brown-banded cockroach and the German cockroach. Both traveled here from other parts of the world on the coattails of humanity.

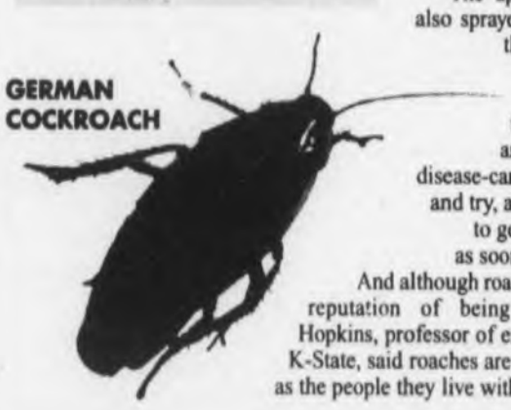
While most cockroaches are fast reproducers, both Brown-banded and German cockroaches are the kind Hopkins said he considers to be highly reproductive.

In her two- to three-month lifespan, a female German or brown-banded roach can reproduce six to seven times with 30 to 40 eggs per egg case. The numbers could be staggering, considering that there might be dozens of female roaches in one home.

"The population can build up in a house without combatting it," Hopkins said.

People such as Mitch Patterson, a licensed commercial pest controller, help keep roach populations down.

"I've opened the door into the place and had roaches fall on my hand and hat," Patterson, senior in construction science, said.



Patterson also said he's seen roaches hiding in the hinges of cabinets and coming out of drains in kitchens.

Patterson said some smaller problems can be taken care of with pesticides from stores, but others require professionals.

Extermination agenda

The following are part of the BOCA basic, Manhattan's basic city code, and outline who is responsible for exterminating roaches.

- All property owners are required to exterminate a property before renting or leasing it to anyone.
- Occupants of single-dwelling structures are responsible for extermination.
- The owner of a multi-occupancy structure or a rooming house is responsible for extermination in the public or shared areas of the building and the exterior areas. If infestation is caused by failure of an occupant to prevent infestation, the occupants are responsible for extermination.

GERMAN COCKROACH

Cleanliness key to keeping pests out

They're in your kitchen, they're in your bathroom, and getting rid of them can be almost as difficult as living with them.

They're roaches, and for every one you see, there might be 100 hiding nearby.

Steve McKinzie, owner of McKinzie Pest Control, said the best way to get rid of cockroaches is an integrated approach, using numerous methods at one time.

He said it's important to use a chemical that stays on a surface after it has been applied.

"It has a residual effect or controls cockroaches for a period of days or weeks," McKinzie said.

McKinzie also recommends people use an insect growth regulator. The regulators don't allow roaches to mature, and therefore they cannot reproduce. Gencor is the brand name for one type of growth regulator.

He added that so-called roach motels, the kind that contain bait that attracts and later poisons roaches, can be useful.

"They can be helpful for a small population," he said.

There are ways to get rid of roaches without chemicals. McKinzie said keeping living areas clean can be helpful.

A few tips McKinzie offered for keeping things clean include keeping recyclables in an enclosed container with a lid and making sure there aren't dirty dishes around for roaches to feed on.

Two urban entomologists in the Texas A&M University system, Philip J. Hamman and John Owens, have their own suggestions for good housekeeping.

In an article they wrote, "Controlling Cockroaches without Synthetic Organic Insecticides," they suggested sealing all cracks in the foundations and outside walls, storing garbage in tightly covered containers, and removing as much paper, cardboard and firewood as possible.

They also recommend storing dry pet food containers in an area other than the kitchen and washing a pet's feeding dishes daily. Trapping roaches can work well, according to Hamman and Owens.

A trap is a pint jar with petroleum jelly smeared around the inside lip, about 2 inches wide. It can also be dusted with talcum powder without the petroleum jelly. Put the jar upright in an area frequented by roaches, with bait inside. German cockroaches like banana peels, while other species like potatoes or apples.

Be sure to change the bait often, because roaches love fresh food.

MY FAVORITE WORKOUT

Dr. Kathy Grunewald, professor of nutrition with the department of foods and nutrition, is a familiar sight and an inspiration to early morning exercisers at the Peters Recreation Complex -- and has been for more than 17 years! "I love the variety the Recreation Complex allows students, especially the weight room, indoor tracks and dance/combatives room," Kathy said. Her workouts include weight training, stationary bike exercise and karate practice on alternating days. Kathy dedicates 8-9 hours a week to her routine and exercises 6 of every 7 days.

Who's Who at the Rec

Jasonomarr Johnson has been an exercise leader at the Rec Complex since last summer. Growing up in Los Angeles, CA, Jason came to KSU to study biology. After graduation in May '97, he would like to become a pilot in the Air Force or may continue at KSU in pursuit of a graduate degree in kinesiology. Jason became involved in aerobics exercise based on a bet by a girl, attended his first class last spring, and now instructs step and interval classes 3 days a week! To quote Jason's philosophy: "Every day, every way, get a little better...hey! BTB (Be The Best)!"

Sherri Reishus, building supervisor, has worked at the Rec Complex since she first became a student at KSU 4 years ago. Sherri originates from Wakeeney, KS, and will graduate with a psychology degree in December. She plans to continue her education in the field of occupational therapy. Sherri said, "When I think of the time I've worked at the Recreation Complex, I think of the experience I've gained in dealing with lots of folks and of all the friends I've made here." But not just friends! Sherri was married this summer to another Rec Complex student employee, Matt Reishus.

Nutrition Notes

In order to keep your metabolism at higher levels it may be important to eat frequent, small meals. This gives your body a chance to metabolize those calories efficiently. Your body is then able to use these calories for energy instead of storing them as fat.

Fitness Facts

For every 10 pounds of body weight you support by leaning on the handrails of a stairclimbing machine, you burn 7 percent fewer calories.

Budget cut haunts legislator

SPEED

▶ Opponent confronts Rep. Kent Glasscock with allegations he did not stop the legislature from cutting the regents' budget by $4.1 million.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

The 1995 state legislative session and the loss of nearly $1 million for K-State is still haunting local legislators.

The legislative process leading up to the passage of the fiscal year 1996 Kansas Board of Regents Institutions budget cut Gov. Bill Graves' proposed Regents budget by $4.1 million. Taken directly from K-State, which includes K-State-Salina, the agricultural extension programs, and the College of Veterinary Medicine, was an amount totaling $968,481.

Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said he remembers the 1995 Legislature well.

"That session began with the House leadership having the stated goal of cutting $200 million out of the governor's proposed budget," Glasscock said. "Those cuts could not be done without crippling higher education and K-through-12 education in the state."

"They found out it couldn't be done," he said. "We spent the whole session beating back attacks to cut state services."

Glasscock said he tried to find the votes to restore the House cuts while the legislation was still on the floor of the House, but he couldn't get the support he needed to pass an amendment.

Glasscock's account of failing to muster votes was the point of allegations released by his opponent, Democrat Robert Littrell, a local attorney.

A written statement released by Littrell claims Glasscock had the necessary votes to pass the amendment and restore the funding to the regents, but did not use them at the request of Graves.

"I don't know what happened in Topeka, but from what I can see, this statement of facts occurred," Littrell said. "I would not have made it an issue if I had not believed it to be true.

"It's an issue of trustworthiness — representing the district's interests and not someone else's," he said.

Littrell confronted Glasscock with the allegations in a face-to-face interview with the Manhattan Mercury Tuesday afternoon.

"He had no idea my response was coming," Littrell said. "His response was

The Academic Assistance Center has hired a new person to help minority students get adjusted to K-State.

Candi Pitts, an academic skills specialist, said she tracks students to retain them and make sure they graduate from the University.

As a part-time employee at the center, she works with minority students who are on academic warning, incoming freshmen and transfer students.

"I want students to feel comfortable and help them find the resources available to them," she said.

Pitts sent out letters to 500 students introducing herself and sharing her background. She has had personal contact with more than 60 students this year. Now she is calling students whom she has not yet seen and is trying to schedule appointments with them.

"Response has been really good from the initial letter sent out," Judy Lynch, associate director of the center, said. "It's obvious that some students have been waiting for someone to help them."

David Lee, freshman in business administration, went to the center because it was harder to stay disciplined in college than in high school, and his note-taking skills were poor.

The Commission on Presidential Debates have selected three K-State faculty members to participate in DebateWatch '96, a national program to boost public awareness of presidential and vice presidential candidates.

David Procter, associate professor of speech communication; Sue Stanfield, instructor of speech communication; and Charles Griffin, associate professor of speech communication, will conduct groups of 12 community participants who will watch the presidential and vice presidential debates, and then discuss them without hearing any media analysis.

"The purpose of DebateWatch '96 is to increase political participation at the grassroots level," Procter said. "The way to do that is to get people talking about it."

The groups will discuss their responses to the candidates, including how the candidates handled issues, as well as how they looked and sounded.

Festival promoting health closes Lafene, raises student awareness

KARI BROWN
staff reporter

Lafene Health Center will be closed for the Fall Festival of Health and will not accept appointments during the carnival so students can become better acquainted with the staff.

The festival will be in the Courtyard behind Lafene from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today.

The carnival promotes health and interaction with students, Reita Currie, Lafene health and education promoter, said.

Lafene Health Center sponsors the carnival every year in the fall semester.

"We want the health center to be seen as a quality, caring and program responsive to the needs of the community," Lannie Zweimiller, Lafene director, said.

Activities throughout the day include carnival-style games and informational health booths. Every department will have a display with its particular programs and areas of service, he said.

As part of the public relations and awareness project, staff members will be available to answer questions and distribute pamphlets about Lafene services.

There will also be drawings for prizes, said Amy Markle, Student Health Advisory Committee member and sophomore in nutritional science.

Not everyone knows about the medical and counseling services on campus.

RACISM the experiment

Speaker addresses need for society to see color

STORY BY AMY LAGRONE

"In a minute you are going to want to take back that applause," Jane Elliott said as she stepped to the microphone in a packed Forum Hall Tuesday night. She said most of the audience would hate her by the time she finished.

Elliott, a former grade-school teacher, began her crusade against racism and discrimination one day after the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr. She took her classroom of all-white third-graders and put them face-to-face with the reality of racism.

She wanted her students to actually feel racism. This is when the Blue-Eye, Brown-Eye experiment began. The day became a life-changing experience for the children and for Elliott.

Elliott told the blue-eyed students they were smarter, nicer, cleaner and deserved more privileges than the students with brown eyes.

On the second day of the experiment, Elliott reversed the situation. What she discovered was amazing. Whoever was on top was not only better-behaved, but also more likely to learn. One dyslexic boy learned how to read for the first time.

Elliott said she had no idea how much effect those two days would have on her life.

"If I had known what was going to happen to my family because of this exercise, I would not have done it," she said.

She said she has been called a nigger-lover more than a few times.

Elliott said all people are racists, whether they choose to believe it or not.

"I am a racist," she said. "If you want to see another racist, turn to the person on your right. Now look at the person on your left."

Elliott stressed that the world doesn't need a color-blind society, but rather a society that recognizes color.

She said people are conditioned to the myth of white superiority.

"I may not be able to change your attitude," she said, "but I can challenge it."

K-State students sat quietly listening and occasionally laughing at Elliott's crude bluntness. Tension filled the hall as she discussed discrimination based on sex, race, height, weight and age.

"I'm very glad she was here," Tameka Thompson, sophomore undecided, said. "She really opened my eyes."

Thompson also said she believed the lecture might have bothered some people. But, she said, there were a lot of things said that needed to be said.

Matt Jones, junior in business management and Union Programing Council Issues and Ideas Committee chairman, was responsible for bringing Elliott to K-State. He said he believes people might have changed their opinions about discrimination after listening to the lecture.

Elliott invited students to write her letters if they were mad about her lecture, but she said they could not use paper, the alphabet or numbers if they were true racists, because those things were invented by people of color.

She also said to never tell African Americans to go back where they came from, because they were here 15-19 generations before white people were.

"Differences are very valuable," Elliott said. "Start recognizing them and appreciating them. They are what make up our world."

SPEAKING TO a full house, Jane Elliott, creator of the Blue-Eye/Brown-Eye exercise, delivers a speech titled "Are You a Racist?" Tuesday evening in Forum Hall. Elliott's exercise deals with classifying groups on the basis of physical characteristics over which they have no control.

NATION WORLD

• U.S. VOTES TO LIFT SANCTIONS AGAINST YUGOSLAVIA. The U.N. Security Council voted unanimously Tuesday to lift sanctions imposed against Yugoslavia in 1992, a sign of international recognition of Serbia's role in helping to bring peace to the Balkans. The council suspended the sanctions in November after Serbia, which forms the bulk of what remains of Yugoslavia, signed the peace accord last year that ended 3-1/2 years of fighting in Bosnia. Tuesday's action formally removes the sanctions. The measures were imposed because of Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic's role in fomenting Serb separatist movements in neighboring Croatia and Bosnia as part of his dream of a Greater Serbia.

• U.S. ENVOY TO CAMBODIA PLEDGES FLOOD RELIEF. Floods caused by seasonal monsoons have killed more than 80 people in four Southeast Asian countries, forced thousands from their homes and devastated rice crops. In Cambodia, where 14 people died and another 1.3 million people were affected by flooding, the U.S. Embassy donated $25,000 for emergency relief. Rice, sandbags and oil were rushed to northern provinces and the capital, Phnom Penh. More than 568,000 acres of flooded rice crops may be destroyed.

• LEYLAND TALKING WITH MARLINS. Jim Leyland talked with the Florida Marlins again Tuesday about their managerial job offer but has yet to say yes, team president Don Smiley said. On Monday, a source close to Marlins owner Wayne Huizenga described negotiations with Leyland as a done deal.

• IRVIN FREE TO RETURN TO COWBOYS. Dallas Cowboys wide receiver Michael Irvin's five-game suspension by the NFL over his involvement in a drug and sex scandal ended with the Cowboys' 23-19 victory over Philadelphia on Monday night. Dallas is off this week, so the first practice is set for Thursday.

• NCAA REJECTS FSU APPEAL. The NCAA rejected Florida State's appeal of a one-year probation Tuesday, noting the University committed a significant violation by failing to adequately monitor sports agents on its campus. The NCAA Infractions Appeals Committee ruled against Florida State on each of three issues raised by the school.

• UMPIRES AGREE TO WORK PLAYOFFS THROUGH THURSDAY. Baseball umpires took the field as scheduled for the start of the postseason today after withdrawing their threat to boycott the playoffs over the Roberto Alomar spitting incident. Replacement umpires who were on standby at Camden Yards were sent home and the regular crew arrived at the ballpark about five minutes before the scheduled 1:07 p.m. start. The regulars umps agreed to work at least through Thursday as part of an arrangement today in federal court in Philadelphia.

• STOYANOVICH PLEADS NO-CONTEST TO DUI CHARGES. Kansas City Chiefs kicker Pete Stoyanovich pleaded no-contest to a drunken-driving charge stemming from a July 1994 run-in with the Florida Highway Patrol. Stoyanovich, who was with the Miami Dolphins when he was arrested, returned Monday to South Florida to enter his plea in Broward County Court.

• ORIOLES DEFEAT INDIANS 10-4. Brady Anderson opened Baltimore's first playoff appearance in 13 years with a first-inning shot while B.J. Surhoff hit two home runs and Bobby Bonilla added a grand slam as the Orioles beat the Cleveland Indians 10-4 Tuesday in the opener of their first-round AL playoff series.

• CARDINALS DEFEAT PADRES 3-1. Gary Gaetti hit a three-run home run in the first inning and Todd Stottlemyre pitched a solid six 2-3 innings Tuesday as the Cardinals opened the NL playoffs with a 3-1 win over the San Diego Padres.

CITY STATE

• LOCKDOWNS CONTINUE AT LANSING. Lockdowns were partially lifted Tuesday at state prisons in Lansing and Hutchinson after disturbances stemming from complaints over the new food service. Protests began last week at the prisons in Lansing, Hutchinson and Norton.

The lockdowns ordered Monday at Lansing and Hutchinson came after protests escalated there, with prisoners breaking glass, throwing objects and setting fire to clothing, toilet tissue and bedding. At Lansing, 900 inmates in maximum security remained in lockdown. The other 600 inmates, housed in the medium-security unit, were allowed to attend meals and report to work and other programs.

• ADOPTIONS SERVICES PRIVATIZED. Lutheran Social Service and 13 other private agencies will help find good homes for these and other Kansas children who have been taken away from their birth parents. On Tuesday, Kansas became the first state to turn over to the private sector the responsibility of finding families for kids in state custody. The change should help children find adoptive parents faster, officials said at a Wichita news conference.

As part of the Kansas Adoption Network, Lutheran Social Service and 13 other private agencies it has hired will focus only on placing children in permanent homes. The network receives $13,556 for each child it handles — about what the state would have spent to put the child in a permanent home.

Public library gets go-ahead for expansion with 4-1 vote

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

The Manhattan City Commission voted 4-1 Tuesday night to accept a bid on a project that would expand the Manhattan Public Library.

The expansion project has been in the planning stages since 1992.

The commission originally approved about $2 million for the project, but by the time bids were opened last summer, the lowest bid received was about $1 million more than the city had allocated.

The difference in estimates was attributed to inflation and an increase in the construction market in the last few years.

At the last Commission meeting Sept. 17, it authorized city administration to negotiate with the low bidder to try to reduce unnecessary items in the plans to help reduce costs.

The city administration was able to work with the architect and trim about $150,000 from the cost of the project.

Commissioner Edith Stunkel said she opposed accepting the bid because she felt there could be more cost-trimming in the project and the remaining $900,000 was still more than budget.

"A million-dollar oops doesn't set with me well," Stunkel said about the mistake in the cost estimate.

Commissioner Steve Hall said he agreed with Stunkel's concern about the mistake in the estimate, but he also said the project has been in planning for too long and it is time to move on with the project.

Hall also said there has been a great deal of work in trying to fix this problem and it wouldn't be efficient to delay the project any further.

The commission also approved the acceptance of a $36,000 grant from the Kansas Department of Commerce and Housing to assist Manhattan's three emergency shelters.

The commission considered the 1997 budget and marketing calendar from the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and approved an amendment accommodating the addition of signs for the new Spaghetti Jack's restaurant to the development plan of the Wal-Mart shopping center.

Z-Bar preserve director speaks about protecting tallgrass prairie

TARA WRAY
staff reporter

K-State's Parks and Recreation Management Club had a guest speaker Monday night.

Angie Hummel, assistant preserve director of the Z-Bar/Spring Hill Ranch, visited with club members about the Chase County Ranch.

"The Z-Bar/Spring Hill Ranch is roughly 10,894 acres of virgin tallgrass prairie," Hummel said. "We offer private tours, a 1-3/4-mile hiking trail open sunrise to sunset."

Hummel said the Z-Bar/Spring Hill Ranch has been the focal point for controversy lately.

"Initial fears were that the government would come in and take more property by imminent domain," she said. "Hopefully the power we have in the Senate will overcome this obstacle."

Hummel said the Omni Parks and Public Lands Act, which is responsible for the Z-Bar/Spring Hill Ranch's becoming a tallgrass-prairie national preserve, passed through the House of Representatives Sunday.

Now the legislation must make its way through the U.S. Senate before being signed by President Bill Clinton.

If the bill is signed into law, it will mandate that the government be allowed to own no more than 180 acres of the preserve.

The remaining acreage of the Z-Bar/Spring Hill Ranch is privately owned by the National Park Trust, a private land conservancy.

Surrounding landowners have recently voiced concerns about the park's accessibility to the public in relation to their privately owned land.

"People are afraid of strangers' coming into their community," Hummel said. "We try to show them that visitors of the ranch are beneficial to their area."

Hummel mentioned the many openings for student involvement at the tallgrass prairie preserve.

"I feel that at the Z-Bar/Spring Hill there are many opportunities for students," Hummel said. "There are internships, practicum programs and many volunteer activities offered."

The volunteer base at the ranch is made up of about 160 people, and Hummel said the volunteers are relied upon heavily during open houses, which are the first Monday of every month.

"The Z-Bar is a great place to network," she said. "Volunteering is a great way to get your foot in the door."

CNS offers range of services

▪ Consultants do everything from repairing hard drives to curing viruses.

BRANDI HERTIG
staff writer

The sounds of clanging phones and the clicking of fingertips on computer keyboards fill Fairchild 009A, where Computing and Network Services is housed.

Students and faculty might not know CNS provides a variety of free computing services.

If students have problems with software on their computer, they can bring the hard drive to CNS. The consultants there have done numerous repairs, from reformatting virus-infected software to installing the CNS Network Toolkit.

CNS also offers on-site repair for faculty who have an interdepartmental request and offers diskette repair for diskettes that have been damaged.

However, it can't recover everybody's stuff, said Ralph Wasmer, manager of the Computing Information Center.

CNS also provides computer users with copies of the latest virus protection if users bring in their own diskettes. Diskettes can also be disinfected at CNS.

CNS hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. Computer users can also make use of the CNS phone tree to reach consultants who can answer their computing questions.

After dialing 532-7722, callers are greeted with six options to best suit their needs. The options range from hearing a pre-recorded message of the most frequently asked questions to talking with a live consultant.

Callers can also opt to leave a voice-mail message. A consultant will return the call, usually within 24 hours.

Users can also send their questions via e-mail to (consult@ksu.edu).

CNS has four to five consultants on duty at a time. With about 23,800 computer users on campus, there's about one consultant per 5,000 users, Wasmer said.

"We do a pretty good job on getting things back to people," he said.

Many of the problems people bring to CNS are rooted in human error, not computer error. Sometimes the mistake is as simple as users' forgetting their passwords and continually putting the wrong one in.

"We change quite a few passwords," Matt Bechtold, a CNS consultant, said.

Another mistake Bechtold said users make is confusing their Telecom user-ID and password with their CNS user-ID and password.

As far as safety of e-mail accounts is concerned, Wasmer recommends users change their password frequently.

Also, if students receive offensive e-mail, they should call CNS. The consultants will be able to give them information on how to document the harassment, Wasmer said.

IN OUR OPINION

Enthusiasm is one thing; acting idiotic is another

Once again it is time to take up the gauntlet and meet the Cornhuskers on the field of honor.

For the first time in living memory, we face an already-defeated Nebraskan juggernaut.

Go Cats.

WHY WE CARE

During the K-State-Nebraska game, fans should scream, whoop and holler for our team, but let's not embarass ourselves or our University.

However, let's try to remember this weekend to put a hold on our natural exuberance and distance ourselves from a few of those actions which, although fun at the time, are not really comparable to cheering our guts out for the great team we've got out there.

After we win, let's not tear down the goal posts this time. Those things are expensive.

When a player on either team is injured, let's not abuse him by yelling gimp.

Besides the physical pain, the embarrassment of getting hurt down there on the field with thousands of fans watching is hard enough to bear without getting a lot of abuse on top of it.

If you think you can handle the pain of a 200-pound guy flying at you at top speed, maybe you should take his place on the field.

Certain fans who have indulged in certain kinds of liquid refreshment have been known to release their spare liquid in front of small children. We strongly advise against this.

We wouldn't want this happening in front of our younger siblings, would we?

And speaking of liquids, let's not throw any containers or PowerBars at our band or at anyone else.

Thrown objects can cause serious injury.

And finally, although yelling and screaming is a fine old football tradition, we don't need to openly abuse our opposite numbers from Nebraska.

When we defeat them, they will be feeling bad enough.

K-State has a great reputation for good teams, probably the fastest growing such reputation in the history of football.

Unfortunately, we the fans have not often enjoyed a similar good name.

So let's show Nebraska that this year's Cats and fans are better than anything they've ever encountered.

Technology allows anonymity, but there are still rules of etiquette

MY

Russell FORTMEYER

Shall we meet for coffee?

If each columnist could meet their readers for coffee and conversation instead of writing a column, perhaps the world would be more genteel.

But one can't meet everyone. Hence, the advent of writing columns, making telephone calls and using e-mail. One could accuse these developments of having helped to create the sense of anonymity and isolation many of us have experienced at times.

I'm sure my ancestors experienced the same thing in the late 19th century with the invention of the telephone. With the telephone, people can anonymously say practically anything to you, unless you pay for Caller ID.

The biggest difference between telephoning and e-mail, is with the telly, you actually have to say the words. This may not seem like something to wrinkle your pants over, but compared to the ease at which letters, words and sentences flow from a keyboard, speaking your mind is still out of reach for a lot of us.

For instance, I express many of my feelings through my writing, for example this column. It's practically effortless for me to structure a column around various points to arrive at a conclusion, but to do the same in public at a podium would not be harder for me. However, if I was offered a public forum in the K-State Student Union Courtyard on a regular basis, I'd take it — just as long as I could throw a few song and dance numbers into the show.

The folks over at KSDB-FM 91.9's "A Purple Affair" talk show are more or less using a phone that broadcasts to everyone's house, so they are afforded some anonymity which is probably reflected in some of the wacky, off-kilter things they say. Fortunately for us, we can call in and express our own feelings just as we can write letters to the editor at the Collegian.

Complete anonymity is one of the reasons the Internet has become so popular. It allows us to forget our inhibitions and visit sites for information we may not ask for in a library or a bookstore. Columnist note: the Tori Spelling worship page is at http://www.cldc.howard.edu/~moebr/tori.html

And e-mail, although not anonymous, allows one the opportunity to send comments without ever having to meet the receiver. Names are exchanged, but faces are not. Comments are made, but real relationships are not.

Sometimes, comments can be misconstrued since there is no real emotion conveyed through syntax and computer fonts, although one can use punctuation and all-caps for very base expressions. E-mailers have found other ways to express mood, such as the creation of smiley faces, :).

A good rule of thumb for writing an e-mail would be to ask yourself: Could I say this in person? With close friends, I think one can bend the rules because they at least know your personal style and method of delivery — they know this from verbally communicating with you since you've been friends, not from written forms.

Even people who have been pen pals for years eagerly anticipate the moment when they can meet in person because there is a sense that until this is done, you don't truly know each other.

It may be premature to say a strictly e-mail relationship is inferior to a conventional one, but there are obvious disadvantages of not enjoying similar experiences together, the emotional jumps of conversation and physical gestures.

In verbal conversation, when you snidely reply to a friend's comment and, not hearing you, they ask you to repeat it, you rarely do. You consider it unworthy to take time to repeat what was a petty comment in the first place. It's the same with e-mail.

Just as there is rude conversation, there is rude e-mail. Rude e-mail is not only very bad etiquette, which is a lost battle, but a little creepy. If one doesn't take the time to express the very same feelings in person, a petty, hastily-written e-mail is only a cop out. Why bother writing at all?

It's a shame we can't use e-mail for purely enlightened reasons. With every new technology, there are bound to be outcomes unanticipated.

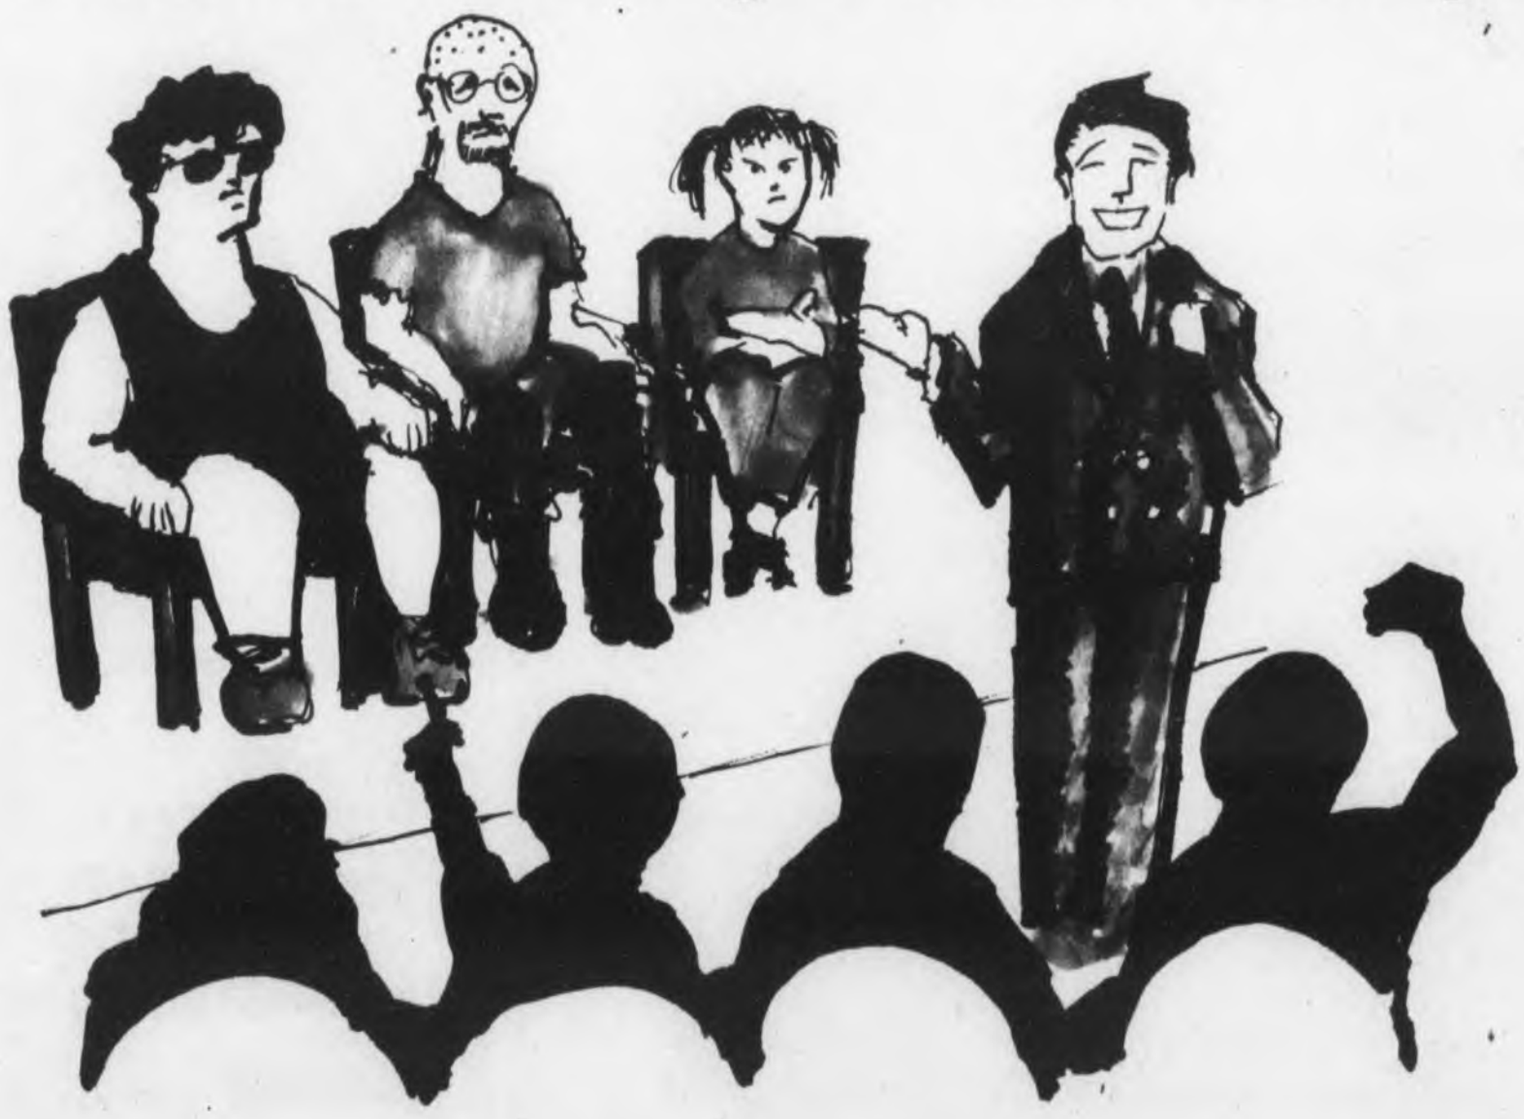
I'm not an anti-technology greenie, but I'm also not the first one to say our current technological and communication breakthroughs don't strangely parallel the industrial revolution and monopolization of the country in the late 1890s. Andrew Carnegie meets Bill Gates.

I'm pro-technology. So much so that I think all K-State students should be required to open an e-mail account. I was shocked when in an engineering course, the professor asked how many of us had e-mail accounts and actually used them. Very few of us raised our hands.

So, the professor decided to send all homework assignments out over a LISTSERV, forcing the class to get e-mail. Pretty slick.

The University needs to do more with incoming freshman to introduce them to the computer community that exists on campus. New freshman should have an account, and maybe a workshop on Internet skills, awaiting them at orientation over the summer.

I remember some of the professors I had my freshman year. I would have loved to have become as personally distant from the majority of them as possible.



By incorporating the entire campus into e-mail, the University could alert us of news and scheduling changes via computer — similar to many other universities.

We're lucky, especially in the academic world (hint: free access) to have the opportunity to develop our own perspectives and network of acquaintances with such a user-friendly technology. I remember when my Apple II Plus could barely run "Frogger," let alone allow me to make a friend in France.

Talk shows present the last resort for the mentally tired

MY

Nikola Maria ZYTKOW

The lady with the dragon tattoo should not be wearing spandex.

I know this. The studio audience knows this. But still they greet her with passionate applause as she struts her stuff, all 280 pounds of it, on stage. And why shouldn't they? She recently lost 90 pounds, and she's loving her new bod.

Next on her list of things to do is shedding her dead-beat boyfriend.

"Go 'head, girlfriend," Ricki Lake encourages her.

"Amen sister," I say out loud to the TV set in front of me.

Thank goodness it's three in the morning, and there's no one around to witness me at my worst. I'm sprawled out on the couch, with the remote in one hand and a box of Lucky Charms in the other, indulging in the most brainless activity known to humans — watching sleazy, scandalous talk shows.

Click.

"Con Artist Casanovas: Rip-off Romeos Women Can't Resist," is on Geraldo.

Click.

"I Have an Embarrassing Video of You ... Sorry Sucker, I'm Not Giving It Back!" is on Ricki Lake.

Click.

And there's "Men Who Use Their Babies as Chick Magnets," on Montel Williams.

OK, so it's not exactly CNN or PBS. But after hours of wracking my brain with the intricacies of the French Revolution, macroeconomics and the periodic table, all I want is pure, unadulterated ignorance.

Yes, even the most intelligent of minds needs the occasional break. Some people escape by gunning down innocent little aliens as in "Doom" the video game. Others bury their noses in cheesy romance novels, the ones with Fabio on the cover, or flip through the pages of the National Enquirer or, worse yet, Dennis Rodman's new book.

I prefer real-life soap operas.

That's right, I want to lay there in a sluggish stupor and find out why Chuck wears his wife's panties, why Elena has 15 personalities, or why Billy only likes to date virgins.

The dumber the topic, the better. After all, if I'm going to watch trash, it had better be the worst of the worst. Give me Montel, Ricki, Geraldo, Sally, Jenny, Tempestt and Maury. But please, no Oprah. With her pledge not to deal with dirt, she's a bit too tame for my taste.

For those of you who haven't had a chance to catch one of these circus acts, you've missed out.

The ignorance on these shows is astounding. Where else do you find people who have traveled thousands of miles to dump someone in front of millions of viewers or to reveal — "Surprise, I'm a 13-year-old prostitute"?

And unlike shows like "Melrose Place," where missing one episode can mean missing a marriage, divorce or affair, the talk-show format does not require regular viewing to stay on top of things.

There are four basic components of a talk show.

1. The audience. This group of verbally challenged, self-proclaimed psychologists with the lowest IQs possible are proof that man evolved from apes. This collective body of idiots clap in the face of stupidity, boo the bad guys, whoop at large-breasted girls with tight shirts, and when all else fails just chant "Go Ricki, Go Ricki!"

They are always ready to share their wisdom: "Well Ricki, my name is Kiki from Kansas, and I just wanted to say," as she starts pointing to panel members one by one, "You're a closet homo. You need to do something with that hair. And girl, what kind of gold digger are you? Please, you can't even afford a decent pair of pantyhose." The audience then busts out in thunderous applause.

2. The host. Hosts are required by law to ask stupid questions like: "So how do you feel about your wife having an affair with another woman?" or "What do you want to say to your teen-age daughter who just told you she's been worshiping the devil?"

3. The panel. It is critical that these individuals have as limited a vocabulary as possible. They must have a history of mental disease, hate almost every member of their family, and resort to physical violence at any point in the show. They are often identified by a format similar to this: Heidi, a hermaphrodite from Hawaii.

4. The noted psychologist. this pseudo Ph.D, who probably has a hoax diploma, is quick to share helpful advice like "Killing your mom is not the solution," or "You two should probably seek some counseling," to a woman who just found out her husband is gay after 30 years of marriage.

Here are the top-5 reasons people watch these shows:

1. When life isn't treating you right, you can seek comfort in the fact that there are others in an even worse predicament. Maybe you didn't do so well on that chemistry test, but at least your mother didn't sleep with your boyfriend, get pregnant, and then tell you you're going to have a new baby brother.

2. We spend our lives making sound, logical decisions. It's refreshing to watch testimonials of people who make important choices based on the Psychic Friends Network "My Psychic Friend Changed My Life." These people switch jobs or get pregnant based on a phone conversation with a woman dressed in a mumu, chewing gum and painting her nails.

3. The shows are a motivating factor for staying in college. You don't want to end up like Joe, the gigolo who is supported by 10 different women. Or do you?

4. They offer free advice that could come in handy some day. How do you get rid of a a bum roommate? Tune into "I Hate Living With You ... Guess What, I'm Moving, And You're Not Coming With Me!"

How do you deal with a possible arsonist? Try watching "I'm Afraid My Sister Will Burn Down the House."

5. If you feel you've led a sheltered life, talk shows can be the perfect introduction to the dark side of humanity. Witness program episodes entitled "Mom, I'm Committing the Crimes, But You Have To Do The Time ... And That Won't Stop Me!" and "My Father Kidnapped Me and Hid Me From the World."

WARNING: This is only a temporary escape. You have to know where to draw the line. You'll know you're close to that point when you start to relate to the panel members or wonder if there's a psychic friend out there just for you. In my case, it's when I start talking to the television.

At that point I simply say, "Girl, stop the madness!" I hit the power button and return back to the world of the worldly — the world of Shakespeare, Freud and Einstein.

Professor speaks on security issues in Eastern Europe

ALIESA GOOD
staff reporter

One of Poland's leading political scientists shared his thoughts and expertise regarding the security situation in Russia and Eastern Europe Tuesday on the K-State campus.

Longin Pastusiak presented the first lecture this year for the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee Visiting Scholar Lecture Series.

"The lecture series gives different departments the opportunity to showcase scholars that are brought to campus," said Matt Jones, interim chairperson of UPC issues and ideas and junior in business management.

> "In Poland, we believe it is very realistic that we will be a member of NATO by 1999."
> • LONGIN PASTUSIAK
> POLITICAL SCIENTIST

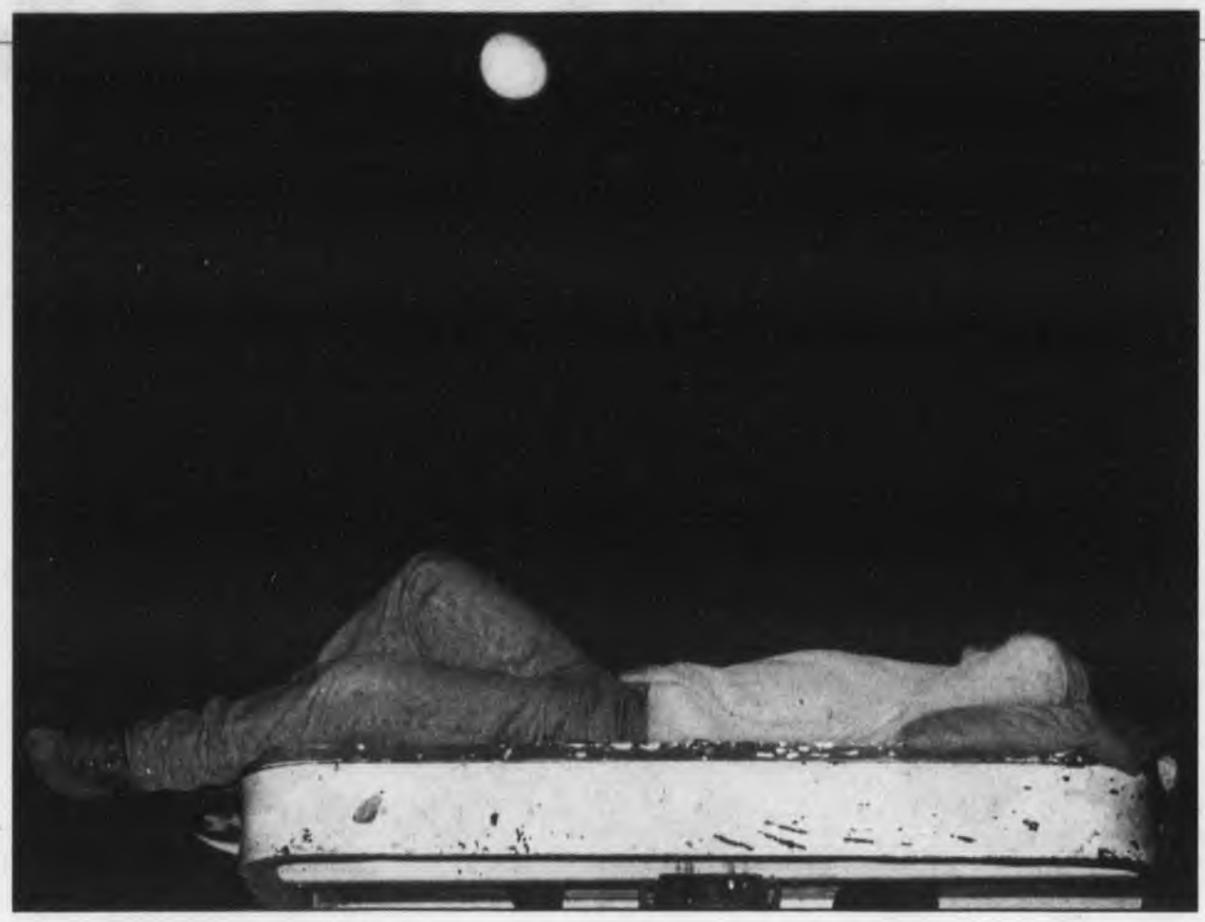
Pastusiak has been a member of the Polish Parliament since 1991. In 1993 he was appointed vice chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Polish Parliament. He also serves as the head of the Polish delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly.

He said the issue of security should be important to everyone because there is a new Europe but no European international order. He would like to change that.

"For the first time in the history of mankind, a country, or group of countries, will change their social, political, economic situation by ways other than a revolution," Pastusiak said.

There are desirable and undesirable options to solving the security situation in Poland and other countries. Pastusiak said membership into the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or joining the Western European Union would be desirable. Proclaiming neutrality or continuing status quo would be undesirable.

The people in Poland believe that European security should be based on three pillars, he said. They want a gradual, clear and open NATO enlargement that would exclude no one. They would like to further relations of enlarged NATO and countries that aren't admitted and to strengthen European institutions.



"In Poland, we believe it is very realistic that we will be a member of NATO by 1999," Pastusiak said.

The Russians are opposed to Poland's joining NATO because they feel they will be isolated, Pastusiak said.

Svetlana Kulikova, graduate student in mass communications, attended the lecture.

"I have mixed feelings about the lecture because I am Russian. I understand Poland's feeling of insecurity but also understand why Russia is opposed to Poland joining NATO," Kulikova said.

Pastusiak is an author, educator and statesman. He has written more than 40 books. Among these are "American Presidents and Polish Affairs," "Poles and the West" and "Chicago: Portrait of a City." He has also written more than 600 articles in various journals.

Pi Kaps raise awareness 12 feet off the ground

DAVE KATZER
staff reporter

Each year, Pi Kappa Phi fraternity tries to raise awareness of the severely handicapped by sitting on a pole. The annual pole-sit behind the K-State Student Union this week will keep members 12 feet off the ground for 100 hours.

Founded in 1977, PUSH America was formerly known as People Understanding the Severely Handicapped.Since 1980, the Pole-Sit has been used to raise money and awareness for PUSH America, an organization founded by Pi Kappa Phi that benefits people with disabilities.

The Pi Kaps raised $4,000 in total funds last year for PUSH America, including $500 with the Pole-Sit fundraiser, and was ranked in the top 20 of all chapters in PUSH America participation.

The Pole-Sit isn't just for raising money, Jeff Bullok, senior in mechanical engineering, said.

"It's more to raise awareness than to raise dollars," he said.

Every member of the fraternity is required to either sit on the pole or sit at the information table. About nine hours of participation per member is required. Some members even spend the night on the pole.

"We have people spend all night up here. They usually tie themselves to the platform so they don't fall off," Clint Meredith, freshman in architectural engineering, said.

The activity began Monday at 8 a.m. and will conclude 100 hours later at noon on Friday.

"People walk by, see us sitting on a pole, and see it as a sign of commitment," Ryan Johnson, freshman in animal science, said.

The pole-sitting activity is unique to the K-State chapter.

"Each chapter does their own thing, but PUSH America has really gone well throughout the nation," Bullok said.

Fraternity members also participate in other projects for PUSH America. Play-unit construction for children with disabilities is an annual project. Representatives from the K-State chapter traveled to Denver last year to assist in construction of playgrounds.

"Basically, we have Give-a-Push weeks where there is a need. We build special playgrounds and things for handicapped children," Johnson said.

Cats bring Big 12 show to Ahearn

■ K-State's volleyball squad will face KU tonight at 7 at Ahearn Field House.

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

After splitting matches last weekend, defeating Colorado and falling to Nebraska, the K-State volleyball team resumes Big 12 play against Kansas at 7 tonight at Ahearn Field House. The Wildcats will attempt to improve their record to 14-2 with a win.

Coach Jim Moore said even with the loss to Nebraska his team is still in good shape in the Big 12 race.

"The loss to Nebraska doesn't kill us," Moore said. "Winning both of the games would have put us in the driver's seat in the conference race, but going to Colorado and Nebraska in the same weekend is the most difficult road trip in the Big 12."

After the Nebraska loss, Moore said, he and the team were pretty upset.

"We were not very happy," Moore said.

"The team was mad, and I was mad. I probably have never been so mad after a match.

"I wasn't mad at the players. I was mad at the loss."

That madness might fuel the fire tonight against the Jayhawks. K-State has won the last two meetings with Kansas and might be out to prove something at the Jayhawks' expense.

"Our first loss to Ohio State taught us a lesson," Moore said. "The loss to Nebraska, I think, taught us that we need to play harder on every play. Physically, I think we could have beat Nebraska, but mentally we couldn't contend."

How the Wildcats play tonight will be a character test for the team.

"Teams either do two things after a loss," Moore said. "They either get up and go, or they roll over and die. We won't die."

Tonight's match is K-State's first-ever chance to host a Big 12 opponent. Moore said his team will be primed to play the Jayhawks.

"We're looking forward to playing at home in front of the fans," Moore said. "We're hoping for a real big crowd. If we could improve on last year's, that would be great.

"I think we want to play real well tonight. We want to execute on the mistakes we've been making."

the Duke of Wagner Field

story by Dan Lewerenz

Like most former football players, John McGuire had lost track of his old high-school coach.

He vaguely remembered the man had gone to Texas some years after McGuire graduated.

And then he got the call from his brother Dec. 29, 1995.

"Turn on ESPN," McGuire's brother, Bob, said. "I think that's Duke Snyder on the sidelines."

K-State head football coach Bill Snyder coached Foothill High School in Tustin, Calif., in 1969-73, accumulating a 16-8-3 record. McGuire played defensive end at Foothill in 1970 and 1971.

That's when he was first introduced to the Duke.

"He went by Duke Snyder," McGuire said, "and he was a great coach. You could definitely tell he had a background in mathematics. He was a math teacher at Foothill."

Snyder said he didn't remember being called Duke, saying he probably got the nickname from fans of Brooklyn Dodgers centerfielder Duke Snider.

"That was probably something the players did when I wasn't around," he said. "Not that I mind. I just don't remember it."

But both agree math played prominently in Snyder's game. McGuire remembers Snyder's being meticulous with his defense, preparing it for every possible scenario.

"He was one for statistics," McGuire said. "He just had so much information — pages of statistics, or at least it seemed that way for a high-school coach. And he backed it all up with statistics from previous game films.

"He'd have it down to where if it was first down in a certain part of the field, he knew what they were going to do. I mean, you'd know exactly what they were running, whether it was a center pass, a sweep to the short side or a pass to a particular part of the field. And he was right a lot of the time."

Snyder said his teams still get that statistical breakdown, but it's done by computers. And, in a typical display of modesty, he tried to downplay his statistical production at Foothill.

"I'm not sure about reams," Snyder said. "But I'm sure I overdid it, at least for the high-school level."

But McGuire said his most vivid memories were of Snyder the gentleman.

"He was the kind of guy you just wanted to play for," McGuire said. "He didn't do it by intimidation, and he didn't do it by getting in your face. Although he could do that. The worst thing he ever said when he was upset was 'Hell's bells, guys.'

"You just wanted to play for the guy. He did his leading by example, by his expression, his demeanor. He's just a sterling character."

Snyder: today

Wildcats must harness emotion

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

The last time K-State defeated Nebraska, most of the University's student population wasn't even born.

The last time K-State defeated Nebraska at KSU Stadium was, well, that's never happened.

K-State opened KSU Stadium in 1968, the same year it defeated Nebraska in Lincoln, Neb. Since then, the series has been dominated by the Cornhuskers.

Coach Bill Snyder said the Wildcats could earn themselves a win, as long as they believe a win is possible.

And with a 19-0 Nebraska shutout at the hands of Arizona State less than two weeks ago, that belief might be a little easier to come by.

But even with the recent Husker loss, Snyder said the preparation for this year's squad hasn't been much different from the preparation a year ago.

"I hope it's better than it was a year ago," he said.

Last year, the Wildcats fell to Nebraska 25-49 in Lincoln. It was a game that many said was filled with emotion. That emotion affected the Cats play.

"I thought we didn't handle the emotion of the game very well," Snyder said. "I thought we were prepared well, and I thought we were very emotional about the ball game."

But that emotion took its toll on the Wildcats who were overcome by the intensity of Husker fan support in Nebraska's Memorial Stadium.

"I didn't feel that we were able to focus and handle the emotion as well as we should," Snyder said about last year's game.

Senior cornerback Joe Gordon said the players were overwhelmed by the aura, the noise and the JumboTron in Lincoln last year, not to mention the sea of red.

But this year, he said, things would be different.

"We've got our own noise now and our own JumboTron. Our guys are used to playing in that type of atmosphere," he said. "This year it won't affect us."

But Snyder said the distractions were more mental.

"Distractions can come in a lot of forms, and emotion is one of them," he said. "Our youngsters want to play well. They want to play hard. And we want them to play with a lot of emotion, but it took them off focus."

Snyder said Gordon has been practicing with the team this last week and will play against Nebraska. Whether he gets the starting nod remains to be seen.

Questionable for Saturday's contest will be defensive end Darren Howard ,who is suffering from a knee injury he received at Rice.

Also affecting K-State's offensive scheme is the suspension of senior guard Ross Greenwood. Greenwood was suspended for the first half of Saturday's game after being ejected for fighting in K-State's 34-7 win at Rice.

Replacing Greenwood on the starting roster will be Jeremy Martin, a 6'3", 300-pound sophomore.

"He's made progress. Jeremy is going to be a very fine player. He is a good player for us right now," Snyder said.

What Martin brings to K-State football is the ability to be a utility player. He

ROAD TO GRIDIRON GLORY

Sept. 30, 1989 In Snyder's inaugural 1-10 season, the Wildcats defeat North Texas 20-17 at KSU Stadium to end a 30-game losing streak with a last minute drive.

Oct. 13, 1990 K-State picks up its first Big 8 win in four years by defeating Oklahoma State 23-17 at KSU Stadium.

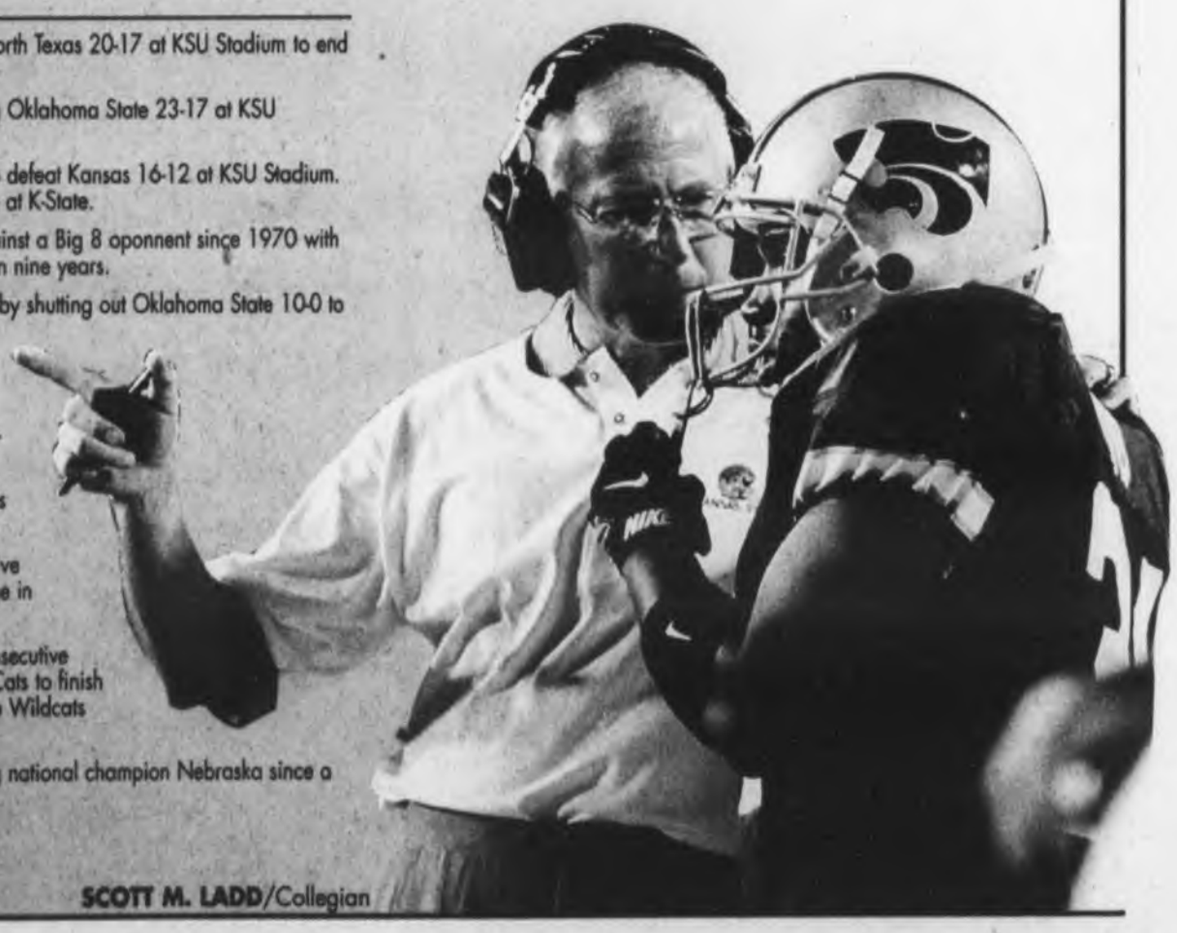
Oct. 12, 1991 K-State scores 13 unanswered points in the fourth quarter to defeat Kansas 16-12 at KSU Stadium. It would be the first of five wins against Kansas in Snyder's eight-year reign at K-State.

Nov. 16, 1991 K-State registers its first shutout since 1975 and its first against a Big 8 oponnent since 1970 with 32-0 victory against Missouri to ensure a winning season for the first time in nine years.

Nov. 21, 1991 K-State completes its first perfect home season since 1934 by shutting out Oklahoma State 10-0 to go 5-0 at KSU Stadium.

Dec. 29, 1993 The Wildcats win their first bowl game in history with a 52-17 win against Wyoming in the Copper Bowl.

Oct. 6, 1994 K-State wins at Kansas for the first time since 1969 with a 21-13 victory.



Dec. 25, 1994 The Wildcats play in the Aloha Bowl and go to bowl games in consecutive years for the first time ever.

Oct. 7, 1995 In shutting out Missouri 30-0, K-State posted its third consecutive shutout, becoming the first team to accomplish that feat since Boston College in 1992.

Dec. 25, 1995 The Wildcats appear in the Holiday Bowl for their third consecutive bowl appearance and defeat Colorado State 54-21. The win enables the Cats to finish No. 7 on the Associated Press poll. It was the first time in school history the Wildcats finish ranked in the top 10.

Oct. 5, 1996 Could this be the date the Wildcats topple two-time defending national champion Nebraska since a 12-0 victory in Lincoln in 1968?

Change in seasons affects major-league baseball, Wildcat football

MY

Shana NEWELL

While looking out my window Tuesday, gazing, more specifically, I sat thinking about what to write this week. There are several things I thought I'd like to touch on, but nothing that could really fill an entire column.

I was stuck.

But then, a solitary leaf dropped from the large tree across from the newsroom. It's not a mighty tree by any stretch of the imagination, but it looks pretty strong and intimidating to me, at least if I were one of the bushes planted right beside it. Maybe kind of like K-State's football players might feel compared to Nebraska.

Watching that leaf fall, and the others that tumbled to the ground after it, reminded me of one thing: The seasons are changing.

The season is changing from the dog days of summer into the quiet solitude of fall. And with that change, baseball season is quickly ending as college and professional football click into full gear.

■ My little world has just been made the happiest place on earth, at least for me. Three words: Dodgers, Cardinals and Padres.

My loyalty will always lie with my boys in blue. Always has, always will. But the Redbirds in ole St. Louie hold another very special place in my heart.

And the Padres? Yeah, I know, they're one of the Dodgers' favorite rivals, but they've got the man — Tony Gwynn, one of my favorite players in baseball. He is an exceptional player to watch, and he has so much class. The definition of baseball can add one little phrase to the end of it — "See Gwynn, Tony."

■ While we're on the baseball tangent for the moment, let me predict my World Series playoff picture.

In the National League, San Diego will give the Cards a run for their money. Both are on a streak right now, and the Padres are due for a chance at the NL pennant. But St. Louis has emotion in addition to the hot streak. It's Ozzie Smith's last season, and he deserves to end it on top. The Cards will have to down San Diego in five, but it'll be done.

Los Angeles has a good chance to get past the (oh, God, can I even type the letters?) Atlanta Braves. Yes, I know they're the returning champions, but they're hurting right now. The Marlins slapped them a good one, and Atlanta might not be able to recover in time. Since they're my boys, I'll pick the Dodgers in this one, and again, look for four or five games to get the job done.

• See CARDS Page 7

In the National League Championship, St. Louis will prevail in seven games. They're doing too well right now. Los Angeles won't be able to hold off.

In the American League, New York will find the Texas Rangers a formidable opponent, but the Bronx Bombers will come out on top. The Yankee bullpen is too dominant. It'll be a typical pitching and defensive showdown.

On the other hand, the Baltimore-Cleveland showdown is a home-run derby waiting to happen. Cleveland might have the wins this season, but Baltimore is primed for the kill. Look for the Os to dominate.

AL Championship game: Yankees in five. Their pitching will manhandle the Orioles' bats.

As for the World Series, the Yankees and the Cardinals will rematch the 1964 Series. It'll be a good one, folks.

■ Tonight: Ahearn Field House, K-State vs. KU volleyball, 7 p.m. Be there or be square. K-State volleyball is destined to be the best in school history this year. Don't miss out on the action. And hey, it's free.

■ Saturday: KSU Stadium, K-State vs. Nebraska football. OK, sleepheads, if you choose not to tailgate, you get to sleep in. Game time has changed to 2:30 p.m. for television. ABC has decided to pick up the game on a regional basis. But don't stay at home to watch the game. For Willie's sake, don't stay at home. And don't wear white sweatshirts with purple letters. WEAR PURPLE. Let's make the Huskers think they fell into a bowl full of grapes.

■ Can K-State defeat Nebraska? Yes. Will they? I hope so. What do I think the score will be? I'm too scared to say. I'm afraid I'll jinx the whole operation. All I have to say is good luck, guys! We're behind you all the way! Like the big tree that's dying, the little bush is living on. Seasons change. It's K-State's season now.

■ And on that note, the tally is in for a new tradition to be started at K-State. Not that there aren't traditions to be kept, but it's time the football fans of the 1990s created something for themselves in addition to the old ones.

Here's my favorite: Curve your pointer finger and your thumb to make a C. Extend your other three fingers in a W fashion. In essence, make an OK sign, just open the O. What you've got is a W and a C for Wildcat.

But if you don't like that, consider these other options that were submitted. Create a shadow-hand look with your hand that gives the impression of a Powercat. Just flaout wear purple all the time — you'll be noticed. Extend all of your fingers like a Wildcat claw.

The time to start a new tradition is now. The choice is yours.

Willie — are you listening?

Wefald stops SGA

BRENT STOVER
contributing writer

Longtime major-league pitcher Dennis Martinez was given the nickname El Presidente during his career for his extraordinary pitching talent.

K-State has its own version of El Presidente. His name is Jon Wefald.

For the seventh time in eight tries, the K-State president pitched the Anderson Hall Annihilators to victory over the SGA Senators in their annual softball game at CiCo Park Tuesday.

> "I thought the students were a lot more competitive this year than what they were last year."
> • MIKE CLARK
> K-STATE BASEBALL COACH

The Annihilators staved off a fifth-inning rally to hold on for a 13-10 win.

"I was getting nervous, but of course I knew we had last at-bat," Wefald said, who pitched the full five innings for the win.

Wefald mixed his pitches effectively, throwing a variety of knuckle-balls, change-ups and sliders. He struck out two batters and walked just one. Wefald didn't have the dominance he had in last year's 21-0 shutout of the Senators.

"I certainly didn't expect that on a windy day like today. I could throw another two-hitter like I did last year, but we got outs when we needed it," Wefald said.

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark led the Annihilators' 13-hit attack with a double and an inside-the-park home run.

However, there was controversy surrounding Clark and a number of other Annihilator players.

Student Body Vice President Aaron Otto said Monday if Anderson Hall used players from outside Anderson Hall, the action would be unacceptable.

Much to the dismay of SGA, the Annihilators brought in Clark and two other members of the baseball team's coaching staff, hitting coach Rocky Ward and pitching coach Mike Hensley.

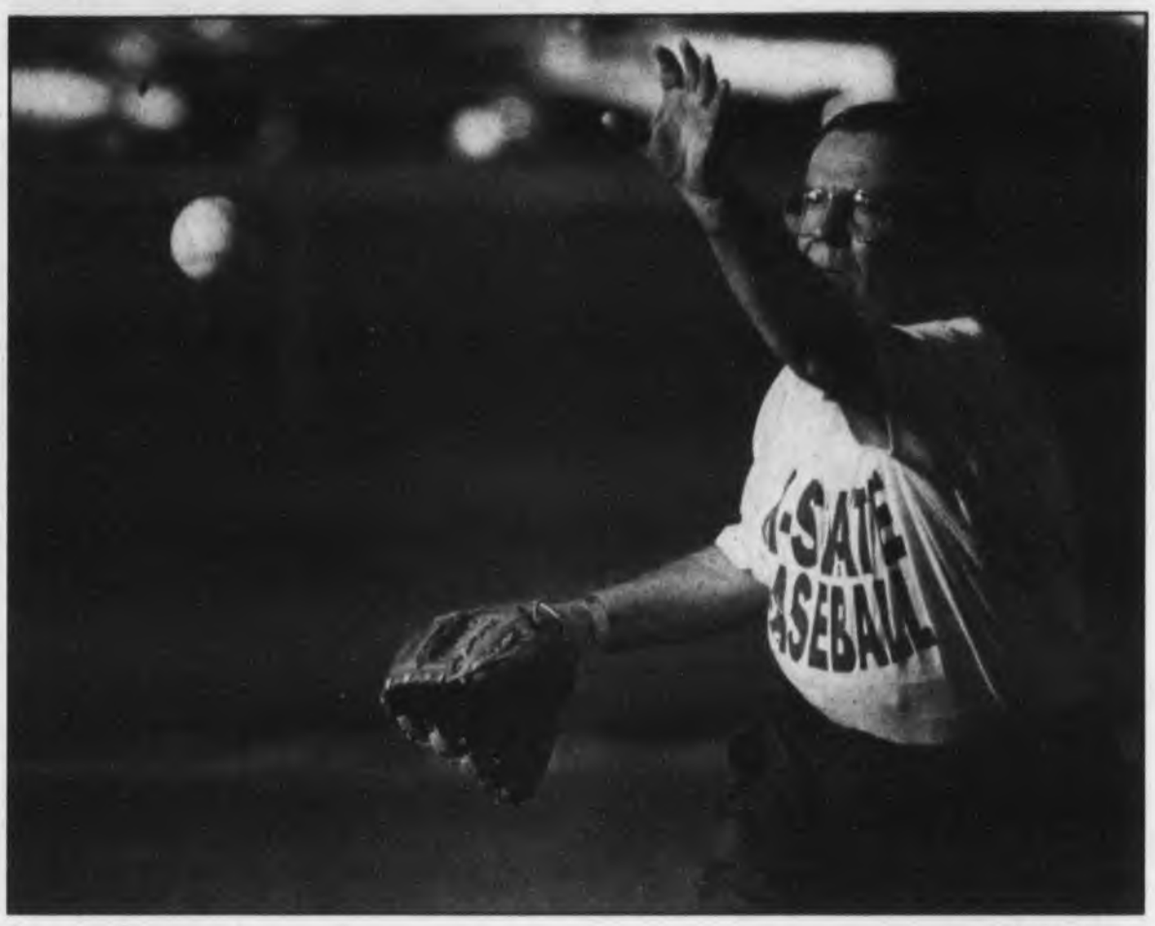
Also on the Annihilators' roster were Associate Sports Information Director Dan Ballou, and assistant basketball coaches Dave Campbell and Mark Fox.

Fox, though, proved to be more of a liability than a contributor.

Playing left field, Fox misread a fly ball in the first inning that sailed over his head for an inside-the-park home run by the Senators' Patrick Carney, arts and sciences senator.

The next batter, Paul Colwell, chairman of the Parking and Campus Safety Committee, then hit another ball over the head of Fox for another inside-the-parker.

"If we'd have had a little better left-field play in the first inning, I don't even think it would have been close," Clark said.



"I was really disappointed with Coach Fox out in left field. I thought he was very poor."

The Senators ripped out 15 hits, including five in the final inning, when they put four runs on the board.

"I thought the students were a lot more competitive this year than what they were last year," Clark said. "They had a lot better ball club than I thought."

Annihilators head coach John Fairman, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, said he was pleased with the outcome.

"We enjoyed it," Fairman said. "We had a great time, and that's what it's really about."

has spent time at several different positions on the offensive line, which, Snyder said, might limit his ability to be the best football player he can be. But that doesn't limit Snyder's belief that Martin will fill in for Greenwood just fine.

"Between him and Ross, I think they're both very comparable," Snyder said.

But with all the changes and the hype surrounding this game, Snyder said there was one thing that must remain eminently clear.

"Nebraska was a far better team this last Saturday than it was two Saturdays prior to that, and we can't forget that," he said.

> "Our youngsters want to play well ... We want them to play with a lot of emotion, but it took them off focus.

The game's kickoff has been changed to 2:30 p.m. Saturday so it can be televised on ABC. Brent Musburger will do the play-by-play, while Dick Vermeil will analyze. Jack Arute will be the sideline reporter.

Road to a diploma filled with obstacles for one K-State student story by Debbie Hollis

He plays the trumpet. He is learning Russian. In December, he graduates.

He is also deaf.

Sam Eichelberger, senior in humanities, came to K-State from Kekaha, Hawaii, in 1987 to major in agricultural education. He has switched majors twice since then.

"When I came to K-State, I have to confess, I wasn't a top-notch student," Eichelberger said.

Eichelberger decided to change his major to music education.

"After I changed my major to music, then my GPA started to pick up a little bit," he said.

Eichelberger began playing the trumpet in the seventh grade. Throughout middle school and high school, he continued to play first trumpet in marching and concert bands.

"In 1986, when I was a senior in high school, I was the first from Hawaii to be in the National FFA Band," he said.

Through that, he got involved in the United States Collegiate Wind Band, which toured Europe in the summer of 1987.

"It was my first time touring Europe," Eichelberger said.

Eichelberger related the experience to pursuing his studies at K-State.

"The biggest challenge was, I guess, trying to keep going on the road," he said. "We hadn't had that much rest. We had to keep on going, and I think, compared to school, it's like that with my studies. Keep going until the end of the trip. For me, that's getting my diploma."

Because of his hearing loss, which began early in elementary school, that trip has not always been smooth.

After switching his major once, Eichelberger was advised to drop his music major.

"It was like a shock to me at first, "he said. "It kind of hit me like a cannonball."

Eichelberger said he did well in his theory and performance classes.

"But when it came to my major interest in trumpet proficiency, it was like climbing a brick wall," he said.

That wall did not stop him for long. Eichelberger soon found his niche in humanities. Seizing an opportunity to enhance his education, Eichelberger traveled to Russia in January on a trip sponsored by the Department of History.

John Daly, associate professor of history, was also on the trip.

"Sam is one of the best goodwill ambassadors for the U.S. that I've ever met," he said. "People may meet him with stereotypes, but he demolishes any stereotypes they might have through the sheer force of personality."

Daly said Eichelberger's intelligence is often masked by his easygoing exterior. While visiting a cemetery in Saint Petersburg where many of Russia's famous composers are buried, Eichelberger began to tell the histories of the composers and their works in great detail, Daly said.

SAM EICHELBERGER, senior in humanities, has had more than academic challenges at K-State. He is also deaf in one ear. Eichelberger, who did not allow his limited hearing keep him from playing in the concert band for three years, will graduate in December.

DARREN WHITLEY Collegian

"His presence made all the difference," he said.

Eichelberger returned to Russia in May on a trip sponsored by the Department of Modern Languages.

He said his favorite part of the trip was visiting a friend of a friend who lived just outside Moscow.

"We got on a bus, which was packed like sardines, to go down to where they lived," he said. "I was the only one who didn't speak Russian, so it was kind of awkward at first, but I enjoyed it."

Eichelberger said the trips to Russia inspired him to learn more about Russian culture and history.

And he has.

Walter Kolonosky, associate professor in modern languages, has Eichelberger in two classes, Russian Culture and Russian I.

Eichelberger wrote a paper about an art collection in Saint Petersburg. Kolonosky said Eichelberger included entertaining anecdotes about how various pieces were acquired to the collection or what inspired their creation.

"He makes the facts of history human," Kolonosky said. "Going the extra mile? Sam does it."

Kolonosky said Eichelberger is more than a model student. He is a model of human existence.

"He leads with his heart where some of us might lead with our heads," he said, describing Eichelberger's cheerful perseverance.

After nine years, Eichelberger's perseverance has paid off. He said the best thing about his final semester is knowing he's going to graduate.

"Walking down the aisle — that's been my dream all along," he said.

Education a focus for the Beach art museum

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

A classroom of all pictures and no desks.

That image might be a dream to some, but will be a reality to students who will use the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art for educational purposes.

One of the primary functions of a university art museum is to educate visitors as a sort of cultural classroom.

Kathrine Walker, education coordinator of the art museum, has developed programs for elementary school-age children to the college level that both reflect the collection and various social themes throughout history.

"We hope the faculty will use the museum as part of their curriculum," Walker said. The museum could be used for expository writing assignments and classes in art history, art education, theater, music and dance.

To introduce the faculty to the Beach art museum's facilities and programs, Walker is organizing receptions for college faculties. There is already a reception planned for the College of Arts and Sciences faculty.

Walker said interested professors need only call her at the museum for inquiries into using facilities and arranging gallery talks. Walker has also prepared a faculty guide to the museum which explains its possible uses, but it won't be ready until the museum opens.

The museum facilities include an activity room on the ground floor and a large assembly hall on the first floor that could act as a theater or large orientation room.

"My hope is that most class time would be spent in the galleries," Walker said. "If a class just wants to use the facilities, there is a rental charge."

The rate for the assembly hall and the commons area is $75 per hour with a two-hour minimum. The activity room rate is $35 per hour.

Additional fees can be charged for a security officer, an events coordinator and a gallery attendant. Events can be catered, but they must be approved by the museum.

Walker said the main function of the museum is for arts-related events, specific to the collection.

Since the museum will offer its own public programs, time for private functions will be limited, Walker said.

Among the public events are gallery talks called First Wednesday Food For Thought which will occur the first Wednesday of every month at noon. There are also gallery talks by artists that are represented in exhibits or by museum staff.

Scheduled for December is a family printing workshop for families wishing to learn a paper lithography process to create their own greeting cards. Unlike most of the art museum events, the workshop charges a fee and requires reservations.

The art department has already scheduled one event with the museum, Anna Holcombe, department head, said. A luncheon, gallery talk and meetings with students have been scheduled with Tom Edwards, whose show of prints is one of three inaugural exhibits.

"How art students use the museum is really up to the individual faculty members," Holcombe said.

The art department will also offer a class directly related to the museum.

Although the museum has its own programming, Walker said she expects many students to drop by the museum to escape from daily life or to draw in the galleries. Walker said students must call the museum ahead of time if they wish to draw in the galleries and this will be limited to dry media.

"We want the students to have a sense of ownership of the museum," she said. "The new student group will not only be programming activities, but will also do a fundraiser."

The new student activities and support committee of the Beach art museum is a student social club that organizes museum programming geared toward K-State students and helps in financially supporting the museum, Walker said.

The organization will be unveiled in a new campaign the week before the museum opens on Oct. 13.

Although the art museum's opening is two weeks away, Manhattan-area elementary students have already had the museum experience.

Walker developed outreach programming geared to classroom curriculum such as a Native American program that introduces third and fourth graders to images of Native Americans by non-Native American artists. Even teachers outside of the area can access the museum's programming via the World Wide Web.

Once the museum opens, Walker has organized tours that will be available to local teachers.

Mary Hemphill, elementary art teacher at Northview and Eugene Field Elementary Schools, said the new art museum will offer opportunities for art and classroom teachers to collaborate.

Hemphill said if a classroom teacher chose to take her students on a tour of the museum, she could follow the tour up with a complementary assignment in art class.

"Most students have probably never seen real art," Hemphill said. "It's so much different to actually see the real art."

Hemphill said it's hard to explain to students that a poster is just a picture of art.

"There are so many wonderful tie-ins with elementary level programs such as social studies," she said. "Art helps kids see the whole picture and tie things together."

VOTES

that the votes weren't there. I expected the man to jump out of his chair."

Glasscock said he has no idea where Littrell could get such information and the allegations are probably election-year politics.

"The assumption that somehow I knew the votes were there, and all the legislative liaisons didn't know the votes were there, is patently absurd," Glasscock said.

Legislative liaisons from every regents university work with legislators further the interests of the schools.

"To think that the whole legislative process, all the legislators, all the regents, and the legislative liaisons take their cue from me as to whether the regents' budget gets funds restored shows an ignorance of the process," Glasscock said.

Sue Peterson, assistant to the University president for governmental relations, said a legislator doesn't tell the liaisons how many votes they have, but rather the other way around.

"If anyone would have the votes, it would be the legislative liaison," Peterson said.

"Usually, we have to get the whole regents system together to get the votes," she said. "If we have enough, we try. If we don't, we don't try."

Mike Matson, press secretary for Graves, said he recalls the 1995 session as the year of the takeover by the conservative Republicans.

"The conservative Republicans wanted to flex their muscle by proposing very tight spending cuts," Matson said. "The governor had proposed a tight budget already.

"They were talking about a $200-million cut from the governor's budget," he said. "In the end, they came nowhere near that."

Matson said the Legislature ended up approving a budget nearly identical to the one Graves had proposed.

About Littrell's allegations, Matson said, "Why would the governor ask anyone to do anything could potentially harm getting the budget he wanted?

"It just doesn't make any sense."

Since the regents budget was the last budget approval of the 1995 session, Matson said that it is not uncommon for there to be little or no money left to restore funding in a budget and the Legislature might have had no other choice but to cut the $4.1 million from the regents budget.

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said the 1995 House was in a conservative mode and it took a lot of work on the Senate side to keep the regents budget from being cut badly.

Oleen said timing was the problem, because the funding for the restoration of the proposed cuts didn't exist at the end of the legislative session.

Oleen said many legislators drive to cut things that aren't in their districts, especially higher education.

"There are a number of folks who don't have a college in their town, and they're inclined to cut higher education," she said. "The Senate historically has been supportive of higher education."

The attacks on Glasscock, however, point to a system of political dealing that might exist in the Legislature.

"You better count your votes if you want to pass your amendment," Oleen said. "I'm not going to get up there and fall on my sword."

Oleen said pro-gambling legislators will often refuse to vote for something unless other legislators will agree to vote on gambling.

"I don't deal," Oleen said. "I've seen it done. Some issues become so emotional to some that they'll do that kind of thing.

"It's not my position to judge people as legislators," she said. "The people back home are the ultimate tests."

Glasscock said Littrell's statements are simply political maneuvers by a desperate candidacy.

"I think the motivation is to disparage me and to involve in the disparagements a governor who has done everything to help the regents institutions and K-State," Glasscock said.

Glasscock said the Legislature has changed much since the 1995 session.

"They have made some cuts, but they have learned to manage the budget more responsibly," he said. "I think the Legislature leadership and the legislators are now very cognizant on not only keeping the budget tight, but also not crippling state services."

them," Procter said. "They will do research on the tapes they receive from across the country."

DebateWatch, which started in 1988, takes place every four years, during the presidential election. Procter said he has seen the size of the program increase since its beginning.

"After '88 it kept getting bigger and bigger," he said. "Now in '96 it is very large."

The faculty members' participation is a result of the K-State speech department's active involvement in politics, Procter said.

"We are a fairly active department in terms of political speech," he said. "Plus, we have all been involved in political campaigns."

Despite their political involvement, Proctor said they will act only as discussion facilitators, and there will be no political agenda.

"The Commission on Presidential Debates is a non-partisan, non-profit group," he said. "They're not wanting to pick a winner."

The discussion groups are open to anyone who is interested in participating. Although right now Procter said there is a full group of 12, if there are more who want to participate, they will divide into more groups.

help with my study skills," he said.

Lee said he recommends the program.

"If you're having trouble, get help as soon as possible," he said.

This program, which has not been formally named, began two years ago and is funded through the center.

Starting in mid-semester, Pitts will coordinate a mentoring program to help students, said Mike Lynch, assistant vice president for institutional advancement.

About 10 students will be hired as mentors and each will work with 10 to 15 minority students.

The Education Opportunity Fund allocated $6,500 to hire student mentors.

This will be the fourth year for this program.

"Minority students need assistance getting acclimated to a predominantly white school," Mike Lynch said.

"These programs were designed to do this through answering questions and concerns as students get settled in," he said.

Pitts was an elementary-school teacher for 24 years before coming to K-State. She said there is not much difference between elementary and college students.

"They both want someone who cares ,and I'm here to help," she said.

▸ ANTHROPOLOGY

Digging for answers

"She is not usually in her office. She is always in the field doing work on student projects."

• CINDY SHUMAN
GRADUATE STUDENT IN EDUCATION

▪ K-State professor lends her expertise in deciphering symbols.

DANA LEHNER
staff reporter

An anthropology professor from K-State is one of 12 researchers trying to decipher an ancient symbol system known as the South East Ceremonial Complex.

Patricia O'Brien, professor of anthropology, is on research leave in Germany this year.

She is part of a research team that meets once a year to brainstorm ideas. They will meet again in Alabama in March 1997.

The symbols being deciphered have been found on sites at Moundville, Ala.; Spiro, Okla.; Etowah, Ga.; and Cahokia, Ill. They are part of artifacts of the Mound Builder II people.

The main relic O'Brien is focusing on is a 12-inch tablet made out of sandstone. The tablet contains a hand with an eye in its palm, the axis of the world, a mushroom and a curving spiral.

O'Brien is an expert on Plains Indians and the Cahokia cultures and says that the symbols on the tablet are part of the religious beliefs of the Indians.

On one of the artifacts, a figure that looks like a birdman, holds a winged object in each of its hands.

Another symbol had been thought of as a generic sun sign for 50 years, but was recently interpreted as a bird or an insect.

After consulting with K-State entomologists and having discussions on the Internet, she came to a conclusion.

O'Brien said she believes that the hawkmoth may have inspired these ancient artists.

O'Brien said she believes the picture of the birdman is actually a representation of the hawkmoth and two insect metamorphic stages.

O'Brien received her bachelor's degree from the University of Illinois at Urbana in 1962 and later received her Ph.D. in 1969 from the same school.

"She's a real character," Cindy Shuman, graduate student in education, said. "She does a lot of archaeological and field work.

"She is not usually in her office. She is always in the field doing work on student projects."

The native of Chicago arrived at K-State in 1967 as an assistant professor.

After seven years, O'Brien was promoted to professor of anthropology in 1974.

Kansas Association of Broadcasters ranks DB92 highest among student radio stations ▪ Staff members earn honors for broadcast performance.

MATT SPURGIN
staff reporter

Students and staff at K-State's student radio station, KSDB-FM 91.9, are among some of the state's elite in terms of on-air performances.

Four people have won awards from the Kansas Association of Broadcasters for their work on the radio.

These awards are given out annually to broadcasters in Kansas who submit samples of their radio or television work to the KAB.

Len Potillo, junior in arts and sciences, won first place for disc-jockey personality air check for his show, "Smooth B's Street Beats," which airs during the Jam the Box program.

Potillo also received an honorable mention in station-promotion announcement for Jam the Box.

Sun Dee Mills, junior in journalism and mass communications, of DB92 Sports, received first place in the complete sportscast category.

She said it was a pleasant surprise to receive the award and that she hopes to gain further experience in radio sportscasting and eventually move on to television sportscasting.

Another complete-sportscast award went to Chad Kelley, junior in business administration, who received second place in this category.

He didn't know about the award until he walked into the studio.

"I came walking in, and Joe started shaking my hand congratulating me, and I didn't even know what he was talking about. He said I had won second," Kelley said.

Joe Montgomery, DB92 station manager, won a second-place award for his "Clean Water" public-service announcement. Montgomery used the voice of his 13-year-old nephew, Jacob Montgomery, who was visiting from Lufkin, Texas, for this PSA.

Joe Montgomery said the KAB is a collective group of member radio and television stations in the state of Kansas. Each fall the KAB takes entries for broadcasts in all types of programming.

"The good thing about this particular competition is that we are competing against professional broadcasters and not just other students," Montgomery said.

He also said the student radio stations from the University of Kansas and Colby Community College won awards, but DB92 did the best of all the student stations.

The awards will be presented during the KAB convention October 28-31 in Wichita.

Student attacked in B-2

Inside
With crime becoming a stronger issue on campus, the editorial board wants the city and University to examine how safe the campus really is and act accordingly.

JEREMY KELLEY
staff writer

A female student reported she was assaulted in the northern part of lot B-2, near Hoeflin Stone House, at about 9:30 Tuesday night.

The victim, after returning from a trip, stepped out of her car and was approached by a white male.

She described the attacker as being 5'10", 160 pounds with unkempt dark hair.

The man grabbed the victim by the arms, scratched her in the chest and punched her in the face three times.

The victim grabbed the man's neck and tried to choke him and get him to refrain from hitting her, while screaming for help.

The suspect then saw an unknown man walking through Lot B-2 parking lot and fled, while the victim ran back to her residence hall.

Officers who dealt with the original report were unable to comment on the assault; however, Robert Mellgren, assistant director of the K-State Police, commented on it.

"There were four offenses charged in the incident," he said. "Battery, stalking, intimidation of victim and threatening the victim."

Mellgren said the victim had been assaulted by the same suspect this summer in Riley County.

"When the suspect approached the female last night he ordered her not to tell anyone about the incident this summer, or he would hurt her again," Mellgren said.

Mellgren said the campus police tried to contact the Riley County Police Department about the alleged assault, but a report was not filed.

Broken security cameras offer false sense of security on campus

ANDREA COREY
staff reporter

Most of the security cameras on K-State campus parking lots are not working.

Two of the 10 or more cameras are working, and the rest are waiting for new parts, Robert Mellgren, assistant director of K-State Police, said.

The cameras have not been working since early August, when campus police moved to Edwards Hall.

Mellgren said he was not sure when the parts would arrive to fix the cameras.

Both cameras covering Lot B-2, where a female K-State student was battered, stalked, intimidated and threatened Tuesday night, were broken.

Mellgren said cameras aren't placed in parking lots to catch criminals in the act, necessarily, but are instead there as a deterrent.

"Cameras don't protect people. People protect people," he said.

"(The cameras) provide a false sense of security," he added.

Mellgren said since cameras were put into use in campus parking lots, theft from vehicles has lowered.

"People are scared of being caught on camera," he said.

Mellgren said anyone who has to walk alone in a parking lot can call for an escort at 532-SAFE, and an escort will be at a given location in five minutes. He said emergency phones on campus are also for students when they need an escort.

Mellgren said if an escort is not available, an officer will be sent to the location to watch the people and make sure they are safe.

RCPD arrests 4 on drug charges

MIRANDA KENNEDY
staff reporter

Riley County Police Department on Monday made the first arrest in Riley County in an eight-month drug investigation Monday.

Four men were arrested.

Travis Brown, also known as Terrance Canteen, and Donald Lamb were arrested for sale of a controlled substance within 1,000 feet of a school. RCPD captain Steve French said RCPD believes it was cocaine, but it is waiting for lab results to confirm that.

Nathan Brown and James Calvin Culp were arrested for possession and intent to sell a controlled substance, which RCPD also believes was cocaine.

French said RCPD has been working on the eight-month investigation with the Junction City Police Department. He said there have been previous arrests in Junction City.

"We believe there was definitely a connection between them and possibly New York City," he said.

Travis Brown and Nathan Brown are from New York City, French said.

He said RCPD has always tried to control drugs.

"It's just that this has been a rather long and lengthy investigation," he said.

"As technologies increase — cellular phones, pagers, things like that — it makes it a lot harder for us to make drug cases," French said.

Information concerning charges was not available at press time.

Farrar plant could create new jobs for Manhattan

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

Manhattan could be the future home of a new iron-casting plant that could create up to 250 jobs.

The Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund Advisory Board approved a $1-million grant to the Farrar Corporation to help build a new iron-casting plant in Manhattan's industrial park.

The final approval of the grant will have to be passed by the Manhattan City Commission before Farrar is able to begin the project.

The new plant would cost about $20 million to build.

Bill Farrar, president of the Farrar Corporation, said the new plant would initially create 50 jobs for the city with the possibility of creating up to 250 jobs in the future.

"The new plant will help diversify Manhattan's economy and could possibility create many more spin-off companies that relate to the materials that Farrar would produce," Farrar said.

Farrar said the company hopes to have the plant built and producing by 1999.

Addressing environmental concerns, Farrar said the industrial plant will not have a negative effect on the environment.

The only product released in the air from the plant will be steam generated from the cooling systems in the furnaces that are used to melt scrap iron.

The plant will also require a

Peace negotiations result in deadlock

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Marathon negotiations between Israeli and Palestinian leaders failed to resolve bitter differences that exploded in Mideast violence and jeopardized the fragile peace process. But the two sides agreed to press ahead with nonstop talks beginning Sunday.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said the summit that ended Wednesday "cemented the principle that the path to peace is through negotiations and not through violence." He also said, "The children of Israel are safer tonight."

At the close of the White House-sponsored negotiations, President Clinton said, "We have not made as much progress as I wish we had." He said he was not certain the Mideast crisis was over but expressed confidence that violence would subside.

The top priority will be Hebron, the West Bank town where Israel has refused to fulfill a promise to move its troops from Arab neighborhoods into Jewish settlements by March.

Netanyahu, talking to reporters at his hotel, said if lower-level negotiators don't resolve the Hebron dispute, "Arafat and I will sit down until we solve it. We agreed to do that."

Nabil Shaath, a top aide to Arafat, said the summit's failure was Israel's fault.

"There is no agreement about anything. President Clinton did his best to put the peace process back on track, but the Israelis wouldn't let him," Shaath said.

Netanyahu, at a news conference, staunchly defended the president: "What did you want him to do? Did you want him to do nothing?"

Another sensitive issue left unresolved was Palestinian demands that Netanyahu close an ancient tunnel near Muslim and Jewish holy sites in East Jerusalem. The opening of the tunnel sparked last week's violence, which left 76 dead.

Clinton said the meetings improved the understanding and trust between Netanyahu and Arafat. But he made no attempt to disguise the lingering deadlock despite all-night talks, which moved to the White House before finally concluding at the White House.

"Let's not overreact," Clinton said. "We are in better shape than we were two days ago."

If bloodshed had persisted in the West Bank and Jerusalem, he said, "imagine where we would be now."

Netanyahu said, "There is a greater degree of mutual understanding than there was two days ago. I suppose over time this will increase. This is my hope."

Students voice campus concerns to administrators

SPEED
▶ Mortar Board sponsored a forum for students and administrators Wednesday. Issues addressed included parking, Union expansion and the library.

CHRIS DEAN
staff reporter

Students were given the chance to fire away at campus administrators Wednesday. Luckily, the only weapon they had was a microphone.

Mortar Board brought administrators and students together for a question-and-answer session at noon in the Union Courtyard.

The attending administrators were Chris Hansen, student body president; Brice Hobrock, dean of Farrell Library; Bob Krause, vice president of institutional advancement; Bernard Pitts, director of the K-State Student Union; Peggy Winkler, acting director of Parking Services, and Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center.

All students could attend, and no questions were prohibited.

Sarah Sporing, Mortar Board leadership team chairwoman and senior in food science, led the one-hour discussion period. Sporing said she was pleased with the turnout.

"This is an event that Mortar Board sponsors every semester," she said. "The main focus is to give students an opportunity to ask questions and voice their concerns about campus issues, because administrators are not always easy to contact.

"It is probably pretty typical that a lot of students pass by and don't ask a lot of questions, but even if they were not asking questions, there were a lot of students sitting around listening. "

The event was kicked off with a question to Pitts about the Union expansion project.

Pitts said the 18- to 24-month renovation project would probably begin September 1997, although many changes are already being implemented.

"We are pleased with the progress so far. Amigos has already opened, and we should be announcing a national pizza chain and burger chain this week," he said.

Other issues discussed were new library services, the razing of Denison Hall and the parking situation.

One student asked Winkler where the money collected from parking tickets and parking meters goes. Winkler said the money is important for the upkeep of parking lots and Parking Service's salaries.

"The total revenue Parking Services collects is $1 million a year. That's from permits, parking meters and parking tickets," Winkler said. "Parking services receives no other monetary support and is totally funded by those who use or misuse the system."

Winkler also addressed the issue of the parking garage. Although nothing has been finalized, she said the southeast corner of campus was the most likely place. It cannot be built there until Anderson Avenue is widened however.

"The way Anderson Avenue is right now, it couldn't accommodate the increased traffic," Winkler said.

Krause said a proposal to widen Anderson

NATION WORLD

• FUHRMAN PLEADS NO-CONTEST TO PERJURY. Exactly a year after a jury voted to acquit O.J. Simpson, Mark Fuhrman pleaded no-contest to perjury Wednesday for denying at Simpson's trial that he had used the word nigger in the past decade. He was given three years' probation and fined $200.

• ACCUSED SPY HELD WITHOUT BAIL. Citing overwhelming evidence indicating that Robert Kim gave classified documents to South Korea, a federal judge ordered the former government computer analyst held without bond Wednesday.

• PERUVIAN AIRLINE CRASHES NORTH OF LIMA. A Peruvian jetliner carrying 70 people – including four Americans – crashed into the Pacific Ocean early Wednesday after the pilot reported his navigational system had failed. There were no signs of survivors. Navy patrol boats found the wreckage of the plane 40 miles west of the town of Ancon Wednesday morning. The plane's fuselage had split in half.

• U.N. ENVOY TO MEDIATE IN AFGHANISTAN. The rebel fighters who control most of Afghanistan clambered over the mountains north of Kabul on Wednesday, tightening their siege on the lone valley still in the hands of former government soldiers. Several hundred refugees anticipating more fighting were seen heading south toward Kabul, lugging bags of clothes and leading young children. They said the two sides were squared off about three miles apart.

• WHITE HOUSE CLAIMS EXECUTIVE PRIVILEGE. For the second time this election year, President Clinton and GOP lawmakers are clashing over a White House executive privilege claim. But neither side will say whether it's willing to push the matter to the legal brink again. The latest dispute concerns a memo to Clinton from the heads of the FBI and the Drug Enforcement Administration said to be highly critical of federal anti-drug policy. Last spring, the White House and a GOP congressional committee battled over 2,000 pages of documents related to the White House travel-office firings in May 1993.

CITY STATE

• KANSANS TO RETURN FROM BOSNIA. A Kansas Army National unit that has served in Bosnia for nearly eight months is scheduled to return to Kansas Saturday. The state adjutant general's department said 30 members of Battery E of the 161st Field Artillery would arrive in Great Bend at 2 p.m. on a flight from Fort Benning, Ga. The unit left Sarajevo Sept. 23, traveling to Giessen, Germany, and were to arrive in Fort Benning Wednesday night.

SPORTS

• ORIOLES MOVE TO 2-0 AGAINST INDIANS Cal Ripken scored the tie-breaking run on a disputed play in the eighth inning, and the Baltimore Orioles beat the Cleveland Indians 7-4 Wednesday for a 2-0 lead in their best-of-five AL playoff series. Baltimore moved within one win of becoming the first wild-card team to advance, and pushed the defending AL champions to the brink of elimination. Game three will be Friday in Cleveland.

• BRAVES DOWN 2-1 TO DODGERS. John Smoltz allowed only four hits, and Javy Lopez homered off Antonio Osuna to start the 10th as the pitching-rich Atlanta Braves beat the Dodgers 2-1 in the opener of their NL playoff series.

• CHIEFS' RECEIVER INJURED IN CAR ACCIDENT. Wide receiver Eric Smith, a member of the Kansas City Chiefs' practice squad, is lucky to be alive, after a traffic accident near Arrowhead Stadium. Schottenheimer said Smith, who played at Louisiana State, was unconscious for a time and had to be cut out of his car after the accident Saturday morning.

• Student Body President Chris Hansen and Student Body Vice President Aaron Otto will be in the Office of Student Activities and Services every Friday after 12:30 p.m. to participate in Feedback Fridays. For more information, contact Kelly Flynn or Otto at 532-6541.

CORRECTIONS

• Due to a reporter's error, in Tuesday's Collegian the story "The extra mile" had three inaccuracies. First, the January St. Petersburg, Russia, trip mentioned in the article was not sponsored by the Department of History and was not in any way affiliated with K-State. Second, John Daly was in St. Petersburg at the time doing research. Third, the May trip to Russia was an intersession course sponsored by the Department of Continuing Education. The Collegian regrets these errors.

Accident aftermath

KRIS STRAIN, senior in architecture, consoles Jenny Freiss, senior in human resource management, after the car she and several friends were in was hit by another vehicle at Seventh Street and Bluemont Avenue. The other party involved in the accident left the scene and is still being sought by police.

K-State dean nominated by Glickman to serve on national agriculture board

DARCIE MCCONKEY
staff reporter

A K-State dean has been named by U.S. Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman to participate on a new 30-member advisory board.

The National Agricultural Extension, Education and Economics Advisory Board was created as a result of the 1996 Farm Bill, which called for a committee to advise Glickman as well as universities and land-grant colleges on policy issues.

Barbara Stowe, dean of the College of Human Ecology, was selected from a pool of 600 nominees to represent consumer-interest groups.

"I feel I can represent the consumers well because I work from a consumption standpoint. I consider what people need, what people want, as well as the good and services they are looking for," Stowe said.

As a part of the advisory board, Stowe will participate in reviewing research-education and Economics agencies within the USDA such as the Agricultural Research Service, Economics Research Service, Cooperative State Research and Education Service, and National Agriculture Library and Statistics Unit.

Stowe will also help determine how funds should be distributed and select projects for Fund for Rural America. Over a three-year period $3 million will be awarded to research-extension projects that are supportive of rural America, Stowe said.

Along with advising Glickman of policy issues and guidelines, the board also recommends a 15-member task force that reviews all federal agricultural research laboratories across the United States.

Although there are no specific positions on the board created just for university professionals, Stowe said he believes they have a considerable amount to contribute to the board.

"Universities provide a broad range of extension programs, such as human and developmental programs, that are related to the quality of life in rural communities," Stowe said.

After being at K-State for 13 years, Stowe said she is ready for a new challenge and experience.

"It is a major commitment, but it should be very interesting to work with people who are interested and concerned about agriculture. Being named to this board is definitely a special thing," Stowe said.

HALO celebrates culture with month of activities

DEBBIE WOOD
staff reporter

October is Hispanic Heritage Month, and the members of Hispanic American Leadership Organization are gearing up. HALO has many events planned, and the month will be bustling with activities.

There will be a political speaker series every Friday starting with Paul Feleciano, state senator. Because this is an election year, the speeches are meant to educate student voters about certain political issues.

"There are so many political issues that we must make ourselves aware of what's going on," said Leo Prieto, sophomore in pre-medicine and Hispanic Heritage Month chairman.

Friday is Latino Night in Union Station. Oct. 12 is Gran Baile, a Latino dance at Bombers featuring a band and music ranging from salsa and meringue to Tex Mex.

Oct. 26 is Latin American Culture Night at the International Student Center, and a potluck dinner will be served.

"We hope to get a large crowd at all the events. We want to promote Hispanic awareness on campus and on a national level," Prieto said.

This year HALO is trying to incorporate the whole K-State campus in the activities.

"Everybody wants to see a big turnout and have a lot of interaction with the rest of campus. It's really important to increase cultural awareness on campus and to learn about other cultures," said Wilfrido Torres, junior in political science and president of HALO.

"If a lot of people show up at the first event, this might reflect the rest of the month's turnout," Torres said.

Hispanic Heritage Month October

8	6:30 p.m. 7:30 p.m.	HALO meeting in Union 206 will discuss Latino issues and the upcoming November elections. There will be a debate between the College Democrats and the Young Republicans. Latino dance lessons at Union Station.
11	3:30 p.m.	"Empowerment of the Latino Vote" in the Big 8 Room at the Union.
12	9 p.m.	Gran Baile, a Latino dance celebration, at Bombers, 1210 Moro St. The cost is $4 with a K-State ID and $5 without a K-State ID.
15	6:30 p.m.	HALO presentation, "Networking: How to Get the Most From Student Conferences," at Durland 163.
17-20		Up to 30 HALO members will be attending the United States Hispanic Leadership Conference in Chicago.
22	6:30 p.m.	Film presentation: "Frida" in the Little Theatre.
25	3:30 p.m. Noon	"Leadership Roles of Latin Women in Politics" in the Big 8 Room. Musical presentation: Trio Aztlán in the Union Courtyard.
26	5:30 p.m.	Latin American Cultural Night at the International Student Center. Admission is a main dish for the pot-luck supper. Grupo Folklorico Mixteco, Los Tres Caballeros and Puerto Rico Baila Folklorico will perform.
29	6:30 p.m.	HALO presentation: Latin American studies in Union 207.

IN OUR OPINION

Parking-lot cameras offer false security

If you think those security cameras in K-State's parking lots are going to protect you, think again.

Tuesday's attack in Lot B-3 and recent car break-ins are just the latest in a string of crimes perpetuated in the lots where students have to park, often at night, before an unsafe walk to a residence hall or job.

WHY WE CARE

A recent attack in the a parking lot has proven again that there is an urgent need for better lighting, police patrols and working cameras.

Although about 10 security cameras are installed in the lots, only two work. While the other eight sit unrepaired, the students' safety is at stake.

K-State police put the cameras there to deter crime, not to catch people. Obviously, they're not doing their job. Because they don't work, they can't be expected to help police catch suspects.

Security cameras need to be repaired immediately. Not only is it illogical not to have safety equipment in order, it gives people a false sense of security.

Student Body President Chris Hansen ran on a platform of improving campus security, and Student Governing Association has proposed that the City/University Tax Fund allocate money to improve K-State campus safety.

It's not only the responsibility of SGA to make the campus safer. It's the responsibility of the entire campus to make sure the Manhattan city commission sees fit to help K-State stay safe.

K-State shouldn't wait until campus crime gets worse to take action. Preventative measures should be taken now, and that includes everyone using common sense in risky situations.

Campus safety might not seem pressing to many students, but it's awfully important at midnight, in Lot B-3, in the dark.

There's more to Jerusalem than the stone-throwers and warring we witness when we watch the nightly news.

hope for peace

MY

Erin
MANSUR-SMITH

I have been watching the Learning Channel. It is a channel that sucks up my time like no other. I could sit and watch cheetahs chomping on zebras or hyenas fight to the death, narrated in Leonard Nimoy's creepy voice for hours.

After shark week, I feel revitalized and glad to be at the top of my food chain. Our world problems don't seem nearly as difficult as a monarch butterfly's migration to Mexico.

Lately, it hasn't been as much fun to flip to my favorite channel. They've been showing a special on the significance of Jerusalem for the three most prominent religions — Christianity, Judaism and Islam.

It was probably the programming brain child of some politically aware executive who thought, for once, the sexual predilections of the American mosquito were not as important as the history of the city that has been the center of the latest delay in the Middle East peace talks.

The use of some tunnels beneath Jerusalem have become a matter of debate between the Israeli government and the Palestinians. The government wants to open it for tourists but Palestinians argue it runs too close to a Muslim holy site.

The argument has caused riots in Jerusalem as well as the West Bank and Gaza where Palestinians have been blockaded for the last seven months. The subsequent clashes between Israeli troops and protesters have left far too many dead and stalled a peace process already floundering after the election of hardliner Benjamin Netanyahu.

I have been to Israel. I spent three weeks living in Tel Aviv this summer. I went to study Israeli theater. I ended up becoming a student of the people.

I have met the young people who, although no older than the freshmen I teach, carry automatic rifles and speak about the friends who were killed in the latest uprising.

I have met a man who says he is an Arab Palestinian Israeli and refuses to accept the opinion it is not possible to be all three.

I have seen the countryside with its buildings pockmarked by bullet holes, but is quieted now because of peace accords with Syria, Jordan and Lebanon. It is not what you see on television, with the rock throwers and the terrorists. What I saw was not all tension and hatred, but a hope for peace. I saw a willingness to listen to one another and perhaps, a desire to accept one another's political desires in time.

I have stood at the Wailing Wall. I have prayed for Israel's people to find peace and the governments to find wisdom.

When I watched the program about the city on the Learning Channel, saw the Wall again and the holy Mosque just behind it, I thought about the friends I had made while I was there and the people I had seen. I missed them.

I was also furious with them and the leaders they have chosen to represent their interests. I was sickened by what seemed like just another excuse to muddy the political waters, an excuse too many people seemed all too eager to grab onto.

There are negotiations going on in Washington this week between Netanyahu and Yasser Arafat. If I had the chance to go and talk to these men about peace in their country, the country I fell in love with, I would not go alone. I would bring with me the body of a young child who had been killed in Jerusalem or on the West Bank.

I would lay that child in front of the two leaders, and I would propose a deal: If they could tell me if the child had been a Palestinian or an Israeli, they could continue to fight with one another about tunnels.

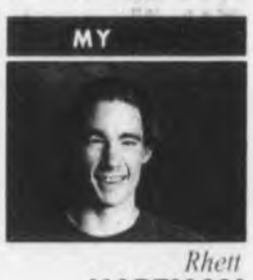
If these great men could tell me, just by looking at the dead child's face whether or not it had been a Muslim, a Jew, a Christian or an atheist, then I would not stop them.

I would not protest their policies or demand that either my government or the United Nations pursue any sanctions against them for their actions toward one another.

If either one of them had reached the point when they could identify their ideological and philosophical differences on the faces of their dead children, then they will have reached the moment when no amount of talking or negotiations will do any good.

They could afford the luxury of war, because they will have reached the moment when war was all their people would ever know. No one could help them, not even the God they say bequeathed them each the same land.

Perhaps I do not understand the deeper ramifications of this battle. Perhaps these tunnels hold a higher significance than I realize. Perhaps because I only spent three weeks there, I could never understand how Palestinians and Israelis could love the land so much but each other so little they would essentially kill their children for it.



Perhaps I simply watch too much television.

What do you want?

The answer can help you make better choices in your life

MY

Rhett
HARTMAN

Slowly fall changes into winter, as the ivy on the side of Dickens Hall is colorfully reminding us. Nature is not alone in change, because I see and feel much of it around my friends and others.

My body seemed to be caught off guard with the change in season, as right now I'm suffering through waking up every morning with what feels like a sand dune in my throat. Yet my nonphysical life is going through just as much change.

At the beginning of school, I knew little more about my future than the two more years of school I was in for, and then I would have a degree. Then what?

I did not have a course for post-graduation life. I didn't even have a boat. A job? An MBA? I had a lot of options, but no decisions.

Now, I have begun to see what is possible for the future. These ideas, meshed with who I am, have helped me sort out the promise from the garbage.

I now see the future as a slightly more stable place. I have been able to lay a framework through my experiences that tries to answer my deep-down questions about what I want.

I have answered, "What is the vision of my future? What do I want to do with school, relationships, family, self and everything?"

Throughout my life I have had many visions or plans for my future, but all too often life showed me something different. The art of turning my dreams into reality was beyond my ability, I guess. Too long a vision, too little framework.

Many of my friends are also finding or leaving their vision of the future. Which ones have finally found their focus in life? Which know for sure they want a change in theirs?

What if people are thinking about changing their majors? How simple a decision is this? Are these people genuinely dissatisfied with their major, or are they just having a bad week?

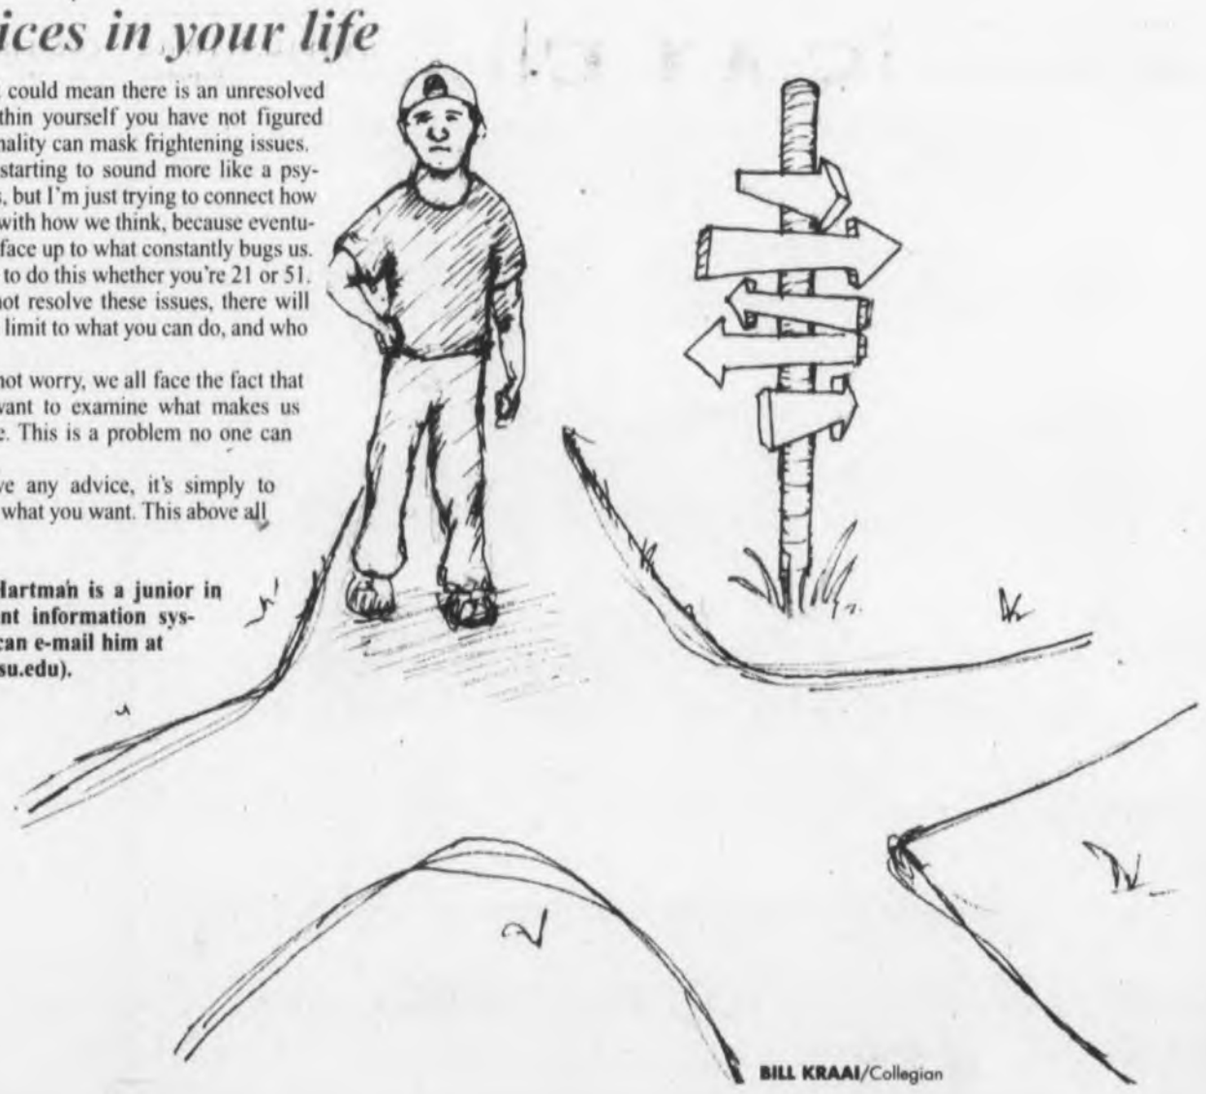
These people must figure out why they picked their major in the first place. They need to understand why their wants and priorities in life have changed — it is from this that a major change originates.

All throughout my life I have tried to find the exceptions to the rules, which made it hard to make any choices. But in the process I learned about myself, and here is where people need to look when their lives are out-of-focus.

Basically, people spend their lives making decisions in an attempt to be people they wish they could be. Then, people realized where they went wrong, and either accepted or ran away from what they had learned.

Let's take something most of us have, a phobia. Snakes, spiders and bugs, oh my! All of these creatures can be objects of an irrational fear. People know they shouldn't feel a certain way, but they do anyway. Does this make any sense?

Of course not. But that doesn't stop people from acting that way. The rationale is, if it feels better to run away from the problems, why attempt to fix what's not broken?



If you do not know the reasons behind your behavior, it could mean there is an unresolved conflict within yourself you have not figured out. Irrationality can mask frightening issues.

This is starting to sound more like a psychoanalysis, but I'm just trying to connect how we behave with how we think, because eventually, we all face up to what constantly bugs us. You'll have to do this whether you're 21 or 51. If you do not resolve these issues, there will always be a limit to what you can do, and who you are.

But do not worry, we all face the fact that we don't want to examine what makes us weak inside. This is a problem no one can escape.

If I have any advice, it's simply to understand what you want. This above all else.

Speaker's language was not crude

Editor,

This is in reference to the article in the Collegian regarding Jane Elliott's speech at Forum Hall. Though in general, the report seemed unbiased to us, we object to Elliott's language referred to as crude. What was crude about a woman who spoke her mind? What was crude about someone who had the guts to take on the entire white establishment?

And this regardless of threats to her very life. Or was it considered crude because it was a white woman attacking her own people? If anything we need more women of Elliott's kind to din some sense into this lackadaisical world and wake them up from their slumber.

Stewart's sports column was unfair in saying K-State will lose to Nebraska

Editor,

I am writing regarding school spirit. I was reading a column in Tuesday's Collegian regarding our battle with Nebraska.

All people are entitled to their opinion, but whatever happened to being true to your school?

It is totally unfair to disregard this year's Wildcat football team.

These guys have been working very hard since last spring's season, and they don't really need someone telling them they are inferior and do not need to show up.

> "These guys have been working very hard since last spring's season, and they don't really need someone telling them they are inferior and do not need to show up."
> • MICHAEL JOHNSON
> JUNIOR IN ELECTRONIC JOURALISM

Besides I do not think this year's team has missed a beat thus far. This year's team routed Cincy when last year's team needed an act from God, a.k.a. Kevin Lockett.

Anyway, when the Cats swallow the Huskers whole I expect Todd Stewart to face up and admit how wrong he was.

A second concern of mine is the flood of Jayhawk items seen on campus.

I understand there are graduate students on campus from various colleges who are showing their allegiance to their past school. However, what is everyone else's excuse?

I was born in Norman, Okla.

My father is a graduate of OU, heck, I was a Sooner fan until I decided to come to K-State.

I am now a Wildcat not a Sooner, and I am proud to show it.

You didn't wear any rival's letter jacket when you were in high school, so why do it now?

Every last one of you undergrads who wear KU clothing and any other rival school for that matter, you are devoid of any spirit and allegiance, traitors!

Column based on limited experience

Editor,

It is with sincere regret that I read "No false prophets" in our paper.

The troubled woman who wrote this is very ignorant about Christ and religion in general to form an opinion of an entire faith based upon her limited experience with some person who claimed to be a member of that religion.

Just because I dislike President Clinton does not mean I dislike politics or will leave the Democratic Party.

Only education can prevent a reoccurrence of a similar article being printed.

We must maintain high standards; this is something I could have found in The National Enquirer or in a 1920 German anti-semitic newspaper.

It is also obvious that the troubled woman knows nothing at all about Eastern Religion, for I have not found a Buddhist or a Hindu yet who would intentionally cast dispersions in another man's pond.

I appeal to the editor to talk with this woman because she must have much built-up anger, or she just delights in insulting others.

I would also appreciate a response, so that I may assume someone observed my concern.

In the future, I hope there is more supervision and sensitivity before a column is printed.

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Kevyn Jacobs on a good column in the Sept. 30 edition of the Collegian when he wrote about Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.
